Case Notes

Nature of Easement — When Deprivation of Property Occurs: A landowner brought an action to prevent the state from opening a fishing access site and from paving a road to the site, based on a claimed fee title to the roadway. The District Court granted the state a summary judgment as a matter of law. The Supreme Court found the landowner's interest was an ordinary easement. The words "private road" did not clearly indicate intent to create in him an "exclusive" easement. The state's use of the road cannot be declared inconsistent with the landowner's on the basis of speculation. Furthermore, under various statutory provisions, the state obtained its land lawfully. The plaintiff had not yet been deprived of his property interest. Any damages remained speculative at the time of the decision. The summary judgment was accordingly affirmed. Titeca v. St., 194 M 209, 634 P2d 1156, 38 St. Rep. 1533 (1981).

Bailments: When state, as bailee of road roller given it by federal government, was in lawful possession, it was lawfully entitled to that possession as against anyone with no better right. It could vindicate that possession accordingly and to that end maintain an action in claim and delivery when there was an unauthorized sale to third person by State Park Commission (now Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks) employee purporting to act for state. State ex rel. Olsen v. Sundling, 128 M 596, 281 P2d 499 (1955).

Indian Tribes as Appropriate Public Agency Under Federal Land and Water Conservation Fund Act: An Indian tribe located within the territorial boundaries of the State of Montana which exercises the powers of local self-government is an "appropriate public agency" to be eligible to receive funds for projects under the federal Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965, 16 U.S.C. § 460*l*, et seq. 37 A.G. Recreational Use of Streams

Part Compiler's Comments

Case Law: The rights and liabilities of landowners and the public regarding recreational use of streams were the subject of extensive discussion and holdings in Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Hildreth, 211 M 29, 684 P2d 1088, 41 St. Rep. 1192 (1984), relating to the Beaverhead River, and Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984), relating to the Dearborn River. This part 3 is the legislative reaction to those two cases and the questions and problems they discuss.

2013 Amendment: Chapter 235 in definition of commission substituted "fish and wildlife commission" for "fish, wildlife, and parks commission". Amendment effective July 1, 2013.

Saving Clause: Section 40, Ch. 235, L. 2013, was a saving clause.

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

1991 Name Change: Section 2, Ch. 28, L. 1991, directed the Code Commissioner to change the name of the Fish and Game Commission to the Fish, Wildlife, and Parks Commission wherever the name appears in the MCA. Accordingly, the name was changed in this section as directed.

Composite Section: Chapter 429 and Ch. 556, L. 1985, each contained very similar provisions restricting public recreational use of diverted waters. Composite sections were prepared by the Code Commissioner. The provisions of Ch. 429 were merged with this section and 23-2-302, and language contained in Ch. 429 but not contained in Ch. 556 was added to this section and 23-2-302. Specifically, in (6)(b) after "water system", the phrase from Ch. 429 "excluding the lake, stream, or reservoir from which the system obtains water" was inserted because Ch. 429 was more restrictive on this point. The intent of Ch. 429 is preserved in (6) of this section and 23-2-302(2). Chapter 429, L. 1985, provided: "Recreational use of diverted surface waters prohibited. The right of the public to make recreational use of surface waters does not include the right to make recreational use of the following surface waters without permission or contractual arrangement with the owner:

(1) irrigation and drainage canals and ditches;

(2) manmade flood control channels;

(3) municipal, industrial, and domestic water systems, excluding the lakes, streams, and reservoirs from which the systems obtain water;

(4) hydroelectric power inlet and discharge facilities; or

(5) any other waters while they are diverted away from a natural water body for beneficial use pursuant to Title 85, chapter 2, part 2 or 3, except for impoundments or diverted waters to which the owner has provided public access."

2015 Amendment: Chapter 327 in (2)(d) after "hunting" deleted "except by long bow or shotgun when specifically authorized by the commission"; substituted (2)(e), (2)(f), and (2)(g) concerning overnight camping and permanent or seasonal objects for former (2)(e) and (2)(f) that read: "(e) overnight camping within sight of any occupied dwelling or within 500 yards of any occupied dwelling, whichever is less;

(f) the placement or creation of any permanent duck blind, boat moorage, or any seasonal or other objects within sight of or within 500 yards of an occupied dwelling, whichever is less"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 27, 2015.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 327, L. 2015, provided: "WHEREAS, in 1985, in response to court decisions on stream access, the Legislature enacted laws governing the recreational use of streams; and

WHEREAS, in 1987 the Montana Supreme Court declared unconstitutional certain provisions of the laws governing the recreational use of streams in the case of Galt v. St. No. 86-178; and

WHEREAS, these unconstitutional provisions remain as part of the Montana Code Annotated; and

WHEREAS, amendments to the law are necessary to remove these unconstitutional provisions."

Severability: Section 3, Ch. 327, L. 2015, was a severability clause.

Composite Section: Chapter 429 and Ch. 556, L. 1985, each contained very similar provisions restricting public recreational use of diverted waters. Composite sections were prepared by the Code Commissioner. The provisions of Ch. 429 were merged with this section and 23-2-301, and language contained in Ch. 429 but not contained in Ch. 556 was added to this section and 23-2-301. Specifically, in (2) in the lead-in, after "without permission", the word "of" was deleted and the phrase "or contractual arrangement with" was inserted, and at the end of (2)(c), after "3", the phrase "except for impoundments or diverted waters to which the owner has provided public access" was inserted. These phrases from Ch. 429 were inserted because Ch. 429 was more broad on the first point and more restrictive on the second point than was Ch. 556. The intent of Ch. 429 is preserved in (2) of this section and 23-2-301(6). Chapter 429, L. 1985, provided: "Recreational use of diverted surface waters prohibited. The right of the public to make recreational use of surface waters does not include the right to make recreational use of the following surface waters without permission or contractual arrangement with the owner:

(1) irrigation and drainage canals and ditches;

(2) manmade flood control channels;

(5) any other waters while they are diverted away from a natural water body for beneficial use pursuant to Title 85, chapter 2, part 2 or 3, except for impoundments or diverted waters to which the owner has provided public access."

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 556, L. 1985, provided: "A statement of intent is required for House Bill 265 [Ch. 556, L. 1985] because section 2(5) [23-2-302(5)] directs the fish and game commission [now fish, wildlife, and parks commission] to adopt rules governing recreational use of surface waters.

In its implementation of this bill, the long-range goal of the commission must be to preserve, protect, and enhance the surface waters of this state while facilitating the public's exercise of its recreational rights on surface waters. The commission shall strive to permit broad exercise of public rights, while protecting the water resource and its ecosystem. In adopting the procedural rules required by section 2 [23-2-302(5)], the commission shall emphasize that in close cases the decision must be to protect the environment by restricting or continuing to restrict recreational use, since it is easier to prevent environmental degradation than it is to repair it.

In developing the rules implementing House Bill 265 [Ch. 556, L. 1985], the commission shall make every effort to make the process uncomplicated and clear. As provided in subsection (5)(b) [23-2-302(5)(b)], the commission must issue written findings and an order whenever a request is made for restrictions on recreational use of a surface water or for the lifting of previously imposed limitations on recreational use of a surface water. The commission may adopt rules providing for summary dismissal of requests when a substantially similar request has been received and acted upon within a brief time prior to the second or subsequent requests if, during the time period since the first request, it is unlikely that there has been a change in the situation upon which the commission based its earlier decision.

In developing the rules establishing criteria for determination upon a request made under subsections (5)(a) [23-2-302(5)(a)] or (5)(b) [23-2-302(5)(b)], the commission shall require that each of the following factors that is relevant to the decision must be considered in the determination:

(a) whether public use is damaging the banks and land adjacent to the water body;

(b) whether public use is damaging the property of landowners underlying or adjacent to the water body;

(c) whether public use is adversely affecting wildlife or birds;

(d) whether public use is disrupting or altering natural areas or biotic communities;

(e) whether public use is causing degradation of the water quality of the water body; and

(f) any other factors relevant to the preservation of the water body in its natural state.

In making its decision after a request has been made for restrictions of recreational use, the commission may impose any reasonable limitation on the recreational use of surface waters including complete prohibition of a particular type of recreation, prohibition of a particular type of recreation in certain specified areas, such as within a specified distance of a residence or other structure, or in an appropriate case, prohibition of all recreation. The commission shall prohibit all recreation on private impoundments that have been licensed for a private use.

The commission shall protect the safety of the public by prohibiting hunting within a specified distance of occupied dwellings."

Case Notes

District Court in Error When Concluding That Mitchell Slough Was Not Natural Water Body: The District Court's use of the dictionary definition of "natural" as pristine and unaffected by humans in relation to the stream access laws under Title 23, chapter 2, part 3, leads to an absurd result that prohibits the very public recreational access it was designed to allow. The proper conclusion is that the return flows that find their way to and join the flow in the Mitchell Slough's historic channel are to be appropriately analyzed as freed, appropriative waters. Bitterroot River Protective Assoc., Inc. v. Bitterroot Conserv. Dist., 2008 MT 377, 346 M 507, 198 P3d 219 (2008).

Public Recreational Use Rights Statute — Constitutionality: Following Curran and Hildreth decisions, which held that the public trust doctrine provides the public with a constitutional right to use the bed and banks of navigable streams up to the high-water mark despite a landowner's fee title, the Legislature enacted a statute providing public recreational use of streams. Plaintiff filed suit requesting the court to declare the recreational use statute an unconstitutional taking of private property without just compensation. Plaintiff then appealed after the trial court upheld the statute's constitutionality and awarded the state summary judgment. The Supreme Court ruled unconstitutional 23-2-302(2)(d), (2)(e), and (2)(f), which provided the public a right to hunt big game, build duck blinds and boat moorages, and camp overnight so long as not within sight of an occupied dwelling or within 500 yards of an occupied dwelling, whichever is less. The court further held as unconstitutional 23-2-311(3)(e), which required a landowner to pay costs of constructing a portage route around artificial barriers. The public has a right of use of the bed and banks up to the high-water mark but only such use as is necessary to utilization of the water itself. Any use of the bed and banks must be of minimal impact. Galt v. St., 225 M 142, 731 P2d 912, 44 St. Rep. 103 (1987), followed in Bitterroot River Protective Assoc., Inc. v. Bitterroot Conserv. Dist., 2008 MT 377, 346 M 507, 198 P3d 219 (2008). See also Pub. Lands Access Ass'n, Inc. v. Madison County Bd. of Comm'rs, 2014 MT 10, 373 Mont. 277, 321 P.3d 38.

Attorney General's Opinions

Access to Rivers and Streams Via County Road Right-of-Way and Bridges: Given that the public has the right to use public highways in any manner and for any purpose consistent with or reasonably incidental to public travel, this right includes the use of public rights-of-way created by county roads to gain access to rivers and streams. Using a county road right-of-way as an access point to a river or stream right-of-way is consistent with and reasonably incidental to the public's right to travel on county roads. Further, a bridge and its abutments, as part of a public highway, offer the same access to rivers and streams for recreational use as the highway to which they are attached. However, the public's right of access is not unlimited and is subject to the following limitations: (1) the recreating public must stay within the county road and bridge right-of-way, which is assumed to be 60 feet unless otherwise stated by petition or dedication; (2) access may be limited by the reasonable exercise of a governing body's police power to control the use of roads for purposes such as safety and parking; and (3) use of a public highway may be limited by the manner in which it was created, such as a road created by prescriptive easement, which is limited both in size and usage to the original use during the prescriptive period and may include access for hunting, fishing, and recreation. 48 A.G. Op. 13 (2000).

Right to Trap on Streams Not Governed by Stream Access Law: The right to trap fur-bearing animals between the ordinary high-water marks of a stream is not governed by Title 23, ch. 2, part 3, but rather is dependent upon whether the trapper has license, invitation, or privilege to enter or remain upon land and whether the trapper has secured a license to trap. 41 A.G. Case Notes

Authority of Game Warden to Approach Boat to Promote Safety — Particularized Suspicion Unnecessary: Initially concerned for the safety of the occupants of a seemingly unoccupied watercraft, a game warden looked into the live well of Boyer's boat and in the process found unlawfully killed game fish. Boyer contended that the warden had initiated an investigatory stop without the requisite particularized suspicion of wrongdoing, as required in 46-5-401, and that the evidence was therefore unlawfully seized. The Supreme Court disagreed. The warden was acting within his express authority to enforce outdoor recreation laws, including the safety of persons and property connected with the use of watercraft, and thus the warden's approach of Boyer's boat was lawful. St. v. Boyer, 2002 MT 33, 308 M 276, 42 P3d 771 (2002).

No Duty for State to Warn of Hazards on Rivers: Drugge brought an action against the state on behalf of the estate of a relative who died in a boating accident. The Supreme Court upheld the dismissal of the suit, ruling that the constitutional vesting to the state of ownership of the waters within the state boundaries did not create a duty based on liability or other tort law for the state to warn of hazards on rivers. Drugge v. St., 254 M 292, 837 P2d 405, 49 St. Rep. 798 (1992).

Code Commissioner Correction: The Code Commissioner has substituted the department of justice for the division of motor vehicles in this section, because sec. 14, Ch. 503, L. 1985, repealed 2-15-2002, which had statutorily created the division, and sec. 1, Ch. 503 amended Title 61, Motor Vehicles, to substitute "department" for "division" throughout that title. The apparent intent was to eliminate the statutory status of the division, and therefore the Code Commissioner has changed statutory references accordingly (see 1-11-101(2)(g)).

(b) residence of the owner, by town or county;
(c) business or home address of the owner;
(d) name and address of any lienholder;
(e) amount due under any contract or lien;
(f) name of the manufacturer;
(g) model number or name;

(h) identification number;
(i) name and address of the dealer or other person from whom acquired, if known; and
(j) other information that the department of justice may require"; deleted former (3) through (8) that read: "(3) The application is to be accompanied by documentation of ownership, such as an invoice, a bill of sale, a foreign title, an official certificate of boat number, a fee in lieu of tax receipt, or a certificate of ownership of a trailer purchased with the motorboat or sailboat. An applicant who fails to provide proof of ownership shall provide a certified statement describing how the motorboat or sailboat 12 feet in length or longer was acquired, from whom acquired, if known, and other information requested by the department of justice.

(4) If a certificate of ownership has previously been issued under the provisions of this part, the application for a new certificate must be accompanied by the immediately previous certificate. This subsection does not apply to motorboats or sailboats 12 feet in length or longer that are purchased as new and unused vessels or that were operated when the provisions of this part were not in force and effect.

(5) A motorboat or sailboat 12 feet in length or longer that does not have a manufacturer's or other identifying number on the motorboat or sailboat must be assigned an identification number by the department. A fee of $1 must be paid to the department for an assignment of number.

(6) Upon completion of the application, the county treasurer shall issue to the applicant two copies of the certificate of number application, one of which must be marked "file copy". The treasurer shall forward one copy and the original application for a certificate of ownership to the department of justice, which shall enter the information contained in the application upon the corresponding records of its office and shall furnish the applicant a certificate of ownership containing that information in the application considered necessary by the department and a permanent boat number. The certificate of ownership need not be renewed annually and is valid as long as the person holding it owns the vessel.

(7) The owner shall at all times retain possession of the certificate of ownership, except when it is being transmitted to and from the department of justice for endorsement or cancellation.

(8) Upon application for a certificate of ownership, a fee of $5 must be paid to the county treasurer, which must be forwarded by the county treasurer to the department of justice and deposited in the general fund"; in (3) near middle after "certificate of" substituted "title" for "ownership"; deleted former (10) through (20) that read: "(10) The department of justice may not file a voluntary security interest or lien unless it is accompanied by or specified in the application for a certificate of ownership of the boat encumbered. If the approved lien notice is transmitted to the department of justice, the security agreement or other lien instrument that creates the security interest must be retained by the secured party. A copy of the security agreement is sufficient as a lien notice if it contains the name and address of the debtor and the secured party, the complete boat description, the amount of the lien, and the signature of the debtor. The department of justice shall file voluntary security interests and liens by entering the name and address of the secured party upon the face of the certificate of ownership. Involuntary liens must be filed against the record of the boat encumbered. The department of justice shall mail a statement certifying the filing of a security interest or lien to the secured party. The department of justice shall mail the certificate of ownership to the owner at the address given on the certificate; however, if the transfer of ownership and filing of the security interest are paid for by a creditor or secured party, the department of justice shall return the certificate of ownership to the county treasurer of the county in which the boat is to be registered. The owner of a boat is the person entitled to operate and possess the boat.

(11) A security interest in a boat held as inventory by a dealer must be perfected in accordance with Title 30, chapter 9A.

(12) Whenever a security interest or lien is filed against a boat that is subject to two security interests previously perfected under this section, the department of justice shall endorse on the face of the certificate of ownership: "NOTICE. This boat is subject to additional security interest on file with the Department of Justice." No other information regarding the additional security interests need be endorsed on the certificate.

(13) Satisfactions or statements of release filed with the department of justice under this part must be retained for a period of 8 years after receipt, after which they may be destroyed.

(14) Except as provided in subsection (15), a voluntary security interest or lien is perfected on the date the lien notice is delivered to the county treasurer. On that date, the county treasurer shall issue to the secured party a receipt evidencing the perfection. Perfection under this section constitutes constructive notice to subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers, from the date of delivery of the lien notice to the county treasurer, of the existence of the security interest.

(15) Voluntary security interests or lien filings that do not require transfer of ownership are perfected on the date the lien notice and the certificate of ownership or manufacturer's statement of origin are received by the department of justice. On that date, the department of justice shall issue to the secured party a receipt evidencing the perfection. Perfection under this subsection constitutes constructive notice to subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers, from the date the lien notice is delivered to the department of justice, of the existence of the security interest.

(16) Upon default under a chattel mortgage or conditional sales contract covering a boat, the mortgagee or vendor has the same remedies as in the case of other personal property. In case of attachment of a boat, all the provisions of 27-18-413, 27-18-414, and 27-18-804 are applicable, except that deposits must be made with the department of justice.

(17) A conditional sales vendor or chattel mortgagee or assignee who fails to file a satisfaction of a chattel mortgage, assignment, or conditional sales contract within 15 days after receiving final payment is required to pay the department of justice the sum of $1 for each day that the person fails to file the satisfaction.

(18) Upon receipt of notice of any involuntary liens or attachments against the record of any boat registered in this state, the department of justice shall within 24 hours mail to the owner, conditional sales vendor, mortgagee, or their assignee a notice showing the name and address of the lien claimant, the amount of the lien, the date of execution of the lien, and, in the case of attachment, the full title of the court, the action, and the name of the attorney for the plaintiff or the name of the attaching creditor, or both.

(19) It is not necessary to refile with the department of justice any instruments on file in the office of the county clerk and recorder on October 1, 1989.

(20) A fee of $4 must be paid to the department of justice to file any security interest or other lien against a boat. The $4 fee must cover the cost of filing a satisfaction or release of the security interest and the cost of entering the satisfaction or release on the records of the department of justice and deleting the endorsement of the security interest from the face of the certificate of ownership. A fee of $4 must be paid to the department of justice for issuing a certified copy of a certificate of ownership subject to a security interest or other lien on file with the department of justice or for filing an assignment of any security interest or other lien on file with the department of justice. All fees provided for in this section must be paid to the county treasurer for deposit in the state general fund in accordance with 15-1-504"; and made minor changes in style. 1995 Amendment: Chapter 418 in (2) substituted "department of environmental quality" for "department of health and environmental sciences"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 1995.

1991 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 728, L. 1991, provided: "(1) A statement of intent is required for this bill because in [section 9] [23-2-522] the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] is authorized to adopt rules to provide for the installation, location, and operation of vessel pumpout stations. The legislature intends that those rules regulate facilities to transfer and dispose of sewage from marine sanitation devices, floating restrooms, and onshore toilets, all of which must be operated in a manner to prevent the discharge of sewage into the waters of the state and maintained in good working order and regularly cleaned. The rules may require a vessel pumpout facility to be equipped with a meter to measure use of the facility.

(2) A statement of intent is further required because 23-2-529 requires the fish and game commission [now fish, wildlife, and parks commission] to adopt rules regarding the proper observation and safe towing of persons on water skis or similar devices. It is intended that the commission's determination of the necessity for rules be based on the density of use of a body of water. Where applicable, the rules should address:

(a) the proper and continuous observation of the person being towed; and

(b) display of a flag when the person being towed falls into the water, including the size, color, condition, and mounting of the flag and the length of time the flag should be displayed.

(3) It is the intent of the legislature that the department of fish, wildlife, and parks evaluate and report to the 53rd legislature on the effect of 23-2-523(9)."

Case Notes

Failure to Instruct Jury on Greater Duty of Care in Situation of Greater Danger — Reversible Error: The Schuffs were injured while riding in Jackson's boat when Jackson failed to negotiate a submerged rock formation that he knew was there. Jackson admitted error during operation of the boat but maintained that his conduct nevertheless conformed to that of an ordinary prudent boater under the same or similar circumstances. The jury found that Jackson was not negligent, and the Schuffs appealed. The Supreme Court agreed. The fact that Jackson admitted error did not establish negligence per se. Evidence was sufficient for the jury to find that Jackson was operating the boat in a manner consistent with other ordinarily prudent boaters under the same circumstances. Further, the Schuffs failed to timely object to Jackson's interjection of the defenses of unavoidable accident and assumption of risk, so motion for a new trial was properly denied on those grounds. However, the Supreme Court found that the jury instructions did not include information regarding the possible greater duty of care in situations in which the danger is known to be greater or on Jackson's statutory duty not to operate the boat at a speed greater than would permit stopping the boat within an assured clear distance. Failure to properly instruct the jury was prejudicial error, so the case was remanded for a new trial. Schuff v. Jackson, 2002 MT 215, 311 M 312, 55 P3d 387 (2002), followed in Dale v. Three Rivers Tel. Co-ops, Inc., 2004 MT 74, 320 M 401, 87 P3d 489 (2004). On remand of Schuff v. Jackson, the jury in a new trial again found that Jackson did not violate 23-2-523 by failing to operate his boat in a reasonable and prudent manner, and again Schuff appealed. However, the Supreme Court affirmed because even though Schuff was given a full opportunity to make her case, she was unable to muster the necessary evidence to overcome the defense. The jury was properly instructed on Jackson's duty of care, and the trial court did not err in allowing Jackson's expert witnesses to testify regarding the safest way to navigate the area in question. Schuff v. Jackson, 2008 MT 81, 342 M 156, 179 P3d 1169 (2008).

Travel in and Through County in Private Conveyance Adequate to Establish Venue — Boat as Private Conveyance: Diesen's boat collided with Hallock's boat in Fort Peck Lake, in either Valley County or Garfield County. Diesen was convicted in Valley County Justice's Court of boating under the influence, and he appealed. In District Court, Diesen moved for dismissal, alleging that the venue was improper because the state had failed to prove that any element of the offense had occurred in Valley County. The District Court applied 46-3-114 in concluding that Diesen's boat was a private conveyance and held that because the state proved beyond a reasonable doubt that the boat traveled in and through Valley County on its way to Fort Peck Marina, the Valley County Justice's Court was an appropriate venue. The Supreme Court affirmed denial of Diesen's motion to dismiss. St. v. Diesen, 2000 MT 1, 297 M 459, 992 P2d 1287, 57 St. Rep. 1 (2000).

The department shall, when adopting rules, consult with law enforcement agencies, organizations representing diving interests, and search and rescue organizations within the state in order for these organizations and agencies to assist with adopting rules that will be appropriate for their activities and duties. It is intended that the commission may, after a public hearing, establish areas where, because of diver safety or water traffic, underwater diving is not allowed."

Noise Limitation Codification: Subsection (3) of this section was enacted by sec. 2, Ch. 694, L. 1983, without a codification instruction. The subsection was codified in this section for convenience, and to avoid any apparent change in meaning, the Code Commissioner has added language to 23-2-507 excepting the subsection from the penalty provision. Near the beginning of the subsection, a reference to "this part" was changed to "45-8-101 and 45-8-111" by the Code Commissioner to reflect the apparent intent to tie the noise limitation to disorderly conduct and public nuisance statutes. Amendment effective April 29, 1991.

1991 Name Change: Section 2, Ch. 28, L. 1991, directed the Code Commissioner to change the name of the Fish and Game Commission to the Fish, Wildlife, and Parks Commission wherever the name appears in the MCA. Accordingly, the name was changed in this section as directed.

1991 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 728, L. 1991, provided: "(1) A statement of intent is required for this bill because in [section 9] [23-2-522] the department of health and environmental sciences [now department of public health and human services] is authorized to adopt rules to provide for the installation, location, and operation of vessel pumpout stations. The legislature intends that those rules regulate facilities to transfer and dispose of sewage from marine sanitation devices, floating restrooms, and onshore toilets, all of which must be operated in a manner to prevent the discharge of sewage into the waters of the state and maintained in good working order and regularly cleaned. The rules may require a vessel pumpout facility to be equipped with a meter to measure use of the facility.

(2) A statement of intent is further required because 23-2-529 requires the fish and game commission [now fish, wildlife, and parks commission] to adopt rules regarding the proper observation and safe towing of persons on water skis or similar devices. It is intended that the commission's determination of the necessity for rules be based on the density of use of a body of water. Where applicable, the rules should address:

(a) the proper and continuous observation of the person being towed; and

(b) display of a flag when the person being towed falls into the water, including the size, color, condition, and mounting of the flag and the length of time the flag should be displayed.

(3) It is the intent of the legislature that the department of fish, wildlife, and parks evaluate and report to the 53rd legislature on the effect of 23-2-523(9)."

WHEREAS, in other states, conflicts between recreational users of waters have escalated to the point of violence and even deaths of recreationists; and

WHEREAS, the use of personal watercraft has grown immensely in Montana, and the irresponsible use of personal watercraft conflicts with the ability of lakeshore cabin owners and homeowners to enjoy their pursuit of happiness through peaceful relaxation; and

WHEREAS, it is in the interests of public health, safety, welfare, and protection of property that measures be taken in Montana to reduce potential conflicts between recreational users of Montana waters before this state experiences similar problems."

Part 6
Snowmobiles

Part Administrative Rules

ARM 12.6.601 and 12.6.602 Snowmobile regulations.

Part Case Notes

Driving Snowmobile Under Influence — Construction With Other Law — Snowmobile Law Penalty Alone Applies: In enacting this part, the Legislature duplicated the motor vehicle code concerns for regulation of snowmobiles upon streets, roads, and highways with respect to registration and licensing, accidents, enforcement, unlawful operation, penalties, and disposition of fines and forfeitures and provided a statutory scheme that supplants the motor vehicle code regarding snowmobiles. The Legislature clearly intended to impose a civil penalty for operating a snowmobile while under the influence in violation of 23-2-632, but the civil label of the penalty is not alone dispositive. Review of the statutory scheme and attendant penalties leads the court to conclude that the penalties in 23-2-642(2) and (3) are punitive in nature and constitute criminal penalties. Therefore, defendant could not be charged under 61-8-401, the law relating to driving a motor vehicle under the influence, because to hold otherwise would allow conflicting criminal penalties. Defendant could only be charged under 23-2-632. St. v. Delap, 237 M 346, 772 P2d 1268, 46 St. Rep. 856 (1989).

Amendment effective October 1, 2015.

2005 Amendment: Chapter 542 in introductory clause deleted reference to 23-2-626. Amendment effective January 1, 2006.

Applicability: Section 2, Ch. 325, L. 2005, amended sec. 50, Ch. 592, L. 2003, to read: "Section 50. Applicability. [This act] applies to:

(1) registration, reregistration, fees, and taxes on vehicles and vessels registered on or after January 1, 2004;

(2) vehicle counts for the purposes of 15-1-122(4), regardless of whether a vehicle was registered or reregistered prior to January 1, 2004."

Retroactive Applicability: Section 4, Ch. 325, L. 2005, provided: "(1) [Section 2] [not codified] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to the registration, reregistration, fees, and taxes on vehicles and vessels registered on or after January 1, 2004.

(2) [Section 2] [not codified] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to vehicle counts made after January 1, 2004."

2003 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 477 in introductory clause after "23-2-601" inserted "23-2-602, 23-2-611, 23-2-614 through 23-2-619, 23-2-621, 23-2-622, 23-2-626, 23-2-631 through 23-2-635, and 23-2-641"; substituted certificate of title for certificate of ownership as defined term; in definition of owner near middle after "certificate of" substituted "title" for "ownership"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 2004.

Applicability: Section 85(1), Ch. 477, L. 2003, provided that this section applies to motor vehicle certificates of title and registrations on or after January 1, 2004.

Section 50, Ch. 592, L. 2003, provided: "[This act] applies to vehicles and vessels registered on or after January 1, 2004."

Code Commissioner Correction: The Code Commissioner has substituted the department of justice for the division of motor vehicles in this section, because sec. 14, Ch. 503, L. 1985, repealed 2-15-2002, which had statutorily created the division, and sec. 1, Ch. 503 amended Title 61, Motor Vehicles, to substitute "department" for "division" throughout that title. The apparent intent was to eliminate the statutory status of the division, and therefore the Code Commissioner has changed statutory references accordingly (see 1-11-101(2)(g)).

23-2-602. Report of stolen and recovered snowmobiles.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 351 substituted present language regarding report of stolen and recovered snowmobiles in the same manner as motor vehicles for former section that read: "The sheriff of every county of the state and the chief of police or commissioner of police of every city shall make an immediate report to the department of justice of all snowmobiles reported to him as stolen or recovered, upon forms provided by the department of justice. Upon receipt of such information, the department of justice shall file the same in an index to be known as the "stolen and recovered snowmobile index". The department of justice shall file reports of stolen and recovered snowmobiles reported to it from other states. Once a month the department of justice shall prepare a list of all snowmobiles stolen or recovered during the previous month and forward a copy of the same to every sheriff and all police departments in cities of the first, second, and third class. Such list shall also be forwarded to the secretary of state or other proper official in each state of the United States. Before a certificate of ownership may be issued under 23-2-601 through 23-2-644, the motor and serial number on the snowmobile for which such certificate is to be issued shall be checked against the stolen and recovered snowmobile index." Amendment effective April 16, 1993.

Code Commissioner Correction: The Code Commissioner has substituted the department of justice for the division of motor vehicles in this section, because sec. 14, Ch. 503, L. 1985, repealed 2-15-2002, which had statutorily created the division, and sec. 1, Ch. 503 amended Title 61, Motor Vehicles, to substitute "department" for "division" throughout that title. The apparent intent was to eliminate the statutory status of the division, and therefore the Code Commissioner has changed statutory references accordingly (see 1-11-101(2)(g)).

23-2-611. Certificate of title.

Compiler's Comments

2003 Amendment: Chapter 477 in (1) in first sentence and second sentence after "certificate of" substituted "title" for "ownership"; in (2) substituted "Unless expressly exempted, the provisions of Title 61, chapter 3, parts 1 and 2, apply to snowmobiles" for former language that read: "(2) The owner of a snowmobile shall apply for a certificate of ownership with the county treasurer of the county in which the owner resides, upon forms to be furnished for this purpose. The forms must require the following information:

(a) the name of the owner;

(b) the residence of the owner, by town and county;

(c) the business or home mailing address of the owner;

(d) the name and address of any lienholder;

(e) the amount due under any contract or lien;

(f) the name of the manufacturer;

(g) the model number or name;

(h) the identification number; and

(i) the name and address of the dealer or other person from whom acquired"; deleted former (3) through (19) that read: "(3) The application must be accompanied by documentation of ownership, such as an invoice, notarized bill of sale from the immediately previous owner, foreign title, official certificate of snowmobile number, or fee in lieu of tax receipt.

(4) The application must be signed by at least one owner or by a properly authorized officer or representative of the owner.

(5) If a certificate of ownership has previously been issued under the provisions of 23-2-601 through 23-2-644, the application for a new certificate must be accompanied by the immediately previous certificate. This subsection does not apply to snowmobiles that are purchased as new and unused machines or that were operated when the provisions of 23-2-601 through 23-2-644 were not in force and effect.

(6) Upon completion of the application, on forms furnished by the department of justice, the county treasurer shall issue to the applicant two copies of the application, one of which must be marked "file copy". The treasurer shall forward one copy and the original application to the department of justice, which shall enter the information contained in the application upon the corresponding records of its office and shall furnish the applicant with a certificate of ownership, which must contain that information in the application considered necessary by the department of justice, and a permanent ownership number. The certificate of ownership is not to be renewed annually and is valid as long as the person holding it owns the snowmobile.

(7) The owner shall at all times retain possession of the certificate of ownership, except when it is being transmitted to and from the department of justice for endorsement or cancellation.

(8) Upon application for a certificate of ownership, a fee of $5 must be paid to the county treasurer, which must be forwarded by the county treasurer to the department of justice and deposited in the general fund.

(9) The department of justice may not file a voluntary security interest or lien unless it is accompanied by or specified in the application for a certificate of ownership of the snowmobile encumbered. If the approved lien notice is transmitted to the department of justice, the security agreement or other lien instrument that creates the security interest must be retained by the secured party. A copy of the security agreement is sufficient as a lien notice if it contains the name and address of the debtor and the secured party, the complete snowmobile description, the amount of the lien, and the signature of the debtor. The department of justice shall file voluntary security interests and liens by entering the name and address of the secured party upon the face of the certificate of ownership. Involuntary liens must be filed against the record of the snowmobile encumbered. The department of justice shall mail a statement certifying the filing of a security interest or lien to the secured party. The department of justice shall mail the certificate of ownership to the owner at the address given on the certificate; however, if the transfer of ownership and filing of the security interest are paid for by a creditor or secured party, the department of justice shall return the certificate of ownership to the county treasurer of the county in which the snowmobile is to be registered. The owner of a snowmobile is the person entitled to operate and possess the snowmobile.

(10) A security interest in a snowmobile held as inventory by a dealer must be perfected in accordance with Title 30, chapter 9A.

(11) Whenever a security interest or lien is filed against a snowmobile that is subject to two security interests previously perfected under this section, the department of justice shall endorse on the face of the certificate of ownership: "NOTICE. This snowmobile is subject to additional security interest on file with the Department of Justice." Other information regarding the additional security interests need not be endorsed on the certificate.

(12) Satisfactions or statements of release filed with the department of justice under this part must be retained for a period of 8 years after receipt, after which they may be destroyed.

(13) Except as provided in subsection (14), a voluntary security interest or lien is perfected on the date the lien notice is delivered to the county treasurer. On that date, the county treasurer shall issue to the secured party a receipt evidencing the perfection. Perfection under this section constitutes constructive notice to subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers, from the date of delivery of the lien notice to the county treasurer, of the existence of the security interest.

(14) Voluntary security interests or lien filings that do not require transfer of ownership are perfected on the date the lien notice and the certificate of ownership or manufacturer's statement of origin are received by the department of justice. On that date, the department of justice shall issue to the secured party a receipt evidencing the perfection. Perfection under this subsection constitutes constructive notice to subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers, from the date the lien notice is delivered to the department of justice, of the existence of the security interest.

(15) Upon default under a chattel mortgage or conditional sales contract covering a snowmobile, the mortgagee or vendor has the same remedies as in the case of other personal property. In case of attachment of a snowmobile, all the provisions of 27-18-413, 27-18-414, and 27-18-804 are applicable, except that deposits must be made with the department of justice.

(16) A conditional sales vendor or chattel mortgagee or assignee who fails to file a satisfaction of a chattel mortgage, assignment, or conditional sales contract within 15 days after receiving final payment is required to pay the department of justice the sum of $1 for each day that the satisfaction is not filed.

(17) Upon receipt of notice of any involuntary liens or attachments against the record of any snowmobile registered in this state, the department of justice shall within 24 hours mail to the owner, conditional sales vendor, mortgagee, or their assignee a notice showing the name and address of the lien claimant, the amount of the lien, the date of execution of the lien, and, in the case of attachment, the full title of the court, the action, and the name of the attorney for the plaintiff or the name of the attaching creditor, or both.

(18) It is not necessary to refile with the department of justice any instruments on file in the office of the county clerk and recorder on October 1, 1989.

(19) A fee of $4 must be paid to the department of justice to file any security interest or other lien against a snowmobile. The $4 fee must cover the cost of filing a satisfaction or release of the security interest and the cost of entering the satisfaction or release on the records of the department of justice and deleting the endorsement of the security interest from the face of the certificate of ownership. A fee of $4 must be paid to the department of justice for issuing a certified copy of a certificate of ownership subject to a security interest or other lien on file with the department of justice or for filing an assignment of a security interest or other lien on file with the department of justice. All fees provided for in this section must be paid to the county treasurer for deposit in the state general fund in accordance with 15-1-504"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective January 1, 2004.

The amendments to this section made by Ch. 562, L. 2003, were rendered void by sec. 83(1)(a), Ch. 477, L. 2003.

Applicability: Section 85(1), Ch. 477, L. 2003, provided that this section applies to motor vehicle certificates of title and registrations on or after January 1, 2004.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 574 in (8) after "paid to the county treasurer" deleted "$3.50 of"; in (19) in last sentence near middle substituted "state general fund" for "general fund"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2001.

1993 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 351 near beginning of first sentence of (1), after "any", inserted "private or" and inserted second sentence precluding necessity of ownership certificate for certain snowmobiles used only on private land; inserted (3) requiring documentation of ownership; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 16, 1993.

Chapter 482 at beginning of (9) deleted two sentences that provided that a security interest in a snowmobile is not valid against subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers unless a lien notice has been perfected as provided in this section and filed on a form approved by the Department of Justice, in first sentence, before "security", inserted "voluntary" and before "lien" deleted "other", at beginning of second sentence, before "lien", inserted "approved", in fourth sentence substituted "voluntary security interests and liens" for "security interest or lien", and inserted fifth sentence requiring involuntary liens to be filed against the record of the encumbered snowmobile; in (10), after "9", deleted "and no endorsement on the certificate of title is necessary for perfection"; at beginning of (13) inserted exception clause and near beginning substituted "voluntary security interest or lien" for "security interest or other lien as provided in this section"; inserted (14) providing that voluntary security interests or lien filings not requiring ownership transfer are perfected on date Department of Justice receives lien notice and certificate of ownership, requiring Department to issue secured party receipt evidencing perfection, and providing that perfection constitutes constructive notice to subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers from date lien notice is delivered to Department; near beginning of (17) substituted "notice of any involuntary liens" for "liens, notice of liens dependent on possession"; and made minor changes in style.

A gender neutral change in (16) was slightly different in the two chapters. The codified chose the more appropriate of the two.

Chapter 535 in (7) increased fee from $3 to $5 and increased amount for deposit in motor vehicle recording account from $2 to $3.50; and made minor change in phraseology.

Code Commissioner Correction: The Code Commissioner has substituted the department of justice for the division of motor vehicles in this section, because sec. 14, Ch. 503, L. 1985, repealed 2-15-2002, which had statutorily created the division, and sec. 1, Ch. 503 amended Title 61, Motor Vehicles, to substitute "department" for "division" throughout that title. The apparent intent was to eliminate the statutory status of the division, and therefore the Code Commissioner has changed statutory references accordingly (see 1-11-101(2)(g)).

1983 Amendment: Substituted reference to state special revenue fund for reference to earmarked revenue fund.

The apparent intent was to eliminate the statutory status of the division, and therefore the Code Commissioner has changed statutory references accordingly (see 1-11-101(2)(g)).

1983 Amendment: Substituted references to state special revenue fund for references to earmarked revenue fund.

Disposition of Fee in Lieu of Tax: Section 17, Ch. 712, L. 1979, provided: "The county treasurer shall credit all fees in lieu of tax collected on snowmobiles to the county motor vehicle suspense fund provided for in 61-3-509." The history to 23-2-616 reflects that this language was codified as subsection (6), but the language was inadvertently not codified. The language was codified as subsection (7) when the MCA was published in 1981.

Attorney General's Opinions

Bill Title Held Sufficient to Identify Subject Matter: Senate Bill 254 (1973) as codified in 23-2-616 sufficiently identifies the subject matter embraced within sections 2 and 3 of the bill as codified in 23-2-617 and 23-2-619 (now repealed), respectively, because the codified sections have a natural and logical connection and can reasonably be said to relate, directly or indirectly, to one general subject of legislation: snowmobile decals. Thus, the title to Senate Bill 254 as codified meets the requirements of Art. V, sec. 11(3), Mont. Const., requiring that each bill contain only one subject. 35 A.G. Op. 64 (1974).

Case Notes

Driving Snowmobile Under Influence — Construction With Other Law — Snowmobile Law Penalty Alone Applies: In enacting Title 23, ch. 2, part 6, the Legislature duplicated the motor vehicle code concerns for regulation of snowmobiles upon streets, roads, and highways with respect to registration and licensing, accidents, enforcement, unlawful operation, penalties, and disposition of fines and forfeitures and provided a statutory scheme that supplants the motor vehicle code regarding snowmobiles. The Legislature clearly intended to impose a civil penalty for operating a snowmobile while under the influence in violation of this section (see 1993 amendment), but the civil label of the penalty is not alone dispositive. Review of the statutory scheme and attendant penalties leads the court to conclude that the penalties in 23-2-642(2) and (3) are punitive in nature and constitute criminal penalties. Therefore, defendant could not be charged under 61-8-401, the law relating to driving a motor vehicle under the influence, because to hold otherwise would allow conflicting criminal penalties. Defendant could be charged only under this section. St. v. Delap, 237 M 346, 772 P2d 1268, 46 St. Rep. 856 (1989).

Case Notes

Driving Snowmobile Under Influence — Construction With Other Law — Snowmobile Law Penalty Alone Applies: In enacting Title 23, ch. 2, part 6, the Legislature duplicated the motor vehicle code concerns for regulation of snowmobiles upon streets, roads, and highways with respect to registration and licensing, accidents, enforcement, unlawful operation, penalties, and disposition of fines and forfeitures and provided a statutory scheme that supplants the motor vehicle code regarding snowmobiles. The Legislature clearly intended to impose a civil penalty for operating a snowmobile while under the influence in violation of 23-2-632 (prior to 1993 amendment), but the civil label of the penalty is not alone dispositive. Review of the statutory scheme and attendant penalties leads the court to conclude that the penalties in subsections (2) and (3) of this section are punitive in nature and constitute criminal penalties. Therefore, defendant could not be charged under 61-8-401, the law relating to driving a motor vehicle under the influence, because to hold otherwise would allow conflicting criminal penalties. Defendant could only be charged under 23-2-632. St. v. Delap, 237 M 346, 772 P2d 1268, 46 St. Rep. 856 (1989).

The purpose of 23-2-651 through 23-2-656 is to define those areas of responsibility and the acts for which a snowmobile area operator is liable for death or injury to any person or property and those risks for which a snowmobiler expressly assumes or must be considered to have voluntarily assumed the risk of death or injury and for which there can be no recovery"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 23, 1999.

Case Notes

Gross Negligence Standard of Care in Snowmobile Liability Law Violative of Equal Protection — Ordinary Standard of Care Applicable to Snowmobile Liability: Musselman was severely injured in a snowmobile accident on U.S. Forest Service land, and Musselman's guardian sued the Forest Service under the Federal Tort Claims Act. The Forest Service argued that its decision not to mark the trail was discretionary under federal law and that Montana's snowmobile liability statutes relieved the Forest Service from a duty to warn of the hazardous trail because a snowmobile area operator had no duty under 23-2-653(3) to eliminate, alter, control, or lessen the risk inherent in the sport of snowmobiling. The federal District Court rejected both affirmative defenses and concluded that neither the gross negligence standard of liability in 23-2-653 nor the willful or wanton conduct standard of liability in 70-16-302 applied, but rather that the ordinary care standard of liability in 27-1-701 applied, and apportioned liability between the Forest Service and the snowmobilers. The case was appealed to the Ninth Circuit Court, which affirmed in all respects except the determinative question of which standard of care applied. Three questions were certified to the Montana Supreme Court for resolution, including whether the gross negligence standard of care in 23-2-653 was constitutional and, if not, whether the willful or wanton conduct standard of liability in 70-16-302 or the ordinary care standard of liability in 27-1-701 applied. The Supreme Court concluded that the same rationale applied to skiers in Brewer v. Ski-Lift, Inc., 234 M 109, 762 P2d 226 (1988), also applied to snowmobile area operators. The gross negligence standard of care in 23-2-653 is overbroad, extends beyond its stated purpose, fails to pass rational basis review, and violates the equal protection clause in Art. II, sec. 4, Mont. Const. The remainder of the snowmobile area operator law was left intact. The general recreational use willful or wanton conduct standard of liability in 70-16-302 was held inapplicable. Rather, the ordinary care standard of liability in 27-1-701 governed the Forest Service's actions in this case. Oberson v. U.S. Dept. of Agriculture, Forest Serv., 2007 MT 293, 339 M 519, 171 P3d 715 (2007).

23-2-654. Snowmobiler's assumption of responsibility — duties.

Compiler's Comments

1999 Amendment: Chapter 145 substituted (1) concerning operation of snowmobile for former text that read: "(1) A snowmobiler shall accept all legal responsibility for injury or damage of any kind to the extent that the injury or damage results from risks inherent in the sport of snowmobiling and has the duty to regulate personal conduct at all times so that injury to self or other persons or property that results from the risks inherent in the sport of snowmobiling is avoided. The risks inherent in the sport of snowmobiling include variations in terrain, surface or subsurface snow or ice conditions, cornices, avalanches, poor visibility, bare spots, rocks, trees, other forms of forest growth or debris, and plainly marked trail maintenance equipment"; substituted (2)(a) concerning knowledge of ability, equipment, and terrain and trail changes for former text that read: "(a) knowing the range of the snowmobiler's own ability to snowmobile any slope, trail, or area and for snowmobiling within the limits of the snowmobiler's ability considering the conditions"; at end of (2)(b) inserted "so as to prevent injury to self and others"; inserted (3) concerning legal responsibility for enumerated risks inherent in snowmobiling; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 23, 1999.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 351 near beginning of first sentence of (1) substituted "shall accept" for "assumes the risk and", after "responsibility for" substituted "injury or damage of any kind to the extent that the injury or damage results from risks inherent in the sport of snowmobiling and has the duty to regulate personal conduct at all times so that" for "death or", and at end inserted "is avoided" and at beginning of second sentence substituted "risks inherent in the sport of snowmobiling include" for "assumption of risk includes but is not limited to death or injury caused by the following"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 16, 1993.

Case Notes

Application of Montana Negligence Law to Snowmobile Accident on Federal Forest Service Trail: This case involved a Federal Tort Claims Act action brought by a snowmobiler who was severely injured on a U.S. Forest Service signed and maintained trail by members of the injured person's party who were following him. The place of the snowmobile crash was at the bottom of a slope that was not apparent from the approaching trail and was not warranted for a warning sign at the posted speed limit. The Ninth Circuit Court certified to the Montana Supreme Court a question on the appropriate standard of care and received the Montana Supreme Court's response in Oberson v. U.S. Dept. of Agriculture, 2007 MT 293, 339 M 519, 171 P3d 715 (2007). The Ninth Circuit Court held that the actions of the Forest Service in signing the snowmobile trail involved in the action did not rise to the type of policy decisions that are not subject to the Federal Tort Claims Act. Applying the Montana negligence standards and foreseeability of risk from the response, the Ninth Circuit Court held that the negligence elements were applied correctly relating to the accident. Oberson v. U.S. Dept. of Agriculture, 514 F3d 989 (2008).

Failure to Post Warning Sign on Improved Trail — Federal Tort Claim: In a Federal Tort Claims Act proceeding against the U.S. Forest Service for a snowmobile accident involving the lack of a warning sign at a hazardous variation in terrain on a maintained snowmobile trail, the Forest Service may not claim this section as a shield from liability because the risk under consideration was not the variation in terrain but the lack of a warning sign at the hazardous variation in terrain. Failure to post a warning sign is not an integral part of the sport of snowmobiling for which a snowmobiler must assume personal risk. Oberson v. U.S. Dept. of Agriculture, 441 F3d 703 (9th Cir. 2006).

DECISION PRIOR TO 1989 AMENDMENT

Skier Responsibility Statutes Unconstitutional: Although there is a legitimate state interest in defining ski area operator liability and protecting the economic vitality of the ski industry, as expressed in this section, 23-2-736 and 23-2-737 (now repealed) are needlessly overbroad in that they prohibit a skier from obtaining legal recourse against an operator even if the injury is proximately caused by the negligent or even intentional actions of the operator. The sections violate the equal protection guarantee of both the state and federal constitutions because they do not bear even a minimum rational relationship to the stated purpose. Brewer v. Ski-Lift, Inc., 234 M 109, 762 P2d 226, 45 St. Rep. 1769 (1988).

(3) substituted "and the relative degree of difficulty of the ski trails at that area" for "and slopes"; near beginning of (5) inserted "at the start of each day", after "trails" deleted "or slopes", and at end inserted "and amend those designations as openings and closures occur during the day"; inserted (6) and (7) relating to posting skier responsibility code and copy of 23-2-736; and made minor changes in phraseology. Applicability: Section 6(2), Ch. 429, L. 1989, provided: "[This act] applies to courses of action arising after [the effective date of this act]." Effective April 4, 1989.

Case Notes

Ski Area's Duties Not Limited to Statutory Duties: In response to an injured skier's allegations of negligence, the ski area asserted that its duties were limited to those set forth in this section and that because the skier did not allege any breach of the statutory duties, the ski area was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Applying a court's role in statutory construction to simply ascertain and declare what is contained in this section's terms and substance without inserting what has been omitted, the Supreme Court found that in neither the original enactment of this section nor in subsequent amendments did the Legislature provide that a ski area's only duties were those enumerated in this section and that there was no other duty of due care owed by operators to skiers. The duty of due care is imposed by 27-1-701. In holding that the operator's duties were not limited to those listed in this section, the court interpreted this section in a way that would give it effect rather than in a way that would render it unconstitutional. Mead v. M.S.B., Inc., 264 M 465, 872 P2d 782, 51 St. Rep. 348 (1994).

Case Notes

DECISIONS AFTER 1989 AMENDMENT

Assumption of Risk Not Separate Defense in Ski Area Operator Negligence Action: The defense of assumption of risk, other than as specified in Montana's skier responsibility statutes, is not a separate defense in a claim by skiers for injuries that are alleged to result from the negligence of ski area operators. Mead v. M.S.B., Inc., 264 M 465, 872 P2d 782, 51 St. Rep. 348 (1994).

Skier Responsibility Law — Questionable Skiing Conditions as Precluding Summary Judgment: Mead was injured in a skiing accident, but the District Court summarily dismissed his damages claim because the injury resulted from inherent risks of skiing, as set forth in this section. However, disputed questions of fact existed as to whether the injury was a result of variations in skiing terrain and whether Mead was skiing beyond the designated trail. Those questions were issues to be decided by the finder of fact after consideration of all the evidence; therefore, summary judgment was inappropriate. Mead v. M.S.B., Inc., 264 M 465, 872 P2d 782, 51 St. Rep. 348 (1994).

DECISION PRIOR TO 1989 AMENDMENT

Skier Responsibility Statutes Unconstitutional: Although there is a legitimate state interest in defining ski area operator liability and protecting the economic vitality of the ski industry, as expressed in 23-2-731, 23-2-737 (now repealed) and this section are needlessly overbroad in that they prohibit a skier from obtaining legal recourse against an operator even if the injury is proximately caused by the negligent or even intentional actions of the operator. The sections violate the equal protection guarantee of both the state and federal constitutions because they do not bear even a minimum rational relationship to the stated purpose. Brewer v. Ski-Lift, Inc., 234 M 109, 762 P2d 226, 45 St. Rep. 1769 (1988).

Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to HB 691 (Ch. 506, L. 1983) provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because it grants rulemaking authority to the Board of Athletics. Qualifications for licensure to conduct boxing or wrestling events or to act as a referee, manager, or judge should be based primarily on particular knowledge required for the particular license and the integrity of the applicant, as indicated by past activities. To this end, the rules should address means of determining knowledge and integrity, such as affidavits or references evidencing experience and good reputation in the particular field.

The Board should also look to the regulations established by the World Boxing Association for guidance.

The intention of the legislature is that the Board may not meet within 48 hours of any wrestling or boxing match or exhibition over which it has jurisdiction."

Case Notes

Opportunity for Presentation of Factual Contentions of Both Sides of Dispute Required to Meet Due Process Requirements in Stewards' Decision: The portion of ARM 8.22.302 (transferred to ARM 32.28.302) providing that the Board of Horseracing may not substitute its judgment for that of the stewards as to the weight of the evidence on questions of fact is unconstitutional in situations in which the stewards make a factual determination without affording both sides an opportunity to be heard. Deference to the stewards' decision is appropriate only if the stewards have weighed the factual contentions of both sides of the dispute. The stewards' failure to contact one racing contestant on race day regarding their decision to disqualify a horserace winner constituted a violation of that contestant's due process right to an opportunity to be heard. In these cases, the Board of Horseracing should not defer to the stewards' decision but rather should conduct a de novo administrative hearing and make its own findings of fact. Smith v. Bd. of Horseracing, 1998 MT 91, 288 M 249, 956 P2d 752, 55 St. Rep. 363 (1998).

Statute and Regulations Not Unconstitutionally Vague: The regulations enacted by the Board clearly define prohibited conduct to persons of common intelligence, and the statute clearly sets out the sanctions for violation of Board regulations. The statutes and regulations pertinent to the present case are not unconstitutionally vague. In re Peila, 249 M 272, 815 P2d 139, 48 St. Rep. 655 (1991).

Case Notes

Jockeys Not Included in Definition of Exhibitors for Purposes of Insurance Against Racing Injuries: Jockeys who suffered injuries in horseraces at MetraPark in Billings sued the county and the association that leased the facility for the races. The insurance policy listed numerous exclusions, including bodily injuries suffered by special event participants and by athletic or sports participants. The insurer cited the exclusions, denied coverage for the jockey's injuries, and refused to defend or indemnify the county and the association. The jockeys eventually settled with the county and the association and then sought to recover from the insurer. The District Court held that the policy was unambiguous, that the exclusions did not violate public policy, that the county and the association had no reasonable expectation that the policy would cover jockeys, and that summary judgment for the jockeys was therefore inappropriate. The jockeys appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. As used in 23-4-205, the term "exhibitors" means people who organize a horserace, not jockeys who are participants in the exhibition, so the claim that the exclusions violated public policy was correctly dismissed. The county's and association's expectations that the policy would cover jockeys was not objectively reasonable because the athletic or sports exclusion unambiguously excluded coverage for jockeys, and the District Court did not err in excluding the jockeys' claims. Part Case Notes

Gambling — Non-Indian Defendants for Crimes Committed on Reservation — Criminal Law Jurisdiction — Standing: The state has jurisdiction over non-Indian defendants for crimes committed on the reservation when there is no Indian victim. Non-Indian defendants do not have standing to raise the argument that the action of the state interferes with the self-government of the Blackfeet Reservation. The state has authority to regulate gambling by non-Indians on the Blackfeet Reservation. State ex rel. Poll v. District Court, 257 M 512, 851 P2d 405, 50 St. Rep. 387 (1993).

Groups Empowered to Legalize Gambling: The term "the people", as used in Art. III, sec. 9, Mont. Const., is synonymous with the voters of the entire State of Montana and not the voters of a local government unit. Therefore, the Legislature or "the people" of the entire state are the only two groups empowered to legalize forms of gambling in this state. Anaconda-Deer Lodge County v. Lorello, 181 M 195, 592 P2d 1381 (1979).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER SECTION 23-5-106
WHICH PROHIBITED BRACE AND BUNCO

Confidence or Bunco Game: Any game which is outlawed by this statute (23-5-106, now repealed) may be a confidence or bunco game, for the design and conduct of those who use it give it its character under this statute. St. v. Hale, 134 M 131, 328 P2d 930 (1958).

Gambling Devices: The games described in this section (23-5-106, now repealed) are purported gambling devices so contrived, although masked as legitimate operations, as to bilk the victim of his wager by manipulation. These games do not depend upon the active or passive emotions of the victim. St. v. Hale, 134 M 131, 328 P2d 930 (1958).

Morocco: Defendant who used and dealt with game of "Morocco", a confidence game and bunco game, to win money from his victim was properly convicted of the crime prohibited by this section (23-5-106, now repealed). St. v. Hale, 134 M 131, 328 P2d 930 (1958).

Penalty: The penalty of violating this statute (23-5-106, now repealed) is imposed upon every person who uses or deals with any game commonly known as a confidence game or bunco, as well as one who wins. St. v. Hale, 134 M 131, 328 P2d 930 (1958).

Purpose of Statute: This statute (23-5-106, now repealed) is aimed at the person who uses or deals with a confidence game, or bunco game, and not so much against the inanimate paraphernalia so used. This statute covers a separate and distinct crime from that covered by section 94-1806, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed). St. v. Hale, 134 M 131, 328 P2d 930 (1958).

Case Notes

Racing Entry Fee as Alleged Bet: A complaint in an action to recover the amount of $2 lost by plaintiff as an alleged bet on a horserace, with exemplary damages, under this section, alleging in substance that defendant fair association had given notice that it would conduct horseracing for purses, at which any owner or co-owner of a horse competing in the races would be required to pay an entrance fee of $2 and that no person other than such owner or co-owners would be permitted to pay an entrance fee; that plaintiff, representing himself to be a co-owner of a certain horse, paid the required fee; that the horse did not win; that the purse plus an amount equal to the entrance fees for that horse was paid to the owners of the winning horse; that the purse was made up of funds belonging to the association and that the association did not have any interest in the outcome of the race, did not state a cause of action and demurrer thereto was properly sustained. Toomey v. Penwell, 76 M 166, 245 P 943 (1926).

Constitutionality: The antigambling law was not rendered invalid by the insertion of this section. The right to exemplary damages thus given is in the nature of a penalty and constitutes a part of the penalty provided by the act. St. v. Ross, 38 M 319, 99 P 1056 (1909).

DECISIONS AFTER 1989 AMENDMENT

Gambling — Non-Indian Defendants for Crimes Committed on Reservation — Criminal Law Jurisdiction — Standing: The state has jurisdiction over non-Indian defendants for crimes committed on the reservation when there is no Indian victim. Non-Indian defendants do not have standing to raise the argument that the action of the state interferes with the self-government of the Blackfeet Reservation. The state has authority to regulate gambling by non-Indians on the Blackfeet Reservation. State ex rel. Poll v. District Court, 257 M 512, 851 P2d 405, 50 St. Rep. 387 (1993).

DECISIONS PRIOR TO 1989 AMENDMENT

Football Parlay Card: When football parlay card fixed the point spread and the odds and gave the house the benefits of ties, it was an integral part of the game necessary in order to play it, and thus a "device" within the meaning of this section (as it read prior to the 1989 amendment). U.S. v. Thompson, 409 F. Supp. 1044 (D.C. Mont. 1976).

Federal Travel Act: Sale by out-of-state manufacturers of punchboards and pull tabs to distributors in Montana did not constitute facilitation of unlawful activity in violation of former Montana gambling laws within the meaning of the Federal Travel Act (18 U.S.C. § 1952). U.S. v. Gibson Specialty Co., 507 F2d 446 (9th Cir. 1974).

Constitutionality: Voters' approval of gambling option submitted with 1972 Montana Constitution did not repeal previous laws against gambling or validate the 1937 amendment of this section previously held unconstitutional. State ex rel. Woodahl v. District Court, 162 M 283, 511 P2d 318 (1973).

Valuable Consideration: When one is required to make an outlay of money in order to participate in a scheme whereby an award is made by chance, the participant pays valuable consideration for the chance to participate, notwithstanding the fact he may also receive merchandise at the same time that the outlay is made. St. v. Cox, 136 M 507, 349 P2d 104 (1960).

Punchboards:

In an action for violation of this section (23-5-201, defining "lottery", now repealed), it was no defense that the defendant had offered to pay for the operation of such punchboards in accordance with Ch. 201, L. 1951, which purported to license trade stimulators such as punchboards, since it was not competent for the Legislature to authorize lotteries in view of Art. XIX, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., and the case of State ex rel. Harrison v. Deniff, 126 M 109, 245 P2d 140 (1952). St. v. Tursich, 127 M 504, 267 P2d 641 (1954).

Punchboards constitute a lottery. State ex rel. Harrison v. Deniff, 126 M 109, 245 P2d 140 (1952).

Numbers Games: A numbers game, whether called Chinese lottery, "The Crown Game", "The Crown punchboard game", or any other name, is a lottery. State ex rel. Olsen v. Crown Cigar Store, 124 M 310, 220 P2d 1029 (1950).

Prosecution of Gambling Laws: Actions for violation of the gambling laws may be prosecuted under either this section and 23-5-103 (renumbered 23-5-152) or under section 94-1001, R.C.M. 1947, et seq. (now repealed), the abatement law, or under each and all of such sections. State ex rel. Replogle v. Joyland Club, 124 M 122, 220 P2d 988 (1950).

Slot Machines:

Information charging defendant with the operation of slot machines was not subject to demurrer as not charging an offense. St. v. Israel, 124 M 152, 220 P2d 1003 (1950).

There is nothing in this law that makes it lawful for any person or any religious, fraternal, or charitable organization or any private home to run, conduct, or keep any slot machine within the State of Montana. St. v. Israel, 124 M 152, 220 P2d 1003 (1950).

The operation of all slot machines is prohibited to all persons without exception. [Decided prior to the 1985 enactment of part 6 of this chapter.] State ex rel. Olsen v. Crown Cigar Store, 124 M 310, 220 P2d 1029 (1950).

Slot machines are not included among the enumerated "hickey" games or among the "trade stimulators" from which the ban was lifted by the 1937 amendment known as the "Hickey Law". St. v. Israel, 124 M 152, 220 P2d 1003 (1950); State ex rel. Olsen v. Crown Cigar Store, 124 M 310, 220 P2d 1029 (1950).

A so-called mint vending machine, which by the insertion of a nickel and pulling a lever will bring the operator a package of mint of the value of 5 cents and which may or may not in addition bring to him trade checks good for 5 cents in trade (and which also may be operated by the insertion of a trade check, in which event trade checks but not mint may or may not be paid), is a gambling device; the machine appeals to the operator's propensities to gamble and lures him into continuing his play in the hope that he may gain an amount much greater than the amount risked. Marvin v. Sloan, 77 M 174, 250 P 443 (1926).

Bingo and Keno: [Prior to the enactment of 23-5-403, now repealed, the] game of "keno" was held to be a lottery and prohibited by this law (23-5-201, defining "lottery", now repealed). Gambling is a generic term, embracing within its meaning all forms of play or game for stakes wherein one or the other participating stands to win or lose as a matter of chance. Play at lottery is gambling. State ex rel. Leahy v. O'Rourke, 115 M 502, 146 P2d 168 (1944).

Bank Night: In an action by the state to enjoin the operation of "bank night" drawings as a lottery under this section (23-5-201, defining "lottery", now repealed), submitted on an agreed statement of facts wherein it was stipulated among other matters that "the money that is used for the purpose of purchasing the defense bond is received from the rental of the store and office properties of the defendant corporation in the theater buildings and not from the sale of admission tickets to the theater", it was held, on the facts presented, that the scheme did not constitute a lottery, and second part of Art. XIX, sec. 2, 1889 Mont. Const., was not self-executing. State ex rel. Stafford v. Fox-Great Falls Theatre Corp., 114 M 52, 132 P2d 689 (1942), overruling State ex rel. Dussault v. Fox-Missoula Theatre Corp., 110 M 441, 101 P2d 1065 (1940).

Game of Skill as Gambling Device: An innocent game involving the element of skill alone becomes a gambling device when players bet on the outcome. State ex rel. Dussault v. Kilburn, 111 M 400, 109 P2d 1113 (1941).

Pinball Machine: A "pinball" machine, equipped with a sloping plane studded with pins and containing holes into which a small ball, catapulted by means of a spring, must fall to enable the player to win and which pays off in trade checks, is a gambling device under the provisions of this section, and while the evidence shows that by long practice a certain amount of skill may be developed, with the patronizing public it is purely a game of chance, and the building in which it is used was a nuisance under section 94-1002, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed). State ex rel. Dussault v. Kilburn, 111 M 400, 109 P2d 1113 (1941).

Requisites of Lottery: The legal requisites necessary to charge the offense of operating a lottery under this section (23-5-201, defining "lottery", now repealed) are the offering of a prize, the awarding of the prize by chance, and the giving of a consideration for an opportunity to win the prize. St. v. Hahn, 105 M 270, 72 P2d 459 (1937), overruled on other grounds in St. v. Bosch, 125 M 566, 242 P2d 477 (1952).

Amount of Stakes Immaterial: This section makes no distinction as to the amount of the stakes involved; hence, it is immaterial that the stakes were merely treats or cigars. St. v. Dumphy, 57 M 229, 187 P 897 (1920).

Sufficiency of Charge:

The allegation that the defendant did carry on, conduct, and cause to be conducted the game described is sufficient to charge an offense without regard to the expression "as owner and proprietor thereof", which may be regarded as surplusage. St. v. Tudor, 47 M 185, 131 P 632 (1913).

The particular name of a game of chance played with cards for money need not be stated in the information. St. v. Duncan, 40 M 531, 107 P 510 (1910).

An information charging a violation of the antigambling law in the words of this section was sufficient, and it was not necessary to describe the game in detail or set out the means by which it was carried on. St. v. Ross, 38 M 319, 99 P 1056 (1909).

An information charging defendant with permitting a game of chance to be played upon his premises is not defective because of its failure to set forth the names of the persons permitted to play. St. v. Radmilovich, 40 M 93, 105 P 91 (1909).

Attorney General's Opinions

Pull Tabs: A nonprofit charitable organization may not sell pull tab devices to a bar if the bar profits from distribution of the pull tabs. 36 A.G. Op. 16 (1975).

Electronic Bingo and Keno Machines Unlawful Under Former Law: The electronic machines distributed by Treasure State Games, Inc., which purported to duplicate the games of bingo and keno, constituted gambling games which were not authorized by the Bingo and Raffles Law [as it read prior to the 1985 amendment of 23-5-412]. 36 A.G. Op. 7 (1975), superseded by Treasure State Games, Inc. v. St., 170 M 189, 551 P2d 1008 (1976).

"Bonanza" Machines Illegal: A "bonanza" machine vended a displayed coupon and displayed the next coupon, which was hidden, when a quarter was inserted in the machine. The coupons were of various values that the vendee could read before inserting the coin. Thus, the vendee knew the value of the displayed coupon but not the value of the next coupon. The coupons granted discounts or were redeemable in cash or merchandise. This machine was a gambling device and a lottery and was illegal. 32 A.G. Op. 7 (1967).

Amendment effective July 1, 1991.

Case Notes

Poker Machines as Slot Machines: "Draw-80" poker machines, which were activated by a player inserting quarters, the player being awarded credits redeemable in cash for winning, were indistinguishable from slot machines under 23-5-101 (renumbered 23-5-112) and were therefore illegal [prior to the 1985 enactment of part 6 of this chapter]. Gallatin County v. D&R Music & Vending, Inc., 208 M 138, 676 P2d 779, 41 St. Rep. 224 (1984).

Probable Cause in Pleading: Defendants were charged with illegal possession of a slot machine. The District Court dismissed for lack of probable cause, saying the game was essentially the same as that previously found legal in Treasure St. Games v. St., 170 M 189, 551 P2d 1008 (1976). On appeal, the Supreme Court found the dismissal to be error, saying the State need not demonstrate a prima facie case in the charging documents but only show probable cause to believe an offense has been committed. The affidavit showed probable cause. St. v. Johnson, 203 M 153, 660 P2d 101, 40 St. Rep. 359 (1983).

Case Notes
No Clear Legal Duty to Issue Gambling Licenses and Permits — Activity Unlawful Under Federal Law — Writ of Mandamus Properly Denied: The Department of Justice, Gambling Control Division, denied gambling licenses and permits to the plaintiffs, business owners who operate within the boundaries of the Flathead Indian Reservation. The denial of licenses was based on the determination of the U.S. Attorney that the operation of video gambling machines would no longer be lawful on Indian lands absent a tribal-state compact. The plaintiffs filed a petition for a writ of mandamus ordering the state to issue the licenses and permits. The writ was denied. The plaintiffs appealed on the grounds that the state had a clear legal duty under state law to issue the licenses and permits. On appeal, the Supreme Court rejected the state's contention that state gambling laws specifically authorize it to refuse to process the plaintiffs' applications. However, because the plaintiffs seek to conduct gambling operations on the Flathead Indian Reservation, federal statutes must be considered in conjunction with state law. State law that conflicts with the purpose and operation of a federal statute, regulation, or policy is preempted by the federal law. State licensure of Class III gaming under the facts of this case would frustrate the federal policy underlying the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act (IGRA). The Supreme Court concluded that absent a ruling of a federal court as to the applicability of IGRA to non-Indians, such as the plaintiffs in this case, and given the apparent conflict between Montana licensing statutes and federal statutes regulating gambling on Indian lands, there is no clear legal duty requiring the state to issue gambling licenses and permits to the plaintiffs. The District Court did not err in denying the petition for a writ of mandamus. Larson v. St., 275 M 314, 912 P2d 783, 53 St. Rep. 158 (1996).

Calcutta Pool Specifications: Calcutta pools must be auction pools and are not legalized forms of sports bookmaking. A legal Calcutta pool exists if: (1) bets vary in amount and are "sold" at auction; (2) the pool is "fully subscribed", i.e., all competitors in the event—either individually or as part of the "field"—are wagered on, so that the auctioneer or the house does not have an interest in the outcome of the event beyond a commission paid from the pool for conducting the event; (3) the amount a bettor can win varies with the size of the pool rather than with odds set by the auctioneer or the house; and (4) the rules of the particular Calcutta pool do not allow more than one wager per competitor, or "field", per pool. 42 A.G. Part Case Notes

One Player Versus House Prohibited: [Prior to the 1985 enactment of part 6 of this chapter, plaintiff] brought a declaratory judgment action seeking to have "Draw-80" poker machines declared illegal. Plaintiff questioned whether the Montana Card Games Act authorizes the playing of poker in which the house competes against a single player. The court determined that the machine represents the house with programmed retainage. The court held that games where one player vies against the house are illegal because the legislative purpose of the Montana Card Games Act is to ban casino-type gambling. Gallatin County v. D&R Music & Vending, Inc., 208 M 138, 676 P2d 779, 41 St. Rep. 224 (1984).

"Poker All Keno" Not Authorized by Card Games Law: A gambling game using 52 balls marked with playing card symbols that were mixed and drawn in the same manner as keno but paid off by the house based upon hands of various types of poker is not authorized under the card games law at Title 23, ch. 5, part 3. The players of the game compete against the house rather than other players, and it is therefore a casino type or banking game which the Legislature did not intend to authorize under Title 23, ch. 5, part 3. Goott v. St., 193 M 108, 630 P2d 232, 38 St. Rep. 1037 (1981).

No Probable Cause: Police detectives did not have probable cause to enter an upstairs room of an inn, arrest defendants for participating in a card game on unlicensed premises, and search the room because of the inability of the informant's tip to satisfy the two-pronged Aguilar test. Case Notes Poker Machines Illegal: [Prior to the 1985 enactment of part 6 of this chapter, a] declaratory action was brought seeking to have electronic poker machines declared illegal. The District Court found the machines authorized under this section, and the Supreme Court reversed. The Supreme Court held that while "poker" is not precisely defined by statute, the word "is of ancient and common understanding". It is a game played by individuals with one player pitting his skills and talents against those of other players. No variation of poker involves only one player. It is a game played with playing cards, not with electronic images displayed on a screen. Poker is a game of skill and chance. It is not a game programmed so that no one wins a certain percentage of the time. The electronic game played on the "Draw-80" machines is not poker and is not authorized by the Montana Card Games Act. Gallatin County v. D&R Music & Vending, Inc., 208 M 138, 676 P2d 779, 41 St. Rep. 224 (1984).

Card Games — Statute Constitutional: A declaratory judgment action yielded a District Court order declaring 23-5-311 constitutional. That order was appealed. The Supreme Court on review held the statute did not deny equal protection, was not special legislation, and was not void for vagueness. A criminal statute need not apply to all areas that may be injurious to public health to comply with equal protection requirements. Mere classification of the subjects of legislation does not deny equal protection. If all persons in the same class are treated alike, there is no violation of equal protection requirements. The statute was general and operated uniformly and equally on all persons in Montana and thus was a general law, not local or special legislation in the constitutional sense. The claim the term "poker" was vague was rejected because the appellant lacked standing to challenge the constitutionality of the statute because he was not injured or jeopardized by the alleged vagueness of the word "poker". Palmer v. St., 191 M 534, 625 P2d 550, 38 St. Rep. 447 (1981).

Powers of Local Government to Regulate Gambling Limited as to Legislatively Approved Games: The Legislature intended to grant only discretionary licensing power to local governments concerning gambling; thus, in response to a petition for initiative, local governmental bodies are without the power under the Montana Card Games Act and the Bingo and Raffles Law to limit or prohibit gambling and the approved forms thereof. Each tournament may be conducted for no more than 5 consecutive days. If an operator conducts more than one tournament a year, at least 7 days must lapse between the conclusion of one tournament and the beginning of the next tournament.

(2) (a) Before the start of a tournament, the operator shall submit to the department an application for a tournament permit. The permit application must be accompanied by a $10 fee. The department shall retain the fee for administrative purposes.

(b) If a tournament is to be conducted on the premises of more than one licensed operator, each operator shall submit a permit application and processing fee. The permit is applied toward each operator's annual 12-tournament limit.

(c) A licensed operator may participate in a progressive card game tournament in which the ultimate prize is not awarded until the final round of the tournament is completed.

(d) At least 50% of the total of all entrance fees for any tournament that is represented as a charitable tournament must be paid to a charitable, educational, or recreational nonprofit organization"; in (3) and (5) substituted "a large-stakes or small-stakes tournament" for "the tournament"; substituted current language in (4) concerning permits for additional live card games for former (3) that read: "(3) Permits for placement of additional live card game tables, as provided in 23-5-306, are not required for additional tables authorized under a tournament permit"; in (6) before "poker" inserted "large-stakes or small-stakes"; deleted former (7) that read: "(7) A licensed operator may charge a tournament participant an entry fee, which may include a fee to cover expenses incurred in conducting the tournament. A participant who has been eliminated from competition during the tournament may reenter the tournament by paying an additional fee if permitted to do so under tournament rules. A rake-off may not be taken during a tournament card game"; inserted (8) relating to distribution of charitable tournament entrance fees; deleted former (9) and (10) that read: "(9) The prize for a tournament may be the right to participate in another tournament if the value of a seat in the higher-level tournament is equivalent to the value of the expected top prize for the tournament.

(10) The total amount paid by an individual to enter a tournament, including any additional purchase of chips or other payment during the tournament, may not exceed $2,500"; inserted (9) prohibiting rake-offs; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2013.

Case Notes

Plurality Language in Charge Permissible: Defendants were charged with "maintaining a bingo/keno game in which cards/chances may be purchased in excess of $.50 in violation of 23-5-412". The District Court dismissed for lack of probable cause, saying the plurality language of the charge did not state an offense. On appeal, the Supreme Court found the dismissal to be error, saying the State need not demonstrate a prima facie case in the charging documents but only show probable cause to believe an offense has been committed. 2015 Amendment: Chapter 61 in definition of sports tab game after "on a sports event" inserted "or series of sports events". Amendment effective July 1, 2015.

Purported Amendment — Coordination: Section 3, Ch. 449, L. 1993, provided: "If House Bill No. 411 is passed and approved and if it includes a section amending the definition of "sports pool" in 23-5-501 to delete the words "or animals" at the end of the definition, then the portion of that section of House Bill No. 411 that deletes the words "or animals" is void." DECISION UNDER FORMER LAW

Used Poker Machine Licensing — Temporary Restraining Order and Preliminary Injunction Proper: It was reasonable for the District Court to issue a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction when the court found that plaintiffs risked losing their used, unmodified video poker machines unless they could buy modification kits or new machines within 3 days and kits were not available. Under these circumstances, plaintiffs would suffer irreparable injury if they lost use of the used machines or had to buy more expensive new machines. As none of the criteria of the court orders changed or contravened the Video Draw Poker Machine Control Law of 1985, the Department of Revenue was not prevented under 27-19-103 from executing its duties. Further, it was also proper for the court to structure terms of the final order to protect licensees and limit the time for them to come into compliance with the new law. Mont. Tavern Ass'n v. St., 224 M 258, 729 P2d 1310, 43 St. Rep. 2180 (1986).

ARM 23.16.1823 Proration of permit fee — renewal.

Case Notes

No Clear Legal Duty to Issue Gambling Licenses and Permits — Activity Unlawful Under Federal Law — Writ of Mandamus Properly Denied: The Department of Justice, Gambling Control Division, denied gambling licenses and permits to the plaintiffs, business owners who operate within the boundaries of the Flathead Indian Reservation. The denial of licenses was based on the determination of the U.S. Attorney that the operation of video gambling machines would no longer be lawful on Indian lands absent a tribal-state compact. The plaintiffs filed a petition for a writ of mandamus ordering the state to issue the licenses and permits. The writ was denied. The plaintiffs appealed on the grounds that the state had a clear legal duty under state law to issue the licenses and permits. On appeal, the Supreme Court rejected the state's contention that state gambling laws specifically authorize it to refuse to process the plaintiffs' applications. However, because the plaintiffs seek to conduct gambling operations on the Flathead Indian Reservation, federal statutes must be considered in conjunction with state law. State law that conflicts with the purpose and operation of a federal statute, regulation, or policy is preempted by the federal law. State licensure of Class III gaming under the facts of this case would frustrate the federal policy underlying the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act (IGRA). The Supreme Court concluded that absent a ruling of a federal court as to the applicability of IGRA to non-Indians, such as the plaintiffs in this case, and given the apparent conflict between Montana licensing statutes and federal statutes regulating gambling on Indian lands, there is no clear legal duty requiring the state to issue gambling licenses and permits to the plaintiffs. The District Court did not err in denying the petition for a writ of mandamus. Larson v. St., 275 M 314, 912 P2d 783, 53 St. Rep. 158 (1996).

Amendment effective April 3, 1989.

1989 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 408, L. 1989, provided: "This bill requires a statement of intent because [sections 2 and 4] [23-5-1007 and 23-5-1016 (renumbered 23-7-202 and 23-7-301)] grant rulemaking authority to the lottery commission. The overall intent and purpose of this bill is to enable the lottery to be run as a business.

The legislature finds that the lottery is a complex business driven by market forces and must be given flexibility in order to maximize profits.

The legislature also finds that the people of Montana overwhelmingly approved the creation of a lottery and that the intent of the people was also to maximize profits to the state.

The legislature finds that an operational budget based on a percentage of revenue has hampered the lottery commission in its attempt to operate as a business. The lottery must be able to plan for market expansion, improvement of the product line, cost reduction, and organizational development as would a private business. These plans cannot be made or carried out unless the operational budget is a fixed amount. It is the intent of the legislature that the lottery's operating budget be set by the legislature as are the budgets of all other state agencies.

In [section 2] [23-5-1007 (renumbered 23-7-202)], the legislature grants additional rulemaking authority to the lottery commission to adopt rules providing for staff incentives or bonuses for increased sales only if these rules can be shown to significantly increase sales. It is the further intent that the rules for sales incentives and bonuses be based on incentive and bonus plans that have proven successful in private business or other lotteries.

The legislature intends to give the commission flexibility to change the prize payout in instant ticket games in order to increase profits. If increased prize payout does not result in increased net revenue, the decision of the commission then should be to roll back the prize payout percentage to comply with the legislative intent of maximizing profits.

In [section 4] [23-5-1016 (renumbered 23-7-301)], the legislature allows the lottery commission to adopt rules providing for increased commissions to retailers if retailers increase their sales of lottery products. The legislature intends that the bonus commission plans be based on successful plans in other lotteries, such as Colorado's, whereby total sales are projected for each retailer based on average sales over a period of time, such as 1 year. Whenever future sales for an established period of time exceed forecasted sales, a bonus may be paid. For example, if a retailer maintains average sales, the commission is the regular 5%; if a retailer sells a certain percentage above average, 6%; an even higher percentage of increase in sales may provide 7%, etc. The purpose of bonus commissions is to increase net revenue to the state."

Chapter Case Notes

Unpublished Opinions Not to Be Cited as Precedent: Opinions and orders designated as "unpublished" should not be cited as legal precedent, and the Supreme Court will disregard arguments or portions of arguments based on unpublished opinions. St. v. Ferre, 2014 MT 96, 374 Mont. 428, 322 P.3d 1047, following St. v. Oie, 2007 MT 328, 340 Mont. 205, 174 P.3d 937.

Part 1
Civil Actions — Form and Commencement

25-1-101. One form of civil action.

GENERAL

Quo Warranto Not Abolished: A statute which provides that there shall be "but one form of civil action for the enforcement or protection of private rights, and the redress or prevention of private wrongs", does not apply to informations in the nature of quo warranto, which are solely employed to enforce or protect public rights, and redress or prevent public wrongs. Territory ex rel. Blake v. Virginia Rd Co., 2 M 96 (1875).

FORMS OF ACTION ABOLISHED

Distinctions in Causes of Action Still Apply: Though the Code has abolished all other forms of action, and provides that there shall be but one form of civil action for the enforcement or protection of private rights and the redress or prevention of private wrongs, yet the distinctions between the different causes of action still obtain—the reasons underlying them are still the same—and the plaintiff may not recover beyond the case stated by him in his complaint. State ex rel. Barron v. District Court, 119 M 344, 174 P2d 809 (1946); Kramlich v. Tullock, 84 M 601, 277 P 411 (1929); Butala v. Union Elec. Co., 70 M 580, 226 P 899 (1924), distinguished in Francis v. Sun Oil Co., 135 M 307, 340 P2d 824 (1959); Glass v. Basin & Bay St. Min. Co., 31 M 21, 77 P 302 (1904).

Form of Action Immaterial: The form in which an action is brought is immaterial, for if upon any view of the case made the plaintiff is entitled to relief, the pleading will be sustained and the character of the action determined from the nature of the grievance rather than from the form of the declaration. Samuell v. Moore Mercantile Co., 62 M 232, 204 P 376 (1921).

Reference to Common-Law Forms Helpful: While the common-law forms of action have been abolished so far as name and form of action but not substance are concerned, reference to the forms and principles of the common law are of aid in determining the rights of litigants. Samuell v. Moore Mercantile Co., 62 M 232, 204 P 376 (1921).

Distinct Forms of Action Not Recognized: While the Courts of this state recognize the principles applicable to the different actions, particular forms of which are required in common-law jurisdictions, they do not recognize those distinct forms since the statute has abolished them. This rule was recognized and applied in the following cases: Maronen v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 48 M 249, 136 P 968 (1913); Logan v. Billings & N. R.R., 40 M 467, 107 P 415 (1910); Raymond v. Blancgrass, 36 M 449, 93 P 648 (1908); Donovan v. McDevitt, 36 M 61, 92 P 49 (1907); W. Plumbing Co. v. Fried, 33 M 7, 81 P 394 (1905); Glass v. Basin & Bay St. Min. Co., 31 M 21, 77 P 302 (1904); Aldritt v. Panton, 17 M 187, 42 P 767 (1895); Goodrich Lumber Co. v. Davie, 13 M 76, 32 P 282 (1893).

LAW AND EQUITY DISTINCTION

Court May Accept Jurisdiction in Equity Only When No Legal Remedy Available: The Billings VFW ceased operations in 1974 and allowed its pre-1947 liquor license to lapse based on the belief that the license was nontransferable. In 1979, the VFW reopened and was issued a new nontransferable all-beverages license. In 1991, the Supreme Court held that pre-1947 liquor licenses held by fraternal and veterans' organizations were not subject to quota restrictions passed in 1949 and therefore were freely transferable. (See Helena Aerie No. 16 v. Dept. of Revenue, 251 M 77, 822 P2d 1057 (1991).) After the 1991 court decision, the VFW received an offer to purchase its pre-1947 license for $165,000. The Department of Revenue refused to reissue the lapsed license or to declare that the current license held by the VFW was freely transferable. The VFW sought a declaratory judgment that its license be characterized as freely transferable on the basis that the Department was estopped from arguing that the license was nontransferable because the VFW had let the pre-1947 license expire based on the Department's misrepresentation that under the 1949 law, the license was nontransferable. The Supreme Court held that the doctrine of equitable estoppel did not apply because the misrepresentation had to be of fact and not a misrepresentation of law. The Supreme Court further ruled that a legal remedy had been available at all times to the VFW in that it could have challenged the Department's interpretation of the 1949 law prior to letting its license lapse and that therefore the lower court was correct in refusing to accept equity jurisdiction when a legal remedy was available. Billings Post No. 1634 v. Dept. of Revenue, 284 M 84, 943 P2d 517, 54 St. Rep. 786 (1997).

Legal Distinctions Not Abolished: The provision of this section that there is but one form of civil action for the enforcing of private rights or redressing private wrongs refers only to form and not to substance and does not abolish the distinction between causes of action at law and those in equity. Frisbee v. Coburn, 101 M 58, 52 P2d 882 (1935); State ex rel. Lewis & Clark County v. District Court, 90 M 213, 300 P 544 (1931).

One Form of Action: Under this section there is but one form of civil action for the enforcement or protection of private rights or the redress or prevention of private wrongs, and upon a cause of action or defense stated, the court will proceed to try the cause as one at law or in equity, upon the issues presented, and grant such relief as the circumstances demand. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co. v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 27 M 536, 71 P 1005 (1903); 27 M 288, 70 P 1114 (1902).

Distinctions Abolished: The old distinctions between actions at law and suits in equity have been abolished, and the court, having jurisdiction of the parties, can afford such relief as the facts of the case may justify. Merchants' Nat'l Bank v. Great Falls Opera House Co., 23 M 33, 57 P 445 (1899).

25-1-102. Limitations on commencing actions.

Compiler's Comments

1981 Amendment: In (1) substituted "Title 27, chapter 2" for "[93-2501 to 93-2720]".

Section Not Codified: Section 93-2718, R.C.M. 1947, has not been codified as that section was of a temporary nature. This section provided that section 93-2720, R.C.M. 1947 (now codified as 25-1-102(2)), did not apply to existing actions already commenced.

Case Notes

Standing — Juridical Relationship Exception: Plaintiff employees sued defendant employers, healthcare businesses, challenging the discontinuation of a sick leave buyback program. Defendants claimed the plaintiffs lacked standing to sue the defendants, for whom the plaintiffs did not work directly. The Supreme Court, applying the juridical relationship exception adopted in Murer v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 257 Mont. 434, 849 P.2d 1036 (1993), concluded that the plaintiffs had standing to sue all of the defendants because the injuries alleged were the result of a concerted scheme and a juridical link existed between the defendants based on common ownership and identical employment terms. Chipman v. NW. Healthcare Corp., 2012 MT 242, 366 Mont. 450, 288 P.3d 193.

Lack of Standing of Person Who Fails to Allege Personal Interest or Injury: Fleenor brought an action for violation of her right to know and right to participate in a school district's decision to hire a new superintendent on grounds that she was not properly notified of votes. The suit was brought by Fleenor as a citizen of Montana and resident of the county and the school district. The District Court dismissed the suit for lack of standing, and Fleenor appealed, asserting that standing existed by virtue of her status as an interested party and that a liberal interpretation of the constitution regarding a citizen's right to know and participate included anyone with an interest in enforcing the broad constitutional policies and protections. The Supreme Court disagreed.

To establish standing, a complaining party must clearly allege a past, present, or threatened injury to a property right or a civil right and allege that the injury is personal to the claimant and distinguishable from injury to the public generally. Additionally, the challenged action must result in a concrete adverseness personal to the party staking a claim in the outcome. However, simply being an informed and interested citizen is insufficient to confer standing. Fleenor made no assertion of injury and did not establish a personal, concrete adverseness that would result from the school district's action and thus failed to meet the threshold for establishing standing. The District Court was affirmed. Fleenor v. Darby School District, 2006 MT 31, 331 M 124, 128 P3d 1048 (2006), following Flesh v. Bd. of Trustees, 241 M 158, 786 P2d 4 (1990), Carter v. Dept. of Transportation, 274 M 39, 905 P2d 1102 (1995), and Bryan v. Yellowstone County Elementary School District No. 2, 2002 MT 264, 312 M 257, 60 P3d 381 (2002), and followed in Lohmeier v. Gallatin County, 2006 MT 88, 332 M 39, 135 P3d 775 (2006), and, with regard to criteria to establish standing, in Bd. of Trustees, Cut Bank Pub. Schools v. Cut Bank Pioneer Press, 2007 MT 115, 337 M 229, 160 P3d 482 (2007). Fleenor was overruled in Schoof v. Nesbit, 2014 MT 6, 373 Mont. 226, 316 P.3d 831, to the extent Fleenor requires a plaintiff in a right to know or right to participate case to allege an injury beyond failure to receive notice or to allege a personal stake in a particular governmental decision for purposes of establishing standing to pursue a claim.

Application to Uniform Parentage Act: The tolling statute, by its terms, has not been made applicable to Uniform Parentage Act cases. St. v. Wilson, 193 M 318, 631 P2d 1273, 38 St. Rep. 1299 (1981).

Writ of Review: A proceeding in District Court for Writ of Review to set aside a judgment of a Justice's Court is an "action" and the Statute of Limitations expressed by 27-2-215 (renumbered 27-2-231) applies thereto. Shaffroth v. Lamere, 104 M 175, 65 P2d 610 (1937), overruled in Jones v. District Court, 2001 MT 276, 307 M 305, 37 P3d 682 (2001), to the extent that Shaffroth holds that the general 5-year statute of limitations in 27-2-231 applies to all writs of review authorized in 27-25-102 because pursuant to former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), a petition for a writ of certiorari to review contempt proceedings must be filed with the Clerk of the District Court within 30 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding, unless the state is a party, in which case the petition must be filed within 60 days of the date on which the District Court enters the contempt finding.

Writ of Mandate as Special Proceeding: An application for a Writ of Mandate to compel the reinstatement of a discharged policeman is a special proceeding of a civil nature. State ex rel. Bennetts v. Duncan, 47 M 447, 133 P 109 (1913).

Surety's Right to Contribution: The right of a surety who has paid a judgment against his principal, himself, and other sureties to enforce contribution from a cosurety exists so long as the judgment is alive. Such a proceeding is not an ordinary action within the meaning of this section. NW. Nat'l Bank v. Great Falls Opera House Co., 23 M 1, 57 P 440 (1899).

25-1-103. When action considered pending.

Case Notes

Improvements Pending Appeal: Where company went upon land 6 days after entry of District Court judgment quieting title and expended large sums of money drilling well, it acted at its peril where case was thereafter appealed and reversed. Rieckhoff v. Consol. Gas Co., 123 M 555, 217 P2d 1076 (1950).

Pleading of Finality Not Required: Plaintiff in an action to quiet title procured under foreclosure proceeding is not required to allege in his complaint that the decree has become final within the meaning of this section. If it has not become final, it is the duty of defendant to so allege in the answer. Thomson v. Nygaard, 98 M 529, 41 P2d 1 (1935).

Judgment Roll as Evidence: It was error to admit in evidence a judgment roll in a companion case which was then pending on appeal, but nonprejudicial where, independent of the judgment roll, the proof was sufficient to show that defendant Sheriff's attempted justification in seizing personal property under a mortgage was without merit. Noe v. Matlock, 64 M 35, 208 P 591 (1922).

Appeal Time Unexpired: The court erred in striking the defense of another action pending between the same parties upon the same cause, where defendant alleged that the judgment in that action in his favor had not been satisfied, and it appeared from the record that the time for appealing had not passed. McCormick v. Shields, 63 M 9, 205 P 831 (1922).

Judgment as Final Determination: Though a judgment is defined as the final determination of the rights of the parties, the action must be regarded as still pending, within the meaning of this section, until the happening of one or more of the events enumerated therein. Peterson v. Butte, 44 M 129, 120 P 231 (1911).

Application to Successor Parties: Where a complaint shows that a former action between the same parties and for the same cause is before the Supreme Court undetermined on appeal, the first action is considered to be pending, and a demurrer to the complaint is properly sustained. The action is between the same parties where it appears from the complaint that the defendant in the action is the successor in interest of the defendant in the former action. Wetzstein v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 28 M 451, 72 P 865 (1903).

1989 Amendments: Chapter 221 in (1)(a) inserted fee for filing petition for legal separation; in (1)(h) increased fee for filing and docketing transcript of judgment or abstract of judgment from $5 to $25; in (1)(i) increased fee relating to foreclosure of a lien from $2 to $5; in (2) substituted "subsections (3) through (7)" for "subsections (3) through (6)", at end of first sentence substituted "district court fund" for "general fund of the county", and inserted second sentence relating to the general fund for District Court operations; in (4), after "marriage", inserted "or legal separation", substituted "district court fund" for "general fund of the county", and inserted second sentence relating to the general fund for District Court operations; in (5)(a), before "county general fund", inserted "district court fund or the"; inserted (5)(a)(iv) relating to entry of judgment; inserted (5)(a)(v) relating to an execution or order of sale; and inserted (7) relating to deposit of fees in the District Court fund or general fund for District Court operations. Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

Chapter 664 in middle of (4) substituted "$40" for "$75" and inserted "$35 must be remitted to the state to be deposited as provided in 19-5-404"; and at end of (6) substituted "remitted to the state to be deposited as provided in 19-5-404" for "deposited in the state general fund". Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

Review of Actuarial Valuation: Section 5, Ch. 664, L. 1989, provided: "The public employees retirement board shall provide to the 52nd legislature, by January 10, 1991, a copy of the most current actuarial valuation of the judges' retirement system. The legislature shall review the actuarial soundness of the judges' retirement system, and the 52nd legislature may eliminate or modify the effect of [this act]."

1987 Amendments: Chapter 271 in (1)(d), after "office", substituted "50 cents per page for the first five pages of each file, per request, and 25 cents per page thereafter" for "25 cents per page"; in (1)(e) increased fee to $2 from 50 cents; in (1)(f) increased fee to $1 from 50 cents; in (1)(g) substituted "search of court records, 50 cents for each year searched, not to exceed a total of $25" for "administering oath, 25 cents"; and deleted former (1)(h) that read: "(h) for taking depositions, per folio, 20 cents".

Chapter 318 inserted (1)(p) that read: "for filing a motion for substitution of a judge, $100"; near beginning of (2) inserted reference to subsection (6); and inserted (6) specifying disposition of fee for filing motion for substitution of judge.

Chapter 642 in (1)(a), in two places, increased fee for filing complaint from $25 to $60; in (1)(b) increased appearance fee from $15 to $40; in (1)(c) increased fee for entry of judgment from $10 to $25; in (1)(m) increased fee in estate proceedings from $35 to $50; in (2) changed reference to subsections (3) and (4) to reference to subsections (3) through (6); and inserted (5) (see 1987 Session Law for language addressing allocation of a portion of certain fees for District Court operations).

Chapter 645 near beginning of (1)(a) inserted "except a petition for dissolution of marriage" and at end substituted "a fee of $100" for "an additional fee of $30"; and in (4) at beginning deleted "additional" before "fee", increased from $25 to $75 the amount deposited in state general fund, inserted "and $20 must be deposited in and credited to the general fund of the county", and made minor change in phraseology.

Termination Provision Repealed: Section 2, Ch. 645, L. 1987, repealed sec. 13, Ch. 610, L. 1985, which terminated the amendment of this section by sec. 7, Ch. 610, L. 1985.

1985 Amendment: In (1)(a) at end raised fee for petition for dissolution of marriage from $25 to $30; in (2) inserted reference to subsection (4); and in (4), at beginning substituted "Of the" for "The", near middle after "marriage", inserted "$25", and after "general fund", inserted requirement that $5 be deposited in children's trust fund account. Amendment terminates January 1, 1990 (sec. 13, Ch. 610, L. 1985).

1983 Amendments: Chapter 10 inserted (1)(o) requiring $35 fee for items required in 72-4-303.

Chapter 12, in (1)(p) and (3), inserted the language relating to declaration of marriage without solemnization.

Chapter 524, in (1)(a), increased fees for plaintiffs and intervenors from $20 to $25; in (1)(b) increased fee for defendants from $10 to $15; in (2) decreased percentage of fees going to county general fund from 40% to 32%.

Chapter 709, inserted at end of (1)(a), "and for filing a petition for dissolution of marriage, an additional fee of $25"; in (2) substituted "must" for "shall" in two places; and inserted (4) requiring additional fee for dissolution of marriage to be deposited in state general fund.

1981 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 493, in (1)(e), deleted "or oath and jurat"; increased marriage license fee from $15 to $30; at beginning of (2) inserted exception; and added subsection (3) regarding disposition of marriage license fee.

Chapter 575 amended this section in the same manner as Ch. 493 except that the fee was increased to $25 and, in (3), $9 was to be deposited to general fund. Because Ch. 575 was a Code Commissioner bill intended to make nonsubstantive clarifications and because the dollar figures of Ch. 575 are included in the higher figures of Ch. 493, the dollar figures of Ch. 493 were chosen by the Code Commissioner in preparing the composite section.

Coordination With Other Bill: Section 81, Ch. 575, L. 1981, provided: "If Senate Bill No. 121 which bill would generally amend the fees of the clerk of district court, including those fees specified in section 80, is passed and approved, the amendments in subsections (1) through (3) of section 80 are void and of no effect." Senate Bill 121 was not passed and approved.

Case Notes

Perfection of Appeal From Small Claims Court — No Requirement to File Undertaking or Pay Transfer Fee: Petersen cited 25-33-201 and 25-35-807 in arguing that the appeal from Small Claims Court filed by Aladdin Steel Products, Inc. (Aladdin), was deficient for failing to file an undertaking. However, 25-33-201 applies to appeals from Justice's Court and City Court, and 25-35-807 concerns proceedings to enforce or collect a judgment and is not relevant to perfecting an appeal from Small Claims Court. There is in fact no statutory requirement to file an undertaking on appeal from Small Claims Court, and Aladdin's appeal was not deficient for failing to do so. Further, although the transfer fee required under subsection (1)(k) of this section does apply to appeals from Small Claims Court, payment of the fee is not a prerequisite to perfecting an appeal. It is the duty of the Clerk of the District Court to collect the fee, and that duty is unrelated to the duty of the appealing party to perfect an appeal under 25-35-804. Thus, an appeal from Small Claims Court to District Court is properly perfected upon filing a notice of appeal under 25-35-804 and requesting that the Small Claims Court transmit the record to the District Court. Petersen v. Aladdin Steel Prod., Inc., 1999 MT 262, 296 M 394, 989 P2d 385, 56 St. Rep. 1061 (1999).

Clerk's Refusal to File Until Fee Paid: It was proper for the Clerk of the District Court to hold proffered answer in suspense and not file it until the officially required filing fee had been paid. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982).

Transcript in Special Proceedings Exempted: As this section makes no provision for the collection of a fee for making a transcript in special proceedings, such a fee is not a necessary disbursement, and the clerk is not authorized to collect the same. State ex rel. Healy v. District Court, 26 M 224, 67 P 114 (1902), 26 M 224, 68 P 470 (1902); State ex rel. Baker v. District Court, 24 M 425, 62 P 688 (1900), distinguished in King v. District Court, 25 M 1, 63 P 402 (1901). But see State ex rel. Hall v. District Court, 111 M 619, 115 P2d 92 (1941).

Preparation and Authentication of Transcripts on Appeal: Transcripts on appeal may be prepared by the parties or their counsel, but the authentication must be made by the clerk, after comparison of them with the original files, by his certificate under the seal of the District Court. Shadville v. Barker, 26 M 45, 66 P 496 (1901), 26 M 45, 66 P 761 (1901).

Attorney General's Opinions

Fee for Filing Petition for Contested Amendment of Parenting Plan Not Applicable to Petition to Modify Child Support: Modification of child support pursuant to 40-4-208 is a separate procedure that does not necessarily entail amendment of a parenting plan pursuant to 40-4-219. Therefore, for filing purposes, a petition to modify child support is not considered a petition for amendment of a parenting plan, and it is inappropriate for a Clerk of Court to collect the $120 statutory fee for filing a petition for a contested amendment of a parenting plan under subsection (1)(a) of this section upon the filing of a petition to modify child support in an existing cause. 47 A.G. Op. 14 (1998).

District Court Clerk Not Authorized to Charge Nonparty State Agency for Copies and Certification of Public Records: Access to and fees for copying public court records are not absolute and are controlled by state law. Fees allowed by law are enumerated in this section, and the collection of those fees is mandatory. Fees for preparing copies and for certification of documents are also specified in this section. Section 25-10-405 clarifies that fees are collectible from state agencies that are a party to an action but has no effect in cases in which the agency is not a litigant. In those cases, the rule in 7-4-2516 applies, exempting agencies of state and county government from paying official fees. Therefore, a Clerk of District Court may not charge a nonparty state agency for copies and certification of public District Court records. 47 A.G. Op. 3 (1997).

Distribution of Foreign Judgment Filing Fee: The $60 fee collected by the Clerk of Court at the time of filing a foreign judgment must be distributed in accordance with the provisions of subsection (2) of this section. 44 A.G. Op. 38 (1992).

Fees Collectible Upon Filing of Foreign Judgment: Once a foreign judgment has been properly filed pursuant to 25-9-503, the Clerk of Court is required to treat the foreign judgment as a domestic judgment. The $60 fee paid at the time of filing replaces the filing fee paid at the commencement of an action or appearance of a defendant under 25-1-201(1)(a), the fee collected on the entry of judgment from the prevailing party under 25-1-201(1)(c), and the fee for filing and docketing a transcript of judgment or abstract of judgment from another court under 25-1-201(1)(h). The Clerk should therefore collect the $60 fee required in this section, the $5 fee for issuing an execution or order of sale on a foreclosure of a lien under 25-1-201(1)(i), and any other fees for services requested by the judgment creditor in the enforcement of the judgment. 44 A.G. Op. 38 (1992).

Disposition of Money Received by County Officers for Preparation of Abstracts: Preparation of abstracts by a Clerk of District Court, a County Clerk, or their respective deputies is an official service of the office. Therefore, compensation paid to them by title companies, credit bureaus, banks, realtors, and others for preparation on a regular basis of abstracts of instruments recorded in their respective offices may not be retained for their personal use, but rather must be paid to the county general fund, District Court fund, or state, as provided by law. 43 A.G. Op. 75 (1990).

Commencement Filing Fee Not Chargeable for Certain Postdissolution Proceedings: The Attorney General relied on the holding in In re Marriage of Billings, 189 M 520, 616 P2d 1104 (1980), in finding that a District Court Clerk may not charge a commencement filing fee for postdissolution of marriage action that is brought under the same cause number as the marital dissolution proceeding and that remains under the continuing jurisdiction of the District Court. 43 A.G. Op. 72 (1990).

Appearance Fee Required of URESA Respondent — Affidavit Excusing Payment: The respondent in a URESA action is required to pay a $40 appearance fee. However, the respondent may be excused from payment upon filing an affidavit in accordance with 25-10-404. 43 A.G. Op. 3 (1989).

Fee for Substitution of Judge Applicable Only to Civil Actions: The fee imposed by this section for filing a motion for substitution of a District Court Judge applies only in civil actions, and no such fee is imposed in criminal actions. 42 A.G. Op. 77 (1988).

Dissolution Fee Not Chargeable Under Motion to Convert: A District Court Clerk may not charge a fee for filing a petition for dissolution under 25-1-201(1)(a) when a motion is made under 40-4-108(2) to convert a decree of legal separation to a decree of dissolution because the motion to convert is a continuation of the initial separation action and does not entail commencement of a new action. 42 A.G. Op. 56 (1988).

Disposition of District Court Fees: Fees collected by Clerks of the District Courts do not accrue as a revenue item to the District Court Fund in those counties adopting a 6-mill District Court levy. The Board of County Commissioners, however, may supplement the 6-mill levy with General Fund revenues in financing the District Court Fund. (See 38 A.G. Op. 31.) 38 A.G. Op. 52 (1979).

Domiciliary Foreign Personal Representative: Prior to the 1983 amendment, 25-1-201 did not authorize the Clerk of the District Court to charge a domiciliary foreign personal representative for filing authenticated copies of his appointment, any official bond, and an inventory and appraisal of the property of the nonresident decedent located in the state under 72-4-306. 37 A.G. Op. 111 (1978).

Petition for Dissolution of Marriage — Filing Fees: The Clerk of the District Court cannot require a $20 (increased to $60 in 1987) filing fee from each petitioner when one petition for dissolution of marriage is filed listing a petitioner and copetitioner. 37 A.G. Op. 128 (1978).

Filing Fees — Defendant or Respondent: The Clerk of the District Court must collect from each defendant or respondent a $10 (increased to $40 in 1987) fee on his initial appearance. 37 A.G. Op. 136 (1978).

Who Exempted From Fee Payments: The Department of Natural Resources and Conservation is not required to pay the statutory fees of the County Clerk for recording water use permits or of the Clerk of District Court for furnishing copies of decrees affecting water rights. However, cities and counties are required to pay the fees prescribed by the Board of Natural Resources and Conservation (now Department of Natural Resources and Conservation) for filing water right applications. 37 A.G. Op. 146 (1978).

Declaration of Marriage Without Solemnization: A marriage license is not a requirement for a valid marriage by written declaration. Prior to the 1983 amendment, no fee could be charged for filing the declaration of marriage without solemnization. 37 A.G. Op. 12 (1977).

Multiple Parties — Filing Fees: This section permits the Clerk of the District Court to collect only one filing fee when multiple plaintiffs or defendants file a single complaint or answer or motion to dismiss respectively. 35 A.G. Op. 94 (1974).

25-1-202. Additional filing fee.

Compiler's Comments

2001 Amendment: Chapter 585 in second sentence substituted "must be forwarded by the clerk to the state treasurer for deposit in the state general fund" for "must be paid by the clerk into the treasury of the county where the action is filed, to be applied to the payment of the salary of the reporter"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2002.

Code Commissioner Instruction: Pursuant to sec. 47, Ch. 257, L. 2001, in version effective July 1, 2002, the code commissioner changed "state treasurer" to "department of revenue".

Saving Clause: Section 55, Ch. 585, L. 2001, was a saving clause.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 384 near beginning of first sentence increased the required fee from $10 to $20; and made minor changes in style.

1989 Amendment: Substituted first sentence relating to $10 filing fee for former language that read: "In every issue of fact in civil actions tried before the court or jury, before the trial commences, there must be paid into the hands of the clerk of the court by each party to the suit the sum of $3"; near middle of second sentence substituted "where the action is filed" for "where the cause is tried"; and made minor changes in phraseology. Amendment effective July 1, 1989.

Stenographer's Per Diem: The fees paid stenographers for per diem refer to the sum required by this section to be paid by each party at the beginning of the trial. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co. v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 33 M 400, 84 P 706 (1905).

Court-Appointed Stenographers — Payment of Fees: The fees for stenographers must be paid to official stenographers appointed by the court under authority of 3-5-601. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co. v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 27 M 288, 70 P 1114 (1902).

Attorney General's Opinions

Court Reporter Filing Fee — Clerk of District Court to Collect Fee in Appeal From Justice's Court or City Court — Appeal Is "Civil Action" Under Statutes: The Attorney General was asked whether a Clerk of District Court must collect the $20 filing fee, required by this section and used to help pay the salary of the court reporter, in appeals filed in District Court from judgments of a Justice's or City Court. The Attorney General concluded that: (1) a private legal action in a Justice's or City Court is a civil action; (2) an appeal from a Justice's or City Court may include appeal of a civil action; (3) an appeal from either of those courts results in most cases in a new trial in District Court and that the need for a court reporter in that instance is obvious; and (4) the payment of the additional $20 filing fee required by this section is mandatory. 48 A.G. Op. 1 (1999).

Part 3
Time

25-1-301. Extension of time.

Compiler's Comments

1981 Amendment: Substituted "Subject to Rule 6(b), M.R.Civ.P., whenever this code requires or allows an act to be done at or within a specified time, which act" for "When an act to be done, as provided in this code"; deleted "or bills of exceptions" after "statements".

Case Notes

Death of Attorney as Reason for Extension: There was no merit to an appellant's argument in opposition to a motion to strike a bill of exceptions that because an extension of time could not exceed 90 days without consent of the adverse party, pursuant to 25-1-301, and because he could not get an extension until a new attorney for the adverse party was appointed, pursuant to 37-61-405, he was prevented from making a timely filing of his bill. Even though appellee's attorney may have died, 37-61-405 is not designed to enable a prospective appellant to disregard the time limitation on filing a bill by delaying notice to the adverse party to appoint a new attorney. Berg v. Fraser, 136 M 525, 349 P2d 317 (1960).

Notice of Appeal Excluded: This section makes it clear that the time prescribed by law for the serving of notices of appeal may not be extended thereunder, for notices of appeal are specifically excluded from the operation of the statute. Thus the courts are denied the authority to extend the maximum time prescribed by statute for the service or filing of a notice of appeal. State ex rel. Reid v. District Court, 126 M 489, 255 P2d 693 (1953).

Unauthorized Extensions — Loss of Jurisdiction: Where the District Court granted extensions of time for the preparation of a bill of exceptions upon motion for new trial, amounting in all to 94 days, without the consent of the adverse party, contrary to the express provision of this section which limits such extensions to 90 days, it lost jurisdiction to determine the motion. Evans v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 51 M 107, 149 P 715 (1915).

Constitutionality Not Considered: The constitutionality of a statute that attempts to give a court power to extend time will not be considered by the Supreme Court on appeal unless the necessity of passing upon that question is urgent and imperative. Sanden v. N. Pac. Ry., 39 M 209, 102 P 145 (1909).

Additional Extensions Following Stipulation: Where, by stipulation of counsel, the time for the preparation and service of a statement on motion for a new trial had been extended for 90 days, the District Court had power to grant a further extension, without the consent of the adverse party, and upon good cause shown, within the limit of 90 days prescribed by this section, and service made during the time so granted by the court was timely. Nord v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 33 M 464, 84 P 1116 (1905).

Application to County Treasurer: Under this section a County Treasurer is not required to furnish an undertaking on attachment in an action brought in his official capacity for the benefit of the county to recover on an indemnity bond against loss of county funds in a bank. Jenkins v. First Nat'l Bank, 73 M 110, 236 P 1085 (1925).

Application to Examining Board: Under this section, the Board of Examiners for Nurses (now Board of Nursing), being a public office and its members public officers, is relieved from filing a bond on appeal from a judgment compelling it, by Writ of Mandate, to recommend to the Governor an applicant for certification as a registered nurse. State ex rel. Scollard v. Bd. of Examiners, 52 M 91, 156 P 124 (1916).

Application to Mayor of City: On appeal from an adverse judgment in an action against the Mayor of a city in his official capacity, he is not under this section required to furnish an undertaking. State ex rel. Dwyer v. Duncan, 49 M 54, 140 P 95 (1914).

Notice to Attorney General

25-1-502. Notice of appeal to be served on attorney general when state is party to judicial review.

Compiler's Comments

2001 Amendment: Chapter 535 substituted language in (1) and (2) expanding the requirements for notice to the attorney general when a state agency is party to a proceeding for which judicial review is sought for former language that read: "When a department or board of this state appeals from a judgment or order entered in any court of this state, a copy of the notice of appeal must be served on the attorney general." Amendment effective May 1, 2001.

Applicability: Section 3, Ch. 535, L. 2001, provided: "[This act] applies to any action or other proceeding for which the time for an appeal has not yet begun to run on [the effective date of this act]." Effective May 1, 2001.

Case Notes

Standing of Attorney General to Appeal P.S.C. Order — P.S.C. Appeal Untimely: The Montana Power Company (M.P.C.) applied to the Public Service Commission (P.S.C.) for a rate increase of over $96.3 million. The P.S.C. granted only $4.1 million and denied in toto M.P.C.'s request to recover costs associated with Colstrip Unit 3. The M.P.C. appealed to District Court for review under 2-4-701. The judge reversed the P.S.C. order. The Attorney General filed notice of appeal. More than 60 days after the judge's order was entered, the P.S.C. also filed notice of appeal. The M.P.C. filed a motion to dismiss the appeal of the Attorney General for lack of standing and the appeal of the P.S.C. as untimely. The Supreme Court granted the motion, holding that the Attorney General had no standing to represent the state on appeal since it was not an aggrieved party or a party to the proceedings before the District Court and because, in his official capacity, the Attorney General may not appeal a decision that is within the discretion of the P.S.C. as a party to the action. The appeal of the P.S.C. was untimely, although within 7 days of the notice of appeal filed by the Attorney General. The latter appeal being invalid, the P.S.C. appeal would have to fall within the 60-day rule. Mont. Power Co. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 218 M 471, 709 P2d 995, 42 St. Rep. 1750 (1985).

Part 1
Proper Place of Trial — Venue

Part Compiler's Comments

Recommendations for Revisions in Venue Statutes Prepared by the Montana Supreme Court Commission on the Rules of Evidence: Chapter 432, L. 1985, was enacted based on recommendations to the Legislature as indicated in the following preface to the report that accompanied the introduced bill (Senate Bill 91):

"This report and the accompanying draft bill are submitted to partially fulfill the request of Senate Joint Resolution 24 of the 48th Legislature that the Supreme Court Commission on the Rules of Evidence prepare draft legislation for submission to the 49th Legislature to provide that "statutory provisions on venue ... accurately reflect the current usages and interpretations of those laws ...."

The Resolution recognized that the existing statutes "no longer reflect on their face the present state of the law," and expressed a desire that new draft statutes be prepared incorporating the "logical, useful, and consistent" rules and practices which have evolved by judicial construction of the present laws.

The current venue statutes were adopted in 1864 at Bannack and are substantially the same today as when they were enacted. Throughout the 120 years of their existence these venue statutes have been the subject of dozens, perhaps hundreds, of appeals to the Montana Supreme Court. Many of the appeals were caused by the silence of the statutes on principles necessary to their operation; other appeals resulted from the ambiguity of certain fundamental language.

The commands of various venue sections that particular kinds of cases "shall," "may," or "must" be tried in specified counties resulted in seemingly unending litigation. Concerning one of these sections, Justice Sheehy, writing for a unanimous court, complained in 1978:

Possibly no statute has spawned more litigation in this state than section 93-2904 relating to the proper place of trial. Year after year we are called upon to interpret anew what are seemingly simple code provisions and to explain again the impact of our decisions under the statute. (Clark Fork Paving, Inc. v. Atlas Concrete, 178 Mont. 8, 582 P.2d 779.)

Justice Sheehy went on to extract, from what he termed "the mountain of cases which have arisen," the long-standing rules that decided the issue, and restated them for the thirtieth or fortieth time.

The Clark Fork case illustrates the fundamental problem: basic rules exist but many cannot be found in the statutes. They must be located in, and sifted from, a "mountain of cases." When attorneys have not found the applicable Supreme Court opinion in the 190-odd volumes of Montana Reports (or hope that their opponents have not), the same legal questions are hauled before the Court again and again and again.

The new statutes proposed in this draft have three objectives:

(1) to include in the Montana Code Annotated those rules which have been declared and are settled by the Supreme Court but are not now stated in the Code;

(2) to change the language, without changing the meaning, of the sections that have caused the most litigation (primarily by substituting the designation "proper place of trial" for the ambiguous command that cases "shall," "may," or "must" be tried in particular counties);

(3) to settle the few matters where there is still a seeming ambiguity, following general principles along the lines that the Court seems to feel would be best derived from what the Court has held in other situations."

25-2-112. Designation of proper place of trial not jurisdictional.

Evidence Commission Recommendations for Revisions

Explanation: This new section is intended to codify the results of a series of cases dealing with recurrent problems caused by the form and language of the current statutes. Although intended only to set rules of venue, the phrasing of the present statutes has caused many litigants to believe they prescribe jurisdictional requirements. The Supreme Court has had to rule repeatedly that these statutes do not in any way affect the jurisdiction of District Courts to try cases brought before them. All District Courts have equal power to try any action of which the district courts, as a group, have jurisdiction (Miller v. Miller, 189 Mont. 356, 616 P.2d 313 (1980); State ex rel. Foster v. Mountjoy, 83 Mont. 162, 271 P. 446 (1928)). Even if a court is not the proper one as designated by the venue statutes, it can try a case if there is no objection from a party through a motion for a change of venue (Miller v. Miller, supra; Bullard v. Zimmerman, 82 Mont. 434, 268 P. 512 (1928)). Unless there is a demand by one of the parties, a court is not authorized to order the case transferred to another county or to refuse to try the case (State ex rel. Gnose v. District Court, 30 Mont. 188, 75 P. 1109 (1904); Danielson v. Danielson, 62 Mont. 83, 203 P. 506 (1921)).

Since these questions have arisen repeatedly over a long period of time, it seems sensible to include this or a similar provision to prevent endless recurrences in the future.

Case Notes

Venue Versus Jurisdiction — Failure to Move for Change of Venue at Initial Appearance Constituting Waiver of Right to Later Object to Venue: A mother filed in District Court in Judith Basin County for review of a child support modification consent order by the Department of Public Health and Human Services Child Support Enforcement Division (CSED) reducing the father's child support obligation. CSED moved for dismissal, claiming that the mother had failed to exhaust her administrative remedies. The District Court granted the motion based on lack of jurisdiction, concluding that the petition should have been filed in a different county. The mother appealed, contending that the court confused the concepts of venue and jurisdiction and contending that dismissal of the petition for lack of jurisdiction was erroneous as a matter of law. The Supreme Court agreed and reversed. The District Court's interpretation of 2-4-702 as a requirement that a petition for judicial review must be filed in the correct venue for the court to obtain jurisdiction was incorrect as a matter of law. Jurisdiction is a court's authority to hear and determine a case that goes to the power of the court and cannot be waived or conferred by consent of the parties when there is no basis for jurisdiction under the law, while venue refers to the place where a case is to be heard or where the power of the court is to be exercised and is a personal privilege of defendant that may be waived and that is considered waived pursuant to former Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), unless a motion to change venue is made at defendant's initial appearance. Thus, the mother's petition for judicial review vested the Judith Basin County District Court with jurisdiction under 2-4-702. Whether venue was proper in the county where the petition was filed was an entirely different issue. Section 2-4-702 also sets forth the proper place where a contested administrative decision can be heard, providing that the petition must be filed in the District Court for the county where the petitioner resides or has a principal place of business or where the agency maintains its principal office. Upon proper motion, the matter should have been transferred to the proper county, but CSED failed to move for a change of venue at the initial appearance, thereby waiving its right to later object to venue, opting instead to move to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction. Therefore, Judith Basin County was a proper place for trial absent agreement by the parties to transfer venue. In re Support Obligation of McGurran, 2002 MT 144, 310 M 268, 49 P3d 626 (2002).

25-2-113. Power of court to change place of trial.

Evidence Commission Recommendations for Revisions

Explanation: This section is simply a consolidation into a single section a principle now expressed separately and not very clearly in each statute. Every venue statute now, after designating the proper county or counties for particular purposes, includes a provision that it is "subject, however, to the power of the court to change the place of trial as provided in this code." The Supreme Court has had to state on many occasions that the clause is intended only to preserve the trial courts' discretionary power of granting changes of venue to secure impartial trials or to promote convenience of witnesses or the ends of justice. The proposed section incorporates these declarations and should make the meaning clear.

Case Notes

District Court Authorized to Transfer Venue — No Authority to Transfer to Specific Department of Another District: The Commissioner of Political Practices filed a civil enforcement action in Lewis and Clark County District Court against the plaintiff, who was a candidate for a Senate district that included all of Park County and most of Sweet Grass County. After the filing, the plaintiff initiated a declaratory judgment action in Park County District Court, raising issues similar to those raised in the enforcement action. The Commissioner answered the declaratory action and filed a motion to transfer the declaratory judgment action from Park County to Lewis and Clark County pursuant to Rule 42(a)(2), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). The Commissioner withdrew his motion to transfer, but the Park County District Court ordered, sua sponte, that the case be transferred to a specific department within Lewis and Clark County District Court. On appeal, the Supreme Court upheld the transfer, reasoning that 25-2-201 requires a venue change if the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by the change. However, the Supreme Court reversed the Park County District Court's transfer of the action to a specific department within Lewis and Clark County District Court, as issues of consolidation remained with the District Court Judges of Lewis and Clark County. Wagman v. Motl, 2015 MT 168, 379 Mont. 439, 352 P.3d 609.

25-2-114. Right of defendant to move for change of place of trial.

Evidence Commission Recommendations for Revisions

Explanation: This section and section 5 [25-2-115] specify that the right to move for a change of place of trial on the ground that the action is brought in the wrong county belongs exclusively to a defendant. It might be argued that this right should extend to some other classes of litigants, such as involuntary plaintiffs under Rule 19(a), M.R.Civ.P. or some intervenors (Rule 24, M.R.Civ.P.). The courts have always held that such parties must accept the status of the ongoing action as they find it at the time of their entry. Further, Rule 12(b)(ii), M.R.Civ.P. provides that only defendants can move for a change of venue on this ground, which is consistent with all of the Supreme Court holdings.

Case Notes

Venue in Action Naming Two Defendants — Venue Proper for One Defendant Proper for Both — Improper Change of Venue: Plaintiff brought complaints against two employees who were allegedly involved in kickback schemes involving the purchase and sale of certain feed ingredients on plaintiff's behalf. Under the allegations, no county was a proper venue for both defendants on all claims. One defendant was granted a change of venue to the county where that employee performed his employment contract, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. Under 25-2-116, if an action names two or more defendants, a county that is a proper place of trial for any defendant is proper for all defendants. Because the action as a whole could have been brought in the county of residence of either defendant, the change of venue was not proper under the prerequisite in 25-2-114 that applies when an action is brought in a county that is not a proper place of trial. The county where plaintiff brought the action was a proper venue, and the case was remanded for reinstatement of the original county as the proper venue. Farmers Union Ass'n v. Paquin, 2009 MT 305, 352 M 390, 217 P3d 74 (2009).

Change of Venue on Multiple Claims to Defendants' County of Residence While Allowing Plaintiff to Pursue Venue Established by Contract Proper: The franchise agreement between one plaintiff and defendants provided that plaintiff could elect to initiate an action concerning breach of the agreement in Yellowstone County. Franchise agreements with other plaintiffs provided that Missoula County would be the place of venue. All plaintiffs joined in a suit against defendants, which was filed in Yellowstone County. Defendants moved for a change of venue to Missoula County where the company headquarters were located, and the motion was granted. Plaintiff whose agreement allowed for a Yellowstone County venue was allowed to sever its claims and keep its action in that county if desired. Plaintiffs appealed the venue change, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The determination of whether a county is the proper place for trial is a question of law involving application of the venue statutes to pleaded facts. The general rule in 25-2-118 provides that the proper place for trial in civil actions is the defendant's county of residence. Additionally, in a case involving multiple claims, 25-2-116 provides that a party that is entitled to a change of venue on any claim is entitled to a change of venue on the entire action, subject to the power of the trial court to separate claims or issues for trial. Therefore, the District Court did not err in moving the venue to Missoula County where defendants resided and in allowing the plaintiff with a contractual provision for trial in Yellowstone County to pursue its action there. DML, Inc. v. Fulbright, 2005 MT 204, 328 M 212, 119 P3d 93 (2005), followed in Buhmann v. St., 2008 MT 465, 348 M 205, 201 P3d 70 (2008), and distinguishing Wentz v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 14, 928 P2d 237 (1996), and Liang v. Lai, 2004 MT 188, 322 M 199, 94 P3d 759 (2004).

Location of Resident Agent of Foreign Corporation Proper Venue in Tort Action: Nelson worked for a Minnesota corporation at a refinery in Yellowstone County. Nelson brought a tort action based on exposure to asbestos during employment, naming as defendants three Minnesota corporations that operated the refinery and two individuals from Yellowstone County who worked as plant managers. Nelson resided in Missoula County, and the corporations' resident agent was located in Lewis and Clark County. Nelson brought the action in Lewis and Clark County. The corporations moved for a change of venue to Yellowstone County, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. A defendant may move for a change of venue when an action is not brought in a county that is statutorily designated as a proper place for trial, and the motion must be granted if the county in which the action is filed is not a proper place for trial. If more than one county is proper, the action may be brought in any of those counties and a motion for change of venue may not be granted. The general rule for determining venue is 25-2-118, but there are statutory exceptions to the general rule for specific types of actions. Venue rules for tort actions are in 25-2-122, including venue for tort actions against a foreign corporation, one of which is the county in which the corporation's resident agent is located. Thus, Lewis and Clark County was a proper venue for trial, and the District Court did not err in denying the motion for change of venue. Nelson v. Cenex, Inc., 2004 MT 170, 322 M 54, 97 P3d 1073 (2004), distinguishing Platt v. Sears, 222 M 184, 721 P2d 336 (1986), and followed in Ward v. Johnson, 2012 MT 96, 365 Mont. 19, 277 P.3d 1216.

Action Filed in Proper County — Motion to Remove to Another Proper County Properly Denied: Once an action has been filed in a proper county, the District Court cannot grant a motion to have it removed to another county of proper venue. Petersen v. Tucker, 228 M 393, 742 P2d 483, 44 St. Rep. 1625 (1987).

25-2-115. Multiple proper counties.

Evidence Commission Recommendations for Revisions

Explanation: Present statutes do not deal with this situation. This section codifies a number of Supreme Court holdings that do. In many cases (particularly tort and contract actions) alternative venues are authorized, but the manner of choosing between them is not stated. A sizeable amount of litigation has resulted. All of the cases have held that the plaintiff has the initial choice and, if he selects a county that is proper, the issue is closed, but that if the plaintiff files the action in a county that is not one of those designated, he has waived the right to choose, which passes to the defendant. Defendant can then decide to which of the proper counties he wants the case transferred. Of the many cases dealing with the problem, Seifert v. Gehle, 133 Mont. 320, 323 P.2d 269 (1958), a tort action, gives the clearest statement:

In this case the statute means that either the county of defendant's residence or the county where the tort was committed is a proper county for the trial of the action, and had the plaintiff chosen either of those counties, the defendant could not have had it removed.

In this case plaintiff waived his right to have it tried in one of the proper counties. Therefore, the defendant has the right upon proper demand to have the place of trial changed either to the county where he resides or to the county where the tort was committed, whichever he elects.

This proposed section will preserve the rule of Seifert and other cases. It allows the plaintiff first choice among the proper venues and provides that a correct choice by him cannot be changed. If the plaintiff's selection is not one of the designated counties, the initiative passes to the defendant. He can move for a change to the proper county of his choice, and section 25-2-201 MCA requires that the trial court grant the motion.

Case Notes

Venue for Parenting Plan Proper Where Filed — Transfer of Venue Improper: The grandmother filed a petition for a parenting plan in Flathead County, where she and the child resided. The mother filed a motion for a change of venue to Hill County, where she resided. The District Court granted the change of venue, believing that 1-1-215 required the change of venue. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the change of venue, ruling that under 40-4-211 venue was proper in either county. In re S.C.B., 2015 MT 19, 378 Mont. 89, 342 P.3d 46.

Negligence in Motor Vehicle Accident — Venue Proper in County Where Collision Occurred, Not Where Vehicle Came to Rest: The parties were involved in a car accident in Teton County. As a result of the collision, the plaintiff's vehicle was propelled over the county line into Cascade County. The plaintiff filed a negligence claim in Cascade County against the driver of the other vehicle. The defendant filed a motion to change venue, arguing that Cascade County was not a proper venue because the tort did not occur there and no defendant resided there. The plaintiff urged the District Court to apply the rationale in Circle S Seeds of Mont., Inc. v. Mont. Merchandising, Inc., 2006 MT 311, 335 Mont. 16, 157 P.3d 671, to conclude that venue was proper in Cascade County. The court declined and granted the defendant's motion to change venue. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed and agreed that although the plaintiff suffered injuries in Cascade County, for purposes of venue, the tort was committed in the county where the cars collided. Yeager v. Morris, 2013 MT 44, 369 Mont. 90, 296 P.3d 1164.

Alleged Misrepresentation of Nature of Horse — County Where Contract Performed Considered Place Where Tort Committed for Venue Purposes: Plaintiff contracted to purchase a gentle, broken horse in Yellowstone County and was subsequently injured while riding the horse in Silver Bow County, where plaintiff filed a tort action alleging misrepresentation of the nature of the horse. Defendants moved for a change of venue to Yellowstone County, but the motion was denied, so defendants appealed and the Supreme Court reversed. General application of tort venue law requires that a tort action be filed either in the county where the defendant resides or in the county where the offending actions of the tort were taken or committed. In this case, the contract for sale of the horse was performed in Yellowstone County, making that county a proper venue for a contract claim. Further, the alleged tortious conduct of misrepresentation of the nature of the horse also occurred in Yellowstone County. Thus, the tort was committed in Yellowstone County for venue purposes. Deichl v. Savage, 2009 MT 293, 352 M 282, 216 P3d 749 (2009).

General Determination of Venue in Civil Actions — Exceptions: The county where the defendant resides generally provides the proper place for trial in a civil action; however, Montana law provides exceptions to the general rule. The proper place for trial of a tort action is where the defendant resides or where the tort was committed. Venue is proper for an action for the recovery of a statutory penalty in the county where the cause or some part of the cause arose. When venue is proper in more than one county, then any one of the designated counties is a proper place for trial. Circle S Seeds of Mont., Inc. v. Mont. Merchandising, Inc., 2006 MT 311, 335 M 16, 157 P3d 671 (2006).

Venue When No Mandatory Penalty Exists — Trademark Infringement: Plaintiff corporation brought a trademark infringement action in Gallatin County. Defendant corporation sought a change of venue to Cascade County because defendant resided there and because any alleged tort occurred there. The District Court applied 25-2-124 and determined that because 30-13-335 imposed a statutory penalty for trademark infringement, venue was proper in Gallatin County as the place where the cause or some part of the cause arose. Defendant appealed on grounds that the court should have applied 25-2-122 because the claims were based in tort and because any alleged tort would have been committed in defendant's business offices in Cascade County where the decision to use the trademark originated. The Supreme Court found that the penalty in 30-13-335 was optional and at the discretion of the trial court, rather than mandatory. Because the statute failed to exact punishment, it was error for the District Court to apply 25-2-124 to determine venue because a statutory penalty was not imposed. The Supreme Court then addressed defendant's argument that any alleged tort was committed in Cascade County. Pursuant to the holding in BHC Holding Co. v. Hurley, 242 M 4, 788 P2d 322 (1990), tort is committed, for purposes of determining venue, where there is a concurrence of breach of obligation and the occasion of damages. Defendant may have made the decision to use the trademark at its offices in Cascade County, making Cascade County a proper venue for the case, but that action simply started in motion defendant's duty not to interfere with plaintiff's business. The alleged breach reached fruition when defendant widely distributed its products containing the allegedly illegal trademark to the marketplace, including Gallatin County, the location of plaintiff's principal place of business and the place where plaintiff allegedly suffered lost profits and other related damages. Thus, the concurrence of breach of obligation and the occasion of damages occurred in Gallatin County, rendering Gallatin County a proper venue. Therefore, even though the District Court improperly applied 25-2-124, its determination that Gallatin County was a proper venue was legally correct under 25-2-122, so the District Court was affirmed. Circle S Seeds of Mont., Inc. v. Mont. Merchandising, Inc., 2006 MT 311, 335 M 16, 157 P3d 671 (2006).

Venue Determined by Allegations in Complaint — Venue for Case Against Defunct Corporation: In an asbestos contamination case, 47 plaintiffs sued 53 defendants in Cascade County, including one defendant, Robinson Insulation Company (Robinson), that was a defunct corporation that had resided in and operated out of Cascade County. Defendant Atlantic Richfield Company (Atlantic) moved for a change of venue to Flathead County, contending that Robinson did not reside in Cascade County at the commencement of the action and had been improperly joined so that venue could be maintained in Cascade County. The motion for change of venue was denied, and Atlantic appealed. The Supreme Court noted that a motion to change the place of trial brought in a proper county may not be granted and that for tort actions the proper venue is the county where any defendant resided at the commencement of the action or the county where the tort was committed. The court applied the principles of Petersen v. Tucker, 228 M 393, 742 P2d 483 (1987), in holding that the court will not go beyond the allegations in the complaint to determine questions of venue. Plaintiffs named Robinson as a defendant in both the original and amended complaint, and the District Court did not dismiss Robinson as a defendant, so Cascade

County was a proper venue for the case. Denial of the motion for change of venue was affirmed. Allen v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2005 MT 281, 329 M 230, 124 P3d 132 (2005).

Change of Venue on Multiple Claims to Defendants' County of Residence While Allowing Plaintiff to Pursue Venue Established by Contract Proper: The franchise agreement between one plaintiff and defendants provided that plaintiff could elect to initiate an action concerning breach of the agreement in Yellowstone County. Franchise agreements with other plaintiffs provided that Missoula County would be the place of venue. All plaintiffs joined in a suit against defendants, which was filed in Yellowstone County. Defendants moved for a change of venue to Missoula County where the company headquarters were located, and the motion was granted. Plaintiff whose agreement allowed for a Yellowstone County venue was allowed to sever its claims and keep its action in that county if desired. Plaintiffs appealed the venue change, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The determination of whether a county is the proper place for trial is a question of law involving application of the venue statutes to pleaded facts. The general rule in 25-2-118 provides that the proper place for trial in civil actions is the defendant's county of residence. Additionally, in a case involving multiple claims, 25-2-116 provides that a party that is entitled to a change of venue on any claim is entitled to a change of venue on the entire action, subject to the power of the trial court to separate claims or issues for trial. Therefore, the District Court did not err in moving the venue to Missoula County where defendants resided and in allowing the plaintiff with a contractual provision for trial in Yellowstone County to pursue its action there. DML, Inc. v. Fulbright, 2005 MT 204, 328 M 212, 119 P3d 93 (2005), followed in Buhmann v. St., 2008 MT 465, 348 M 205, 201 P3d 70 (2008), and distinguishing Wentz v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 14, 928 P2d 237 (1996), and Liang v. Lai, 2004 MT 188, 322 M 199, 94 P3d 759 (2004).

Erroneous Change of Venue for Defendants When Proper Venue Chosen by Plaintiff: Plaintiff filed a tort action in Flathead County where a slip and fall accident occurred. Defendants moved for and were granted a change of venue to Sanders County where one defendant resided. Plaintiff appealed the venue change, and the Supreme Court reversed, noting that a defendant must be granted a change of venue if an action is brought in a county that is not statutorily designated as a proper place for trial, but because Flathead County was the location of the premises where the allegedly tortious act occurred, it was a proper venue, so no motion to change the place of trial on the entire action could be granted. Because plaintiff chose a proper venue, the District Court erred when it granted defendants' venue change. Liang v. Lai, 2004 MT 188, 322 M 199, 94 P3d 759 (2004), following Nelson v. Cenex, Inc., 2004 MT 170, 322 M 54, 97 P3d 1073 (2004). See also Wentz v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 14, 928 P2d 237 (1996), and Ward v. Johnson, 2012 MT 96, 365 Mont. 19, 277 P.3d 1216.

Contract Agreement for Sale of Goods and Performance of Services — Venue Proper in Place of Principle Activity: A dispute arose between the parties to a contract regarding the proper county of venue. Plaintiff maintained that because the dispute arose out of a contract, proper venue should be determined under 25-2-121 and that because the contract was for the sale of goods only, 25-2-121(2)(a) should apply to establish venue in Yellowstone County where possession of the goods was to be delivered. Although defendant agreed that 25-2-121 applied, defendant contended that because the contract was for both the sale of goods and the performance of services, 25-2-121(1)(b)(ii) should apply, establishing appropriate venue in the county where the principle activity was to take place, which was Valley County. Defendant also argued that under 25-2-118, venue was proper in Valley County, defendant's county of residence. The District Court examined all the obligations required of the parties at the time of the agreement and applied Missouri-Stone Co. v. Barber Seed Serv., Inc., 256 M 66, 844 P2d 112 (1992), concluding that because the contract was for both the sale of goods and the performance of services, 25-2-121(1)(b)(ii) was the appropriate subsection under which to establish venue—in Valley County where the principle activity was to take place. The Supreme Court concurred. Venue was proper in either the county of defendant's residence or where the principle place of activity occurred, which in both cases was Valley County, so the District Court did not err in changing venue to Valley County. Tractor & Equip. Co. v. Zerbe Bros., 2001 MT 162, 306 M 111, 32 P3d 721 (2001).

Suit Filed in Proper County — Defendant May Not Change Venue to Other Proper County: When a suit may properly be commenced in more than one county and plaintiff files in one of the permissible counties, defendant may not change the venue of the action to a different county even if the county preferred by defendant is also a proper place for trial. Melroe v. Doyle, 239 M 524, 781 P2d 1134, 46 St. Rep. 1884 (1989).

25-2-116. Multiple claims.

Evidence Commission Recommendations for Revisions

Explanation: The present statutes do not cover this situation. This section codifies the holdings of the Supreme Court in cases that have raised the question. Our statutes have no provision for the multiple claim situation in which the county where the plaintiff files is correct on one claim but not for one or more of the others. It is possible, at least since the adoption of Rule 42(b), for a court to split the action and grant a change on one or more claims, but this causes multiple trials and may be a cure worse than the disease. For a great many years our Court has ruled consistently that a defendant entitled to a change of venue on one claim should have it on the entire action. The Court feels the rule is necessary to prevent a plaintiff from controlling venue by adding spurious claims that have little or no validity, but are triable in the forum the plaintiff chooses rather than at the normal situs which would be the defendant's residence or another location more favorable to the defendant.

This new provision codifies the result of this unbroken line of opinions: Yore v. Murphy, 10 Mont. 304, 25 P. 1039 (1891); Heinecke v. Scott, 95 Mont. 200, 26 P.2d 167 (1933); Beavers v. Rankin, 142 Mont. 570, 385 P.2d 640 (1963). It makes no change in existing law, but simply enacts it into the Code where it is available.

Venue in Action Naming Two Defendants — Venue Proper for One Defendant Proper for Both — Improper Change of Venue: Plaintiff brought complaints against two employees who were allegedly involved in kickback schemes involving the purchase and sale of certain feed ingredients on plaintiff's behalf. Under the allegations, no county was a proper venue for both defendants on all claims. One defendant was granted a change of venue to the county where that employee performed his employment contract, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. Under 25-2-116, if an action names two or more defendants, a county that is a proper place of trial for any defendant is proper for all defendants. Because the action as a whole could have been brought in the county of residence of either defendant, the change of venue was not proper under the prerequisite in 25-2-114 that applies when an action is brought in a county that is not a proper place of trial. The county where plaintiff brought the action was a proper venue, and the case was remanded for reinstatement of the original county as the proper venue. Farmers Union Ass'n v. Paquin, 2009 MT 305, 352 M 390, 217 P3d 74 (2009).

Change of Venue on Multiple Claims to Defendants' County of Residence While Allowing Plaintiff to Pursue Venue Established by Contract Proper: The franchise agreement between one plaintiff and defendants provided that plaintiff could elect to initiate an action concerning breach of the agreement in Yellowstone County. Franchise agreements with other plaintiffs provided that Missoula County would be the place of venue. All plaintiffs joined in a suit against defendants, which was filed in Yellowstone County. Defendants moved for a change of venue to Missoula County where the company headquarters were located, and the motion was granted. Plaintiff whose agreement allowed for a Yellowstone County venue was allowed to sever its claims and keep its action in that county if desired. Plaintiffs appealed the venue change, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The determination of whether a county is the proper place for trial is a question of law involving application of the venue statutes to pleaded facts. The general rule in 25-2-118 provides that the proper place for trial in civil actions is the defendant's county of residence. Additionally, in a case involving multiple claims, this section provides that a party that is entitled to a change of venue on any claim is entitled to a change of venue on the entire action, subject to the power of the trial court to separate claims or issues for trial. Therefore, the District Court did not err in moving the venue to Missoula County where defendants resided and in allowing the plaintiff with a contractual provision for trial in Yellowstone County to pursue its action there. DML, Inc. v. Fulbright, 2005 MT 204, 328 M 212, 119 P3d 93 (2005), followed in Buhmann v. St., 2008 MT 465, 348 M 205, 201 P3d 70 (2008), and distinguishing Wentz v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 14, 928 P2d 237 (1996), and Liang v. Lai, 2004 MT 188, 322 M 199, 94 P3d 759 (2004).

Wrongful Death and Survivor Action — Change of Venue Properly Denied: The District Court did not err in refusing to apply this section to a case in which survivorship action arose in one county and the wrongful death action arose in another. Wentz v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 14, 928 P2d 237, 53 St. Rep. 1277 (1996).

25-2-117. Multiple defendants.

Evidence Commission Recommendations for Revisions

Explanation: On a few occasions, the Supreme Court has had to deal with the problem posed by multiple defendants with conflicting venue rights. Most situations involve defendants who live in different counties, but this presents no difficulty since the statutes (Section 25-2-108 MCA [renumbered 25-2-118]; amended in section 7 of this draft [section 8 of Ch. 432]) have always allowed the plaintiff to file at the residence of any of them. Tort, contract, and real property actions, however, which present choices other than residence, have been troublesome. Heinecke v. Scott, 95 Mont. 200, 26 P.2d 167 (1933) raised but did not give a definitive answer to the question of possible priorities between defendants whose venue rights arise under different statutory provisions. That case involved contract, tort, and real property claims, and was brought at the plaintiff's residence where none of the defendants lived. The Court held that the action was basically one for recovery of real property, to which the tort and contract claims were subsidiary. Since all of the defendants were residents of the county where the land was situated, a change of venue to that county was awarded. The court noted that small differences in the facts might have presented much more complex questions. These questions are what this proposed section attempts to meet. The section would simply extend the same "good as to one, good as to all" principle that has always governed venue based on residence to all situations. Rule 42(b), which was not available at the time of the Heinecke case, could be used to alleviate the difficulties of a defendant placed at a real disadvantage.

This proposed section does not change existing law or establish any new principle. Like the other new provisions it simply tries to codify existing case law (although, in this instance, cases are neither plentiful nor clear-cut) so that all the fundamental principles will be gathered together in one place and stated as plainly as possible.

Venue Determined by Allegations in Complaint — Venue for Case Against Defunct Corporation: In an asbestos contamination case, 47 plaintiffs sued 53 defendants in Cascade County, including one defendant, Robinson Insulation Company (Robinson), that was a defunct corporation that had resided in and operated out of Cascade County. Defendant Atlantic Richfield Company (Atlantic) moved for a change of venue to Flathead County, contending that Robinson did not reside in Cascade County at the commencement of the action and had been improperly joined so that venue could be maintained in Cascade County. The motion for change of venue was denied, and Atlantic appealed. The Supreme Court noted that a motion to change the place of trial brought in a proper county may not be granted and that for tort actions the proper venue is the county where any defendant resided at the commencement of the action or the county where the tort was committed. The court applied the principles of Petersen v. Tucker, 228 M 393, 742 P2d 483 (1987), in holding that the court will not go beyond the allegations in the complaint to determine questions of venue. Plaintiffs named Robinson as a defendant in both the original and amended complaint, and the District Court did not dismiss Robinson as a defendant, so Cascade

County was a proper venue for the case. Denial of the motion for change of venue was affirmed. Allen v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2005 MT 281, 329 M 230, 124 P3d 132 (2005).

Venue in Matter Involving Multiple Defendants — Plaintiff's Venue Alternatives Properly Exercised: Plaintiff's husband was killed in an accident at the city bus barn in Lewis and Clark County in Helena. Plaintiff filed a survivorship/wrongful death action in Silver Bow County against defendant city in Lewis and Clark County and against defendant gas company with its principal place of business in Silver Bow County. The city moved for a change of venue to Lewis and Clark County, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the city argued that because Gabriel v. School District No. 4, 264 M 177, 870 P2d 1351 (1994), and Wentz v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 14, 928 P2d 237 (1996), established that the proper venue for trial of a combined survivorship/wrongful death action is either the county where the survivorship action arose or the county where the wrongful death claim arose and that neither claim in this case arose in Silver Bow County, Silver Bow County was not a proper venue. Plaintiff contended that under this section, when there are multiple defendants, a proper place for trial of any defendant is proper for all defendants. The Supreme Court agreed with plaintiff. Although Gabriel and Wentz approved counties where survivorship or wrongful death actions arose as proper venues, neither case established those counties as exclusive venues for survivorship/wrongful death actions. In cases with multiple defendants pursuant to this section, including defendants that are both political subdivisions and private entities, 25-2-126, which provides venue for actions against political subdivisions, does not prevail over 25-2-122, which provides venue for tort actions, but rather provides alternative venue options to a plaintiff. The plaintiff properly exercised a venue option here, and denial of the change of venue motion was affirmed. Meyer v. Mont. Power Co., LLC, 2005 MT 66, 326 M 283, 109 P3d 269 (2005), distinguishing Whalen v. Mont. Right to Life Ass'n, 2002 MT 328, 313 M 204, 60 P3d 972 (2002).

Location of Resident Agent of Foreign Corporation Proper Venue in Tort Action: Nelson worked for a Minnesota corporation at a refinery in Yellowstone County. Nelson brought a tort action based on exposure to asbestos during employment, naming as defendants three Minnesota corporations that operated the refinery and two individuals from Yellowstone County who worked as plant managers. Nelson resided in Missoula County, and the corporations' resident agent was located in Lewis and Clark County. Nelson brought the action in Lewis and Clark County. The corporations moved for a change of venue to Yellowstone County, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. A defendant may move for a change of venue when an action is not brought in a county that is statutorily designated as a proper place for trial, and the motion must be granted if the county in which the action is filed is not a proper place for trial. If more than one county is proper, the action may be brought in any of those counties and a motion for change of venue may not be granted. The general rule for determining venue is 25-2-118, but there are statutory exceptions to the general rule for specific types of actions. Venue rules for tort actions are in 25-2-122, including venue for tort actions against a foreign corporation, one of which is the county in which the corporation's resident agent is located. Thus, Lewis and Clark County was a proper venue for trial, and the District Court did not err in denying the motion for change of venue. Nelson v. Cenex, Inc., 2004 MT 170, 322 M 54, 97 P3d 1073 (2004), distinguishing Platt v. Sears, 222 M 184, 721 P2d 336 (1986), and followed in Ward v. Johnson, 2012 MT 96, 365 Mont. 19, 277 P.3d 1216.

Venue Properly Based Solely Upon Allegations in Complaint — Affidavits Not Considered — Venue Found Proper for Both Defendants: The Department of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Department of Environmental Quality) brought an action in Lewis and Clark County against Pegasus Gold Corporation (Pegasus) and Zortman Mining, Inc. (ZMI), for numerous violations of the Montana water quality laws at the Zortman and Landusky mines located in Phillips County. The complaint alleged that Pegasus owned or controlled the mines and that both Pegasus and ZMI did business in Lewis and Clark County, making that county a proper place for venue. ZMI moved to change venue to Phillips County, alleging that Pegasus did not own or control ZMI, and attached affidavits of Fletcher and Erickson to support its motion. Citing Petersen v. Tucker, 228 M 393, 742 P2d 483 (1987), the Supreme Court held that the District Court properly relied upon the allegations in the complaint without considering the two affidavits. The Supreme Court held that inasmuch as Pegasus was a named defendant at the time of the complaint and did business in Lewis and Clark County, that county was proper for venue. The Supreme Court noted that because the motion for change of venue did not refer to or rely upon the Fletcher affidavit, it was properly not considered by the District Court. The Supreme Court also noted that because the Erickson affidavit did not contradict the allegations in the complaint that Pegasus owned or controlled ZMI, the District Court was correct in focusing on the allegations in the complaint.

The Supreme Court held that venue was properly found in Lewis and Clark County for both defendants because under the provisions of this section, a county that is proper venue for one defendant is proper for both. State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Pegasus Gold Corp., 270 M 32, 889 P2d 1197, 52 St. Rep. 64 (1995).

Status of Parties and Pleadings at Time of Complaint or Time Moving Party Appears as Determining Venue: A complaint was filed in Missoula County against several defendants, including a Kalispell doctor, who moved for a change of venue to Flathead County. The motion was initially denied, but upon dismissal of the other defendants, the doctor again moved for a change of venue, which was granted. The District Court erred in granting the change because in Montana, venue will be determined by the status of the parties and pleadings at the time of the complaint or at the time that the moving party appears in the action. Otherwise, courts would be required to reexamine the question of venue whenever the composition of the parties is altered. Emery v. Federated Foods, Inc., 262 M 83, 863 P2d 426, 50 St. Rep. 1454 (1993), following Boucher v. Steffes, 160 M 482, 503 P2d 659 (1972).

Motion by One Cross-Defendant for Change of Venue Not Affected by Waiver of Right by Other Cross-Defendants: Where one of four cross-defendants timely filed a proper motion to move for a change of venue, denial of the motion based on the fact that the other three cross-defendants had waived their similar right by failing to make a proper motion upon initial appearance was error and was reversed. St. Bank of Townsend v. Worline, 227 M 315, 738 P2d 1295, 44 St. Rep. 1112 (1987).

Foreign Corporation and Montana Resident as Defendants: The rule set out in 25-2-118 that a foreign corporation may be sued in any county in the state does not apply when Montana residents are also named as defendants. In that case, venue is determined by Montana's other venue statutes. Platt v. Sears, 222 M 184, 721 P2d 336, 43 St. Rep. 1160 (1986).

Venue for Insurer Bad Faith Tort — County Where Investigation and Negotiation Transpired: In action for bad faith against insurer and its claims representative under 33-18-201, defendants moved for change of venue from Flathead County to Cascade County. Defendants contended that Cascade County was proper venue since the claims representative maintained an office and accomplished all work and decisions there. The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's denial of the motion, finding that the defendant's duty to investigate and negotiate could have been realistically performed only in Flathead County where the plaintiff's farm and the provider of defective potting soil were located. Since venue in Flathead County was proper for the insurer, it was also proper for the claims representative who resided in Cascade County. Streich & Associates, Inc. v. St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co., 221 M 209, 717 P2d 1101, 43 St. Rep. 752 (1986).

No Change of Venue — County and Public Officials: Plaintiff Weiss was severely injured in a one-car accident in Glacier County. A complaint was filed in Gallatin County, Weiss' place of residence. Codefendants, Glacier County and Glacier County Commissioners, filed a motion for a change of venue from Gallatin to Glacier County, asserting that 25-2-125 and 25-2-126 require an action against a county or its Commissioners to be brought in the county of the alleged tort. The District Judge denied the motion, reasoning that venue was proper as to the state defendants, therefore venue was proper as to all defendants. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed with the plaintiffs' assertion that 25-2-117, enacted in 1985, rather than 25-2-125 and 25-2-126, was controlling. The court held that 25-2-117 was intended to apply to all venue provisions, including the provisions relating to suits against counties and public officials, and that denial of a change of venue was consistent with the provision of 25-2-117 which states that an action may be brought in any county where venue is proper and other defendants joined, though venue otherwise would not lie against those defendants. Weiss v. St., 219 M 447, 712 P2d 1315, 43 St. Rep. 82 (1986).

25-2-118. Residence of defendant.

Evidence Commission Recommendations for Revisions

Explanation: This revised section changes the location and arrangement of the most basic rules but does not alter their content significantly. Currently, section 25-2-108 [renumbered 25-2-118], which states the most fundamental of all venue rules—that the defendant has the right to have the trial in his county of residence—is the last section in Part 1, Chapter 2, Title 25, preceded by a long list of exceptions to it. The sequence is confusing and has caused much needless litigation. This revision tries to put first things first, beginning with the most fundamental proposition, and following it with the exceptions.

Subsection (1). This subsection extracts from the confusing welter of statutes what the Supreme Court has repeatedly called the "principal rule" of venue (see Hardenburgh v. Hardenburgh, 115 Mont. 46, 146 P.2d 151 (1944); Love v. Mon-O-Co Oil Corp., 133 Mont. 56, 319 P.2d 1056 (1957); Clark Fork Paving v. Atlas Concrete, 178 Mont. 8, 582 P.2d 779 (1978)) and places it at the beginning, rather than the end, of the related group of rules. The proper relationship between this principle and others that are subordinate to it has generated most of what Justice Sheehy, in Clark Fork Paving, called the "mountain of cases" that the present statutes have spawned. This new order and placement is intended to emphasize the pre-eminence of this rule and the Court's repeated insistence upon it.

The stricken material "or where the plaintiff resides and the defendants or any of them may be found" at the end of subsection (1) is part of the current rule, but, in the judgment of the Commission, should be eliminated entirely. This deletion constitutes a substantive change in current law, the only such change in the draft bill. Unlike the fundamental principle to which it is attached, this separate method of fixing venue is legally questionable and almost never used except in domestic relations actions. As a built-in exception to the rule that a defendant is entitled to trial in his own county, it is an open invitation to subterfuge and sharp practice by plaintiffs' attorneys, and was so characterized in the single case construing it that has reached the Supreme Court. By a 3-2 decision in Shields v. Shields, 115 Mont. 146, 139 P.2d 528 (1943) the Court held that this portion of the statute permitted a plaintiff to keep a divorce case in his own home county rather than that of the defendant by serving her when she had to leave her home county and come to the plaintiff's in connection with other litigation between them. The two dissenting judges called the plaintiff's action fraudulent. They argued that the provision was intended to be used only when the defendant had no residence in Montana, or had one but could not be found there. The dissenters' contention, though it did not prevail, apparently cast so much doubt on the practice that it has never again, in over 40 years, come before the Supreme Court. The Commission recognizes that this deleted language is often used in domestic relations cases; to preserve this existing use, similar language could be incorporated into 40-4-105(3), MCA. The situation for child custody is covered in 40-4-211, MCA.

The legitimate uses of the deleted language—to set venue in the cases of non-residents or residents whose whereabouts cannot be ascertained—are substantially covered by subsection (2) of the current draft.

Subsection (2). This provision clarifies the portion of section 25-2-108 [renumbered 25-2-118] dealing with nonresident defendants. Since, by definition, a nonresident of the state is not resident in any county, the basic rule of subsection (1) cannot apply. In this situation the statute has always given the right of choosing venue to the plaintiff, and this draft contemplates no change.

Most of the litigation under this provision has dealt with nonresident corporations. An unbroken chain of decisions holds that a foreign corporation has no Montana residence for venue purposes, can be sued in any county selected by the plaintiff, and has no right to a change of venue for improper county (Pue v. Northern Pacific Ry. Co., 78 Mont. 40, 252 P. 313 (1926); Hanlon v. Great Northern Ry. Co., 83 Mont. 15, 268 P. 547 (1928); Truck Insurance Exchange v. NFU Property and Casualty, 149 Mont. 387, 427 P.2d 50 (1967); Foley v. General Motors Corp., 159 Mont. 469, 499 P.2d 774 (1972)). Since, under this statute, any county selected by the plaintiff is a proper place of trial, a nonresident is not entitled to a change even in those instances, like tort and contract actions, where alternative venues are authorized (Morgan and Oswood v. U. S. F. & G., 167 Mont. 64, 535 P.2d 170 (1975)). [However, see the 1995 amendment to 25-2-122, which restricted these decisions.]

All of the existing case holdings would be undisturbed by subsection (2). The law will remain just as it is.

It should be noted that subsection (2) applies only to the nonresident and does not affect the rights of a resident who may be joined as co-defendant with the nonresident. The resident retains whatever rights he may have to a venue change (Foley v. General Motors Corp., supra).

The stricken language providing for designation of a proper county by a plaintiff was deleted as redundant with section 4 [25-2-114]. A plaintiff, whether he knows the residence of the defendant or not, may file in any county subject to defendant's right to move the trial.

Compiler's Comments

2003 Amendment: Chapter 314 in (3) in middle inserted "or the respondent" and near end substituted "filing" for "commencement". Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 352 deleted former introductory clause that read: "Unless otherwise specified in this part"; in (2), near middle after "trial", substituted "for a contract action is as provided in 25-2-121(1)(b) or (2) and the proper place of trial for a tort action is as provided in 25-2-122(2) or (3)" for "is any county the plaintiff designates in the complaint"; and made minor changes in style.

1985 Amendment: In lead-in to section substituted "Unless otherwise specified in this part" for "In all other cases, the action shall be tried in"; at beginning of (1) inserted exception clause and reference to proper place of trial before "the county", and deleted from end of (1) "or where the plaintiff resides and the defendants or any of them may be found"; in (2) after "reside in the state", substituted language allowing plaintiff to designate county if none of defendants reside in state for "or, if residing in the state, the county in which they so reside be unknown to the plaintiff, the same may be tried in any county which the plaintiff may designate in his complaint, subject, however, to the power of the court to change the place of trial as provided in this code"; and inserted (3) regarding venue of action brought pursuant to Title 40, chapter 4.

Legislative Modification of Recommendations: Pursuant to the above recommendation that modifications be made to preserve current venue provisions for domestic relations cases, the Legislature added subsection (3) to the language of the introduced bill recommended by the Commission.

Purpose of Recommendations: For an explanation of the circumstances leading to the above Evidence Commission recommendations for revisions, see part compiler's comments under Title 25, ch. 2, part 1.

GENERAL

Venue in Action Naming Two Defendants — Venue Proper for One Defendant Proper for Both — Improper Change of Venue: Plaintiff brought complaints against two employees who were allegedly involved in kickback schemes involving the purchase and sale of certain feed ingredients on plaintiff's behalf. Under the allegations, no county was a proper venue for both defendants on all claims. One defendant was granted a change of venue to the county where that employee performed his employment contract, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. Under 25-2-116, if an action names two or more defendants, a county that is a proper place of trial for any defendant is proper for all defendants. Because the action as a whole could have been brought in the county of residence of either defendant, the change of venue was not proper under the prerequisite in 25-2-114 that applies when an action is brought in a county that is not a proper place of trial. The county where plaintiff brought the action was a proper venue, and the case was remanded for reinstatement of the original county as the proper venue. Farmers Union Ass'n v. Paquin, 2009 MT 305, 352 M 390, 217 P3d 74 (2009).

General Determination of Venue in Civil Actions — Exceptions: The county where the defendant resides generally provides the proper place for trial in a civil action; however, Montana law provides exceptions to the general rule. The proper place for trial of a tort action is where the defendant resides or where the tort was committed. Venue is proper for an action for the recovery of a statutory penalty in the county where the cause or some part of the cause arose. When venue is proper in more than one county, then any one of the designated counties is a proper place for trial. Circle S Seeds of Mont., Inc. v. Mont. Merchandising, Inc., 2006 MT 311, 335 M 16, 157 P3d 671 (2006).

Venue Determined by Allegations in Complaint — Venue for Case Against Defunct Corporation: In an asbestos contamination case, 47 plaintiffs sued 53 defendants in Cascade County, including one defendant, Robinson Insulation Company (Robinson), that was a defunct corporation that had resided in and operated out of Cascade County. Defendant Atlantic Richfield Company (Atlantic) moved for a change of venue to Flathead County, contending that Robinson did not reside in Cascade County at the commencement of the action and had been improperly joined so that venue could be maintained in Cascade County. The motion for change of venue was denied, and Atlantic appealed. The Supreme Court noted that a motion to change the place of trial brought in a proper county may not be granted and that for tort actions the proper venue is the county where any defendant resided at the commencement of the action or the county where the tort was committed. The court applied the principles of Petersen v. Tucker, 228 M 393, 742 P2d 483 (1987), in holding that the court will not go beyond the allegations in the complaint to determine questions of venue. Plaintiffs named Robinson as a defendant in both the original and amended complaint, and the District Court did not dismiss Robinson as a defendant, so Cascade

County was a proper venue for the case. Denial of the motion for change of venue was affirmed. Allen v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2005 MT 281, 329 M 230, 124 P3d 132 (2005).

FELA Action Not Dismissible on Grounds of Inconvenience — Number of Out-of-State Filings Irrelevant: A District Court may not dismiss a FELA action because it considers itself to be an inconvenient forum and may not change the place of a FELA trial based on the doctrine of forum non conveniens, whether based on common law or as codified in 25-2-201. This issue will not henceforth be reexamined on the basis of the number of out-of-state FELA cases filed in Montana. (However, see the 1995 and 1997 amendments to 25-2-122, which restricted this decision.) State ex rel. Burlington N. RR Co. v. District Court, 270 M 146, 891 P2d 493, 52 St. Rep. 118 (1995).

Status of Parties and Pleadings at Time of Complaint or Time Moving Party Appears as Determining Venue: A complaint was filed in Missoula County against several defendants, including a Kalispell doctor, who moved for a change of venue to Flathead County. The motion was initially denied, but upon dismissal of the other defendants, the doctor again moved for a change of venue, which was granted. The District Court erred in granting the change because in Montana, venue will be determined by the status of the parties and pleadings at the time of the complaint or at the time that the moving party appears in the action. Otherwise, courts would be required to reexamine the question of venue whenever the composition of the parties is altered. Emery v. Federated Foods, Inc., 262 M 83, 863 P2d 426, 50 St. Rep. 1454 (1993), following Boucher v. Steffes, 160 M 482, 503 P2d 659 (1972).

Temporary Absences From Residence — No Change in Place of Residence: After Rosemary petitioned for a dissolution of her marriage, her husband Timothy discovered that she had been away from her home in Billings for a 6-week period to attend classes at MSU. During that time, she had lived in Pray in Park County. Upon discovery of these facts, Timothy asked for reconsideration of an earlier motion to change venue to Park County. Citing School District No. 12 v. Simonsen, 210 M 100, 683 P2d 471 (1984), the Supreme Court held that the District Court properly denied the motion for a change of venue because temporary absences from one's residence do not change an individual's place of residence. In re Marriage of Bernethy, 260 M 402, 860 P2d 157, 50 St. Rep. 1144 (1993).

Foreign Corporate Defendant — Venue Statute Not Unconstitutional: This statute, allowing plaintiff to sue a Montana corporation only in the county of its principal place of business and allowing suit against a foreign corporation in any county, does not violate the equal protection provision of the United States Constitution. (However, see the 1995 and 1997 amendments to 25-2-122, which restricted this decision.) Burlington N. RR Co. v. Ford, 504 US 648, 119 L Ed 2d 432, 112 S Ct 2184 (1992).

Foreign Corporations — State Venue Statute No Violation of Equal Protection: Montana's venue rule, which allows a foreign corporation to be sued in any county, does not violate equal protection guaranties of the U.S. Constitution. The statute rationally furthers a legitimate state interest. (However, see the 1995 and 1997 amendments to 25-2-122, which restricted this decision.) Burlington N. RR Co. v. Ford, 504 US 648, 119 L Ed 2d 432, 112 S Ct 2184 (1992).

Right to Sue Nonresident FELA Defendant in Any County — No Equal Protection Violation: This section's provision that if none of the defendants reside in the state, venue is proper in any county designated by the complaint has been interpreted by this court to allow a plaintiff in a Federal Employers' Liability Act suit to sue a nonresident, such as Burlington Northern, in any county in the state. The provision, as interpreted, does not violate equal protection by treating, without any rational basis, nonresidents differently than residents for venue purposes. Since 1910, it has been national policy to allow a railroad worker to sue his employer at any location where the employer does business, and this policy constitutes a justification for disparate treatment. In this case, Sheridan, Wyoming, residents injured in Sheridan sued in Yellowstone County in which the railroad does business, not Hill County in which the railroad's Montana headquarters are located. The court distinguished this case from Power Mfg. Co. v. Saunders, 274 US 490, 47 S Ct 678 (1927), cited by the railroad, in which the defendant did no business in the county in which it was sued. The court also cited several U.S. Supreme Court cases, finding that it should not make much difference what county a nonresident defendant defends in and finding that it is not necessarily important that all persons in the same classification be made equal as to the place in which they may sue, but it is important that the law applied to the facts and issues of the case be the same and be equally applied in whatever county the suit is brought. (However, see the 1995 and 1997 amendments to 25-2-122, which restricted this decision.) Ford v. Burlington N. RR Co., 250 M 188, 819 P2d 169, 48 St. Rep. 740 (1991). This decision was affirmed by the U.S. Supreme Court in Burlington N. RR Co. v. Ford, 504 US 648, 119 L Ed 2d 432, 112 S Ct 2184 (1992).

Importance of Contractual Venue Stipulation — Court Discretion: When faced with a contractual stipulation to venue, the court must place venue in the stipulated county when requested by the parties. A stipulation does not remove the court's discretion to change venue when the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice require it; however, an agreement to place venue in a particular county is a most important factor for the court to consider. Given the court's wide discretion under 25-2-201(3), the court's decision will not be disturbed in the absence of clear evidence of abuse of that discretion. Mont. Wholesale Accounts Serv. v. Penington, 233 M 72, 758 P2d 759, 45 St. Rep. 1302 (1988).

Civil and Tort Actions — Venue: In all civil actions, the proper place of trial is in the county of defendant's residence; but in tort actions, the proper place may be the county of defendant's residence or the county where the tort was committed. Brown v. Hartwell, 226 M 130, 734 P2d 204, 44 St. Rep. 527 (1987).

Venue for Dissolution Proceedings: In construing the apparently conflicting venue provisions of 25-2-118(2) and 25-2-118(3), the Supreme Court held that, as related to dissolution proceedings, the specific provisions in subsection (3) outweigh the general provisions of subsection (2). Therefore, the proper place for trial for an action for dissolution of marriage is the county where the petitioner has resided during the 90 days preceding commencement of the action. In re Marriage of Jones, 226 M 14, 736 P2d 350, 44 St. Rep. 422 (1987).

Foreign Corporation and Montana Resident as Defendants: The rule set out in 25-2-118 that a foreign corporation may be sued in any county in the state does not apply when Montana residents are also named as defendants. In that case, venue is determined by Montana's other venue statutes. (See the 1995 and 1997 amendments to 25-2-122, which limits the place of trial against a foreign corporation.) Platt v. Sears, 222 M 184, 721 P2d 336, 43 St. Rep. 1160 (1986).

Choice of Venue in Tort Action — 1985 Law Codifying Longstanding Rule: A 1985 amendment to 25-2-102 (renumbered 25-2-122) codified the longstanding interpretation of the tort venue exception to the basic venue rule in 25-2-108 (renumbered 25-2-118). Under that longstanding rule, plaintiff in this case could sue either in the county in which the tort occurred or in a county in which one of the five defendants resided. Bradley v. Valmont Indus., Inc., 216 M 429, 701 P2d 997, 42 St. Rep. 925 (1985).

Fraudulent Misrepresentations Preceding Contract Formation: When purchasing a bull, plaintiff relied on defendant's alleged intentionally, falsely, and fraudulently made representations and brought an action in Cascade County for compensatory and punitive damages. As plaintiff chose to affirm the contract and sue for the misrepresentations preceding the contract, the action was in tort. However, venue was properly changed to Stillwater County where the auction, sale, and payment, and therefore the tort, if any, took place. Further, under the general rule, an action is to be brought where the defendant resides (Stillwater County), and plaintiff did not show a clear reason for applying an exception. Woolcock v. Beartooth Ranch, 196 M 65, 637 P2d 520, 38 St. Rep. 2130 (1981).

Venue for Tort Class Action Against Counties: Plaintiffs brought a class action suit against Dow Chemical Co., Lake County, and Missoula County. The complaint did not allege that either Missoula County or Lake County was the exclusive cause of one injury. Rather, the pleadings indicated that the plaintiffs could have been damaged by the actions of either or both counties acting separately. In such a situation both counties are not necessary parties to one action, and the counties should be sued where they are located. The suit would be properly filed in Lake County for the tort allegedly committed against the Lake County plaintiffs. Dow Chemical Co. is entitled to a change of venue as to the claims filed by the Lake County plaintiffs. State ex rel. Kesterson v. District Court, 189 M 20, 614 P2d 1050 (1980).

Place of Performance in Contract Action: In an action to recover a commission for the sale of real estate in which the residence of plaintiff, the place of deposit of earnest money, and the place of escrow were undisputedly in Cascade County, the District Court did not abuse its discretion by finding that by necessary implication the parties intended Cascade County to be the place of performance. Therefore, proper venue was determined by 25-2-101 (renumbered 25-2-121) and not 25-2-108 (renumbered 25-2-118). Deimler v. Ostler, 183 M 480, 600 P2d 814 (1979).

County of Alleged Tort and Where Contract to Be Performed — Same County: The plaintiffs' allegation of defendants' tortious conduct in the county of plaintiffs' residence, when considered with the allegations that performance of the contract was to be in that county, was sufficient to uphold the determination of the District Court that proper venue for the action was in the county of plaintiffs' residence. Hopkins v. Scottie Homes, Inc., 180 M 498, 591 P2d 230 (1979).

Jurisdiction and Venue — Child Custody: The court had jurisdiction to modify the child's custody because Montana was the home state of the child at the time the action was commenced and venue of the case because defendant was a resident of the county when the action was commenced. Ronchetto v. Ronchetto, 173 M 285, 567 P2d 456 (1977).

Foreign Corporate Surety: Action brought against foreign corporate surety without joinder of principal was properly venued in county where plaintiff resided, even though the bond assured a subcontract which was to be performed in another county and the residence of the subcontractor was in another county. Morgen & Oswood Constr. v. USF&G Co., 164 M 64, 535 P2d 170 (1975).

Foreign Corporation — Resident Agent in County: A foreign corporation does not acquire residence for venue purposes in a particular county by appointing a resident of that county as its agent for service of process, and it may be sued in any county. Foley v. Gen. Motors Corp., 159 M 469, 499 P2d 774 (1972).

General Rule Inapplicable to Municipal Defendant: The rule that where a contract for payment of money is entered into between persons residing at different places and place of payment is not agreed upon, creditor's residence becomes place of performance and therefore place of trial does not apply to municipal corporations. Lillis v. Big Timber, 103 M 206, 62 P2d 219 (1936).

Venue as Location of Debtor City: The place of trial is in the county in which the debtor city is located in the absence of an agreement as to the place of payment, and not in the county of plaintiff creditor's residence, in action by nonresident civil engineer to recover for services rendered city in and about water system. Lillis v. Big Timber, 103 M 206, 62 P2d 219 (1936).

Foreign Corporation — Venue in Plaintiff's County: Whether an action against a railway company, a foreign corporation and therefore a nonresident of the state, to recover damages to a shipment of livestock from a point in this state to another state, due to unreasonable delays and negligence occurring outside the state, be treated as one ex contractu or ex delicto, the cause of action accrued at point of destination. Under this section the action was properly triable in the county of plaintiff's residence, in which an agent of defendant was served with summons, though in the act of transportation no part of such county was traversed, and a motion for change of venue to a county through which defendant company's track ran and transportation of the livestock was had was properly denied. Hanlon v. Great N. Ry., 83 M 15, 268 P 547 (1928), distinguished in Thomas v. Cloyd, 110 M 343, 100 P2d 938 (1940).

Nonresident Defendants: This section expressly provides that if none of the defendants reside in this state an action may be tried in any county which the plaintiff may designate in his complaint. As to what are styled local actions—such, for example, as those relating to interests in lands—usually the venue or place of trial is the district or the county where the subject matter lies. But in general, transitory actions may be tried wherever personal service can be made on the defendant. (However, see the 1995 and 1997 amendments to 25-2-122, which restricted this decision.) State ex rel. Mackey v. District Court, 40 M 359, 106 P 1098 (1910).

Waiver of Improper Venue: Although an action to redeem from a mortgage on real property should have been brought in the county in which the mortgagee resided, yet where it was instituted in the county in which the mortgagor had his residence, but defendant failed to ask for a change of venue to his home county, as he could have done under section 93-2905, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), the court in which the suit was commenced had jurisdiction to try it. State ex rel. Schatz v. District Court, 40 M 173, 105 P 554 (1909).

Account Versus Contract: Where two of the three causes of action alleged in a complaint were actions on an open account for medical services rendered in B County, and not on express contracts to render such services, plaintiff was not entitled to sue thereon in B County. Bond v. Hurd, 31 M 314, 78 P 579 (1904), overruled in State ex rel. Interstate Lumber Co. v. District Court, 54 M 602, 172 P 1030 (1918), but reinstated in Fraser v. Clark, 128 M 160, 273 P2d 105 (1954).

Action on Account: Actions on an account must be brought in the county in which the defendants, or some of them, reside or in the county in which plaintiff resides and in which defendants, or any of them, may be found. McDonnell v. Collins, 19 M 372, 48 P 549 (1897), overruled in State ex rel. Interstate Lumber Co. v. District Court, 54 M 602, 172 P 1030 (1918), but reinstated in Fraser v. Clark, 128 M 160, 273 P2d 105 (1954).

RELATIONSHIP OF RESIDENCY TO OTHER VENUE STATUTES

Venue When No Mandatory Penalty Exists — Trademark Infringement: Plaintiff corporation brought a trademark infringement action in Gallatin County. Defendant corporation sought a change of venue to Cascade County because defendant resided there and because any alleged tort occurred there. The District Court applied 25-2-124 and determined that because 30-13-335 imposed a statutory penalty for trademark infringement, venue was proper in Gallatin County as the place where the cause or some part of the cause arose. Defendant appealed on grounds that the court should have applied 25-2-122 because the claims were based in tort and because any alleged tort would have been committed in defendant's business offices in Cascade County where the decision to use the trademark originated. The Supreme Court found that the penalty in 30-13-335 was optional and at the discretion of the trial court, rather than mandatory. Because the statute failed to exact punishment, it was error for the District Court to apply 25-2-124 to determine venue because a statutory penalty was not imposed. The Supreme Court then addressed defendant's argument that any alleged tort was committed in Cascade County. Pursuant to the holding in BHC Holding Co. v. Hurley, 242 M 4, 788 P2d 322 (1990), tort is committed, for purposes of determining venue, where there is a concurrence of breach of obligation and the occasion of damages. Defendant may have made the decision to use the trademark at its offices in Cascade County, making Cascade County a proper venue for the case, but that action simply started in motion defendant's duty not to interfere with plaintiff's business. The alleged breach reached fruition when defendant widely distributed its products containing the allegedly illegal trademark to the marketplace, including Gallatin County, the location of plaintiff's principal place of business and the place where plaintiff allegedly suffered lost profits and other related damages. Thus, the concurrence of breach of obligation and the occasion of damages occurred in Gallatin County, rendering Gallatin County a proper venue. Therefore, even though the District Court improperly applied 25-2-124, its determination that Gallatin County was a proper venue was legally correct under 25-2-122, so the District Court was affirmed. Circle S Seeds of Mont., Inc. v. Mont. Merchandising, Inc., 2006 MT 311, 335 M 16, 157 P3d 671 (2006).

Contract Agreement for Sale of Goods and Performance of Services — Venue Proper in Place of Principle Activity: A dispute arose between the parties to a contract regarding the proper county of venue. Plaintiff maintained that because the dispute arose out of a contract, proper venue should be determined under 25-2-121 and that because the contract was for the sale of goods only, 25-2-121(2)(a) should apply to establish venue in Yellowstone County where possession of the goods was to be delivered. Although defendant agreed that 25-2-121 applied, defendant contended that because the contract was for both the sale of goods and the performance of services, 25-2-121(1)(b)(ii) should apply, establishing appropriate venue in the county where the principle activity was to take place, which was Valley County. Defendant also argued that under this section, venue was proper in Valley County, defendant's county of residence. The District Court examined all the obligations required of the parties at the time of the agreement and applied Missouri-Stone Co. v. Barber Seed Serv., Inc., 256 M 66, 844 P2d 112 (1992), concluding that because the contract was for both the sale of goods and the performance of services, 25-2-121(1)(b)(ii) was the appropriate subsection under which to establish venue—in Valley County where the principle activity was to take place. The Supreme Court concurred. Venue was proper in either the county of defendant's residence or where the principle place of activity occurred, which in both cases was Valley County, so the District Court did not err in changing venue to Valley County. Tractor & Equip. Co. v. Zerbe Bros., 2001 MT 162, 306 M 111, 32 P3d 721 (2001).

Breach of Property Warranty — Venue Where Property Located: Defendants, residents of Missoula County, sold property located in Granite County to plaintiffs. The deal was closed in Missoula County, and payments were made under the contract for deed into an escrow account in Missoula County. Plaintiffs discovered defects with the fireplace and sewer system of the house. The parties reached an agreement to offset $3,000 from the purchase price for fireplace repairs. Plaintiffs alleged it cost $12,000 more to repair the fireplace and sewer system and filed suit. At the time of filing, all payments under the contract had been made. Defendants moved to have venue changed to Missoula County, contending that under 25-2-108 (renumbered 25-2-118), they were entitled to be sued in the county where they reside. However, the court found that 25-2-101 (renumbered 25-2-121) provides a specific exception regarding venue on contract suits. Section 25-2-101 (renumbered 25-2-121) gives a plaintiff the choice of bringing an action on a contract in the county where the contract was to be performed, regardless of the defendant's residence. The court held that the gravamen of the issue presented is whether sellers performed by delivering the property in Granite County defect free. The issue did not concern the payments in Missoula. Letford v. Kraus, 206 M 493, 672 P2d 265, 40 St. Rep. 1802 (1983).

Place of Performance Specified in Contract: In a suit on a contract of sale for nonpayment of the balance of the purchase price of furniture purchased in one county and delivered to another county, the District Court properly denied defendant/buyer's claim that venue should be set where defendant lives and where the goods were delivered. If by the express terms of a contract, place of performance is established, 25-2-101 (renumbered 25-2-121) applies and venue exists where the performance is to occur, Deimler v. Ostler, 183 M 480, 600 P2d 814 (1979); Hopkins v.

Scottie Homes, Inc., 180 M 498, 591 P2d 230 (1979), rather than where defendant resides as is normally the case under 25-2-108 (renumbered 25-2-118). Here, since the contract specifies that the remaining performance (payment by the buyer) should occur in the county where the goods were purchased, this county is the county of proper venue. Peenstra v. Berek, 188 M 489, 614 P2d 520 (1980).

Failure to File Tax Return — Change of Venue Denied: Venue of a criminal action charging intentional failure to file a properly completed Montana individual income tax return would lie in either Lewis and Clark County or the county in which defendants reside. But, since the complaint was filed in the former and no legal justification or prejudice was shown to support transfer, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court's change of venue from Lewis and Clark County. Dept. of Revenue v. Lane, 187 M 230, 609 P2d 300 (1980), following St. v. Bretz, 169 M 505, 548 P2d 949 (1976). (The determination of venue in Bretz was reversed in St. v. Bretz, 180 M 307, 590 P2d 614 (1979), because the conviction was reversed on another issue and the court corrected what was viewed then as manifest error on the prior venue decision.)

Change of Venue From One Proper County to Another Based on Residence Denied: Under 17-4-103, Lewis and Clark County was a proper venue for an action to recover funds paid to the defendant by the state and defendant's motion for a change of venue to the county in which the defendant resided was properly denied. The courts are powerless to transfer a cause to another venue, based on the residence of the parties, even though the other venue may also have been proper. The power to change the place of trial based on residence exists only when the county designated in the complaint is not the proper county. St. v. Sec. St. Bank, 184 M 461, 603 P2d 681 (1979).

Place of Performance in Contract Action Same as Plaintiff's Residence: In an action to recover a commission for the sale of real estate in which the residence of plaintiff, the place of deposit of earnest money, and the place of escrow were undisputedly in Cascade County, the District Court did not abuse its discretion by finding that by necessary implication the parties intended Cascade County to be the place of performance. Therefore proper venue was determined by 25-2-101 (renumbered 25-2-121) and not 25-2-108 (renumbered 25-2-118). Deimler v. Ostler, 183 M 480, 600 P2d 814 (1979).

Intent of Parties as to Performance: Where intent of parties was that a contract would be performed in either Cascade or Chouteau County and contract was performed in Cascade County until breach, venue of action on contract was in Cascade County rather than county of defendant's residence. Armon v. Stewart, 162 M 262, 511 P2d 8 (1973).

Exceptions to Be Shown on Face of Complaint: To maintain suit in a county other than that of defendant's residence, plaintiff must show clearly the facts relied on to bring the case within one of the venue statutes other than 25-2-108 (renumbered 25-2-118). A contract must state clearly that it is to be performed in a county other than that of defendant's residence so that no other fair construction can be placed upon it. Rapp v. Graham, 145 M 371, 401 P2d 579 (1965).

Suit on Contract in County of Defendant's Residence: In bringing suit where contract is to be performed, rather than place of defendant's residence, a mere direction by the seller as to the place of payment is not sufficient to maintain venue within exception to this section, nor can a promise to remit to cover the purchase price be sued upon by the seller in the county of the point to which the remittance is to be made. Rapp v. Graham, 145 M 371, 401 P2d 579 (1965).

Action on Contract Where Defendant Does Not Reside: In order for plaintiff to maintain action on contract in a county where defendant does not reside, the place of performance must be evident either by express terms of contract, or by necessary implication that a county other than that of defendant's residence is intended to be the county of performance. Brown v. First Fed. S & L Ass'n of Great Falls, 144 M 149, 394 P2d 1017 (1964).

Performance of Contract — Choice of Plaintiff: If contract is to be performed in a county other than the county of defendant's residence, then the plaintiff has his choice of the two counties in which to sue. He may sue in the county where defendant resides or in the county where the contract is to be performed. Brown v. First Fed. S & L Ass'n of Great Falls, 144 M 149, 394 P2d 1017 (1964).

Tort Action Against Nonresidents: Although either the county of residence of defendant or county where tort was committed was proper county in which to bring action for personal injury arising from accident, where none of the defendants were residents of Montana, the action was triable in any county designated by plaintiff in his complaint. (However, see the 1995 and 1997 amendments to 25-2-122, which restricted this decision.) Tassie v. Cont. Oil Co., 228 F. Supp. 807 (D.C. Mont. 1964).

Oral Lease: In an action for breach of an oral agreement to lease farm land, venue was in the county where the estate of one of the defendants was being probated, in which the other defendants resided, in which the land was located, and in which service was made and the creditor's claim filed. Erickson v. Toy, 142 M 121, 385 P2d 268 (1963).

PLAINTIFF'S RESIDENCE AND SERVICE ON DEFENDANT

Venue in Action in Which State Is Defendant: Although the general rule, as stated in this section, is that the proper place for trial of a civil action is the county in which the defendant resides, an exception in 25-2-126 applies to situations in which the state is a defendant. Under the plain meaning of the exception, the county of plaintiff's residence is a proper venue in a civil suit naming the state as defendant. As noted in Petersen v. Tucker, 228 M 393, 742 P2d 483, 44 St. Rep. 1625 (1987), the purpose of 25-2-126 is to afford citizens a practical and inexpensive forum for suits against the state, and the section is to be liberally construed in favor of private litigants. Kendall v. St., 231 M 316, 752 P2d 1091, 45 St. Rep. 646 (1988).

Construction of Statute: Under the rule that where two clauses or phrases in a statute are expressed in the disjunctive as in this section, they are coordinate and either is applicable to any situation to which its terms relate. An action may be tried either in the county in which defendant resides or in the county in which plaintiff resides and defendant may be found. The word "found" means found for legal service of summons in contradistinction to the word "reside", and is not to be understood in any sense other than as frequently used in statutes relative to service of process, to wit: "to come upon by seeking or by effort". Shields v. Shields, 115 M 146, 139 P2d 528 (1943).

"Found" Defined: Defendant is properly said to be "found" where served only if he is at the place where served voluntarily, and not by reason of plaintiff's fraud, artifice, or trick for the purpose of obtaining service. Shields v. Shields, 115 M 146, 139 P2d 528 (1943).

Wife "Found" in Divorce Action: Under the rule that if the county in which an action is brought and the one to which it is sought to have it transferred are both proper counties, the action must stay where the complaint was filed. Where plaintiff husband in a divorce action resided in the county where the action was commenced, and the wife residing in an adjoining county was "found" and served in the county of the husband's residence, venue was proper in both counties and change to the county of her residence was error. Shields v. Shields, 115 M 146, 139 P2d 528 (1943).

Action on Contract for Benefit of Third Person: An action brought by a merchant against a state highway contractor and his bondsman under this section, 18-2-204, and 28-2-206 to recover for supplies furnished the former's subcontractor, was one upon a contract between the contractor and the state for the benefit of a third person and was triable in the county in which the person entitled to payment resided or had his place of business. H. Earl Clack Co. v. Staunton, 100 M 26, 44 P2d 1069 (1935).

SUITS IN EQUITY

Injury by Motor Vehicle for Hire: Though, generally speaking, all equitable suits are properly triable under this section in the county in which defendants, or any of them, reside, 69-12-209 specifically provides that a party injured by the illegal operation of a motor vehicle for hire may by Writ of Injunction seek enforcement of the act in any county in which the motor carrier is engaged in business. Hence, where injunctive relief was sought against such a carrier in a county between the county seat in which defendant was doing business and that of his home county, the court erred in granting a change of venue to the latter county. Great N. Ry. v. Hatch, 98 M 269, 38 P2d 976 (1934).

Suit to Establish Trust: A suit seeking to establish a trust in corporate stock, asking for an accounting and an injunction against the transfer of any shares of stock pending suit, in which proof of the contract out of which it arose was but incidental to the establishment of the trust, was purely equitable and transitory and governed as to venue by this section. McKinney v. Mires, 95 M 191, 26 P2d 169 (1933).

CHANGE OF VENUE

Proper Venue for Custody and Parenting Plan Petition: When their child was born, the parties lived in Yellowstone County, but the father subsequently moved to Gallatin County. When the child was 4 years old, her paternal grandmother, who resided in Beaverhead County, took the child to Beaverhead County at the mother's request to facilitate the mother's move to a new residence. While the child was with her grandmother, the father petitioned for a parenting plan and temporary custody, alleging abuse of the child by the mother. In the petition, the father stated that the child's residence was Beaverhead County. The mother then moved to change venue to Yellowstone County on grounds that neither parent lived in Beaverhead County, that the child actually lived in Yellowstone County, and that the facts upon which the father was seeking relief arose in Yellowstone County. The District Court changed venue to Gallatin County where the father resided, in deference to the father's allegations of child abuse in Yellowstone County. The mother appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Under 25-2-118, the proper place for trial of an action brought under Title 40, ch. 4, is the county where the petitioner or the respondent has resided for 90 days preceding the action, so either Gallatin or Yellowstone County would have been a proper venue. However, by failing to file the action in either of those counties, the father waived his right to have the matter tried in the county of his residence, so the mother was entitled to a change of venue to Yellowstone County. In re Custody & Parenting Plan of B.C.B.W, 2008 MT 147, 343 M 215, 185 P3d 327 (2008).

Change of Venue on Multiple Claims to Defendants' County of Residence While Allowing Plaintiff to Pursue Venue Established by Contract Proper: The franchise agreement between one plaintiff and defendants provided that plaintiff could elect to initiate an action concerning breach of the agreement in Yellowstone County. Franchise agreements with other plaintiffs provided that Missoula County would be the place of venue. All plaintiffs joined in a suit against defendants, which was filed in Yellowstone County. Defendants moved for a change of venue to Missoula County where the company headquarters were located, and the motion was granted. Plaintiff whose agreement allowed for a Yellowstone County venue was allowed to sever its claims and keep its action in that county if desired. Plaintiffs appealed the venue change, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The determination of whether a county is the proper place for trial is a question of law involving application of the venue statutes to pleaded facts. The general rule in this section provides that the proper place for trial in civil actions is the defendant's county of residence. Additionally, in a case involving multiple claims, 25-2-116 provides that a party that is entitled to a change of venue on any claim is entitled to a change of venue on the entire action, subject to the power of the trial court to separate claims or issues for trial. Therefore, the District Court did not err in moving the venue to Missoula County where defendants resided and in allowing the plaintiff with a contractual provision for trial in Yellowstone County to pursue its action there. DML, Inc. v. Fulbright, 2005 MT 204, 328 M 212, 119 P3d 93 (2005), followed in Buhmann v. St., 2008 MT 465, 348 M 205, 201 P3d 70 (2008), and distinguishing Wentz v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 14, 928 P2d 237 (1996), and Liang v. Lai, 2004 MT 188, 322 M 199, 94 P3d 759 (2004).

Erroneous Change of Venue for Defendants When Proper Venue Chosen by Plaintiff: Plaintiff filed a tort action in Flathead County where a slip and fall accident occurred. Defendants moved for and were granted a change of venue to Sanders County where one defendant resided. Plaintiff appealed the venue change, and the Supreme Court reversed, noting that a defendant must be granted a change of venue if an action is brought in a county that is not statutorily designated as a proper place for trial, but because Flathead County was the location of the premises where the allegedly tortious act occurred, it was a proper venue, so no motion to change the place of trial on the entire action could be granted. Because plaintiff chose a proper venue, the District Court erred when it granted defendants' venue change. Liang v. Lai, 2004 MT 188, 322 M 199, 94 P3d 759 (2004), following Nelson v. Cenex, Inc., 2004 MT 170, 322 M 54, 97 P3d 1073 (2004). See also Wentz v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 14, 928 P2d 237 (1996), and Ward v. Johnson, 2012 MT 96, 365 Mont. 19, 277 P.3d 1216.

Location of Resident Agent of Foreign Corporation Proper Venue in Tort Action: Nelson worked for a Minnesota corporation at a refinery in Yellowstone County. Nelson brought a tort action based on exposure to asbestos during employment, naming as defendants three Minnesota corporations that operated the refinery and two individuals from Yellowstone County who worked as plant managers. Nelson resided in Missoula County, and the corporations' resident agent was located in Lewis and Clark County. Nelson brought the action in Lewis and Clark County. The corporations moved for a change of venue to Yellowstone County, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. A defendant may move for a change of venue when an action is not brought in a county that is statutorily designated as a proper place for trial, and the motion must be granted if the county in which the action is filed is not a proper place for trial. If more than one county is proper, the action may be brought in any of those counties and a motion for change of venue may not be granted. The general rule for determining venue is this section, but there are statutory exceptions to the general rule for specific types of actions. Venue rules for tort actions are in 25-2-122, including venue for tort actions against a foreign corporation, one of which is the county in which the corporation's resident agent is located. Thus, Lewis and Clark County was a proper venue for trial, and the District Court did not err in denying the motion for change of venue. Nelson v. Cenex, Inc., 2004 MT 170, 322 M 54, 97 P3d 1073 (2004), distinguishing Platt v. Sears, 222 M 184, 721 P2d 336 (1986), and followed in Ward v. Johnson, 2012 MT 96, 365 Mont. 19, 277 P.3d 1216.

Specific Statute Governing Venue in Contract Cases Controlling Over General Civil Venue Statute — Remand for Determination of Place Where Services to Be Performed Under Terms of Contract: Defendant hired plaintiff to perform legal services. About 1 month later, plaintiff was terminated, but defendant refused to pay for plaintiff's work. The District Court determined that under this section, proper venue was the place where defendant resided. The court also examined 25-2-121 and held that because the action was a contract action, 25-2-121(1)(a) dictated that the action be held at the place of defendant's residence. Because the action was based on a contract, the specific provisions of 25-2-121 prevailed over the general venue provisions for civil actions in this section. The District Court neglected to consider 25-2-121(1)(b), which provides that a proper venue for contract actions may also be the county in which the contract was to be performed. Here, the record contained no written contracts for legal services, so the Supreme Court was unable to determine whether specific performance provisions had been included in the contract. The case was remanded so that the District Court could determine whether a specific place of performance was named in the contract, in which case the proper venue would be the named county or the county of residence of defendant. However, if there were no written contracts or if no specific place of performance was named, then proper venue would be the place where the services were performed or the county of residence of defendant. Whalen v. Mont. Right to Life Ass'n, 2002 MT 328, 313 M 204, 60 P3d 972 (2002).

No Defendant Residing in State — Plaintiff May File in Any County, Not Just County Where Alleged Injury Occurred: Norwest Bank argued that the lower court erred in refusing to change venue to Yellowstone County, which was the county where its registered agent was located and where the alleged injury occurred. The Supreme Court held that the statute requiring that a suit be brought in the county where the resident agent resides did not apply to Norwest because the statute referred to corporations incorporated in a state other than Montana and Norwest as a federally chartered bank did not qualify as a corporation. The Supreme Court also held that although one statute allowed the filing of a suit in the county where the alleged injury occurred, another allowed a plaintiff to file in any county when none of the defendants were a resident of the state. Therefore, the plaintiff had properly filed in Cascade County. The bank was not entitled to a change of venue. Spoonheim v. Norwest Bank Mont., 277 M 417, 922 P2d 528, 53 St. Rep. 764 (1996).

Status of Parties and Pleadings at Time of Complaint or Time Moving Party Appears as Determining Venue: A complaint was filed in Missoula County against several defendants, including a Kalispell doctor, who moved for a change of venue to Flathead County. The motion was initially denied, but upon dismissal of the other defendants, the doctor again moved for a change of venue, which was granted. The District Court erred in granting the change because in Montana, venue will be determined by the status of the parties and pleadings at the time of the complaint or at the time that the moving party appears in the action. Otherwise, courts would be required to reexamine the question of venue whenever the composition of the parties is altered. Emery v. Federated Foods, Inc., 262 M 83, 863 P2d 426, 50 St. Rep. 1454 (1993), following Boucher v. Steffes, 160 M 482, 503 P2d 659 (1972).

Temporary Absences From Residence — No Change in Place of Residence: After Rosemary petitioned for a dissolution of her marriage, her husband Timothy discovered that she had been away from her home in Billings for a 6-week period to attend classes at MSU. During that time, she had lived in Pray in Park County. Upon discovery of these facts, Timothy asked for reconsideration of an earlier motion to change venue to Park County. Citing School District No. 12 v. Simonsen, 210 M 100, 683 P2d 471 (1984), the Supreme Court held that the District Court properly denied the motion for a change of venue because temporary absences from one's residence do not change an individual's place of residence. In re Marriage of Bernethy, 260 M 402, 860 P2d 157, 50 St. Rep. 1144 (1993).

Choice of County in Tort Action Against Nonresident Defendant: In a tort action against a nonresident defendant, the plaintiff may choose either the county where the tort was committed or any county in Montana. (However, see the 1995 and 1997 amendments to 25-2-122, which restricted this decision.) Haug v. Burlington N. RR Co., 236 M 368, 770 P2d 517, 46 St. Rep. 432 (1989), overruling McAlear v. Kasak, 225 M 113, 731 P2d 908, 44 St. Rep. 81 (1987).

Filing Proper in County Where Tort Occurred: Parties met in Dawson County and orally agreed that defendant would find, evaluate, and appraise potential mineral investment opportunities for plaintiffs, but there was no agreement on a place of performance of the oral contract. Parties later met in Flathead County, and defendant apprised plaintiffs of the value of mineral interests in eastern Montana and western North Dakota. Plaintiffs purchased the interests for $175,000 but subsequently determined the interests were nearly worthless. Plaintiffs filed a breach of contract and related tort suit in Flathead County. Defendant sought change of venue to Dawson County, his place of residence. Absent a written contract with express terms or an agreement on where the oral contract was to be performed, the District Court correctly determined that any tort resulting from defendant's alleged misrepresentation would have had to occur in Flathead County; therefore, the motion for change of venue was properly denied. Berlin v. Boedecker, 235 M 443, 767 P2d 349, 46 St. Rep. 125 (1989).

Tort Action — Change of Venue for Nonresident Defendant Proper: Following an allegation of sexual harassment, lawyer filed defamation suit. The District Court granted nonresident defendant's motion for a change of venue, moving the tort action to the county in which the lawyer's office was located and where the tort allegedly arose. Upon appeal, the Supreme Court upheld the District Court, ruling that in a tort action, proper venue for suing a nonresident defendant is in either the county of defendant's residence or the county where the tort occurred. McAlear v. Kasak, 225 M 113, 731 P2d 908, 44 St. Rep. 81 (1987), overruled in Haug v. Burlington N. RR Co., 236 M 368, 770 P2d 517, 46 St. Rep. 432 (1989). (However, see the 1995 and 1997 amendments to 25-2-122, which limits the place of trial against a foreign corporation.)

Venue Properly Removed: In an action sounding in contract and tort, venue properly was removed from the county where business was done by the first defendant, a foreign corporation having no residence for venue purposes, to the county where the plaintiffs and other defendant resided and where the accident occurred. The venue statutes for actions in contract (25-2-121) and in tort (25-2-122) contain exceptions to the basic venue rule; these two statutes control the issue of proper venue. Platt v. Sears, 222 M 184, 721 P2d 336, 43 St. Rep. 1160 (1986).

Venue for Tort Class Action Against Counties: Plaintiffs brought a class action suit against Dow Chemical Co., Lake County, and Missoula County. The complaint did not allege that either Missoula County or Lake County was the exclusive cause of one injury. Rather, the pleadings indicated that the plaintiffs could have been damaged by the actions of either or both counties acting separately. In such a situation both counties are not necessary parties to one action, and the counties should be sued where they are located. The suit would be properly filed in Lake County for the tort allegedly committed against the Lake County plaintiffs. Dow Chemical Co. is entitled to a change of venue as to the claims filed by the Lake County plaintiffs. State ex rel. Kesterson v. District Court, 189 M 200, 614 P2d 1050 (1980).

Failure to File Tax Return — Change of Venue Denied: Venue of a criminal action charging intentional failure to file a properly completed Montana individual income tax return would lie in either Lewis and Clark County or the county in which defendants reside. But, since the complaint was filed in the former and no legal justification or prejudice was shown to support transfer, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court's change of venue from Lewis and Clark County. Dept. of Revenue v. Lane, 187 M 230, 609 P2d 300 (1980), following St. v. Bretz, 169 M 505, 548 P2d 949 (1976). (The determination of venue in Bretz was reversed in St. v. Bretz, 180 M 307, 590 P2d 614 (1979), because the conviction was reversed on another issue and the court corrected what was then viewed as manifest error on the prior venue decision.)

Change of Venue From One Proper County to Another Based on Residence Denied: Under 17-4-103, Lewis and Clark County was a proper venue for an action to recover funds paid to the defendant by the state and defendant's motion for a change of venue to the county in which the defendant resided was properly denied. The courts are powerless to transfer a cause to another venue, based on the residence of the parties, even though the other venue may also have been proper. The power to change the place of trial based on residence exists only when the county designated in the complaint is not the proper county. St. v. Sec. St. Bank, 184 M 461, 603 P2d 681 (1979).

Change of Venue Proper — Particular Facts: Under statute providing that on proper motion court must change place of trial when convenience of witnesses and ends of justice would be promoted and under further statute requiring action to be tried in county in which defendants reside at commencement of action, defendants were entitled to have action moved to county upon which all agreed, which was residence of one defendant, which was place insurance contract was entered into, which was where tort occurred, and which was most convenient for defendants and their witnesses. Truck Ins. Exch. v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 149 M 387, 427 P2d 50 (1967).

Venue Not Shown — Change of Venue Proper: Denial of defendant's motion for change of venue to place where he resided was improper since, where plaintiff-relator did not plead the commission agreement itself or include it as an exhibit, there was no way of considering the venue matter except on the residence of the defendant. Rapp v. Graham, 145 M 371, 401 P2d 579 (1965), distinguished in Boucher v. Steffes, 160 M 482, 503 P2d 659 (1972).

No Removal From Proper County: Either the county of defendant's residence or the county where the contract was to be performed is the proper county for the trial of the action, and if the plaintiff chooses either of these counties, defendant may not have it removed, except as stated in the last part of this section, but it is still subject to the power of the court to change place of trial as provided in 25-2-201. Love v. Mon-O-Co Oil Corp., 133 M 56, 319 P2d 1056 (1958).

Equity Action — Change of Venue Improper: Though, generally speaking, all equitable suits are properly triable under this section in the county in which defendants, or any of them, reside, 69-12-209 specifically provides that a party injured by the illegal operation of a motor vehicle for hire may by Writ of Injunction seek enforcement of the act in any county in which the motor carrier is engaged in business. Hence, where injunctive relief was sought against such a carrier in a county between the county seat in which defendant was doing business and that of his home county, the court erred in granting a change of venue to the latter county. Great N. Ry. v. Hatch, 98 M 269, 38 P2d 976 (1934).

25-2-121. Contracts.

Evidence Commission Recommendations for Revisions

Explanation: Present section 25-2-101 [renumbered 25-2-121] was, until the recodification of 1979, part of section 93-2904, RCM 1947, which lumped together in a single paragraph the basic rule of venue and all its major exceptions. This was the provision about which Justice Sheehy said, in Clark Fork Paving v. Atlas Concrete, 178 Mont. 8, 582 P.2d 779 (1978), "Possibly no statute has spawned more litigation in this state ...." The portion that has become section 25-2-101 [renumbered 25-2-121] was the focus of a major portion of that litigation.

The original intent of the "contract exception" to the general rule placing venue at the residence of the defendant was to permit an alternative place of trial. The plaintiff could, if he chose, elect to file his action in the county where the contract was to be performed rather than at defendant's residence. The Supreme Court, however, in Interstate Lumber Co. v. District Court, 54 Mont. 602, 172 P. 1030 (1918), held that the word "may" in the statute meant "must" and construed the provision to mean that contract actions were properly triable only in the county of performance. This decision, in conjunction with the earlier case of State ex rel. Coburn v. District Court, 41 Mont. 84, 108 P. 144 (1910), which had ruled that the place of performance of all contracts calling for payment of money was at the place of the payment, effectively established the venue of practically all contract actions at the plaintiff's, rather than the defendant's, residence. The Coburn and Interstate Lumber cases were overruled in Hardenburgh v. Hardenburgh, 115 Mont. 469, 146 P.2d 151 (1944) which decided that "may" means "may" rather than "must" and set out rules for determining the place of performance of various types of contracts that have been followed down to the present.

The last sentence of subsection (1)(b) and subsection (2) through the end of the section is an attempt to codify the results of an extensive line of cases dealing with the problems created by section 25-2-101 [renumbered 25-2-121], MCA, and its predecessor, particularly those cases struggling with the meaning of the "place of performance" language of the statutes.

The contract venue statutes since their beginning have clearly intended to allow alternative venues when a contract is to be performed in a county other than the one where the defendant lives, but they have not proven easy to apply. Although the Hardenburgh case got rid of an obviously erroneous interpretation that had robbed the alternative provision of much of its benefit, the decision did not settle all the problems. Determining the place where a contract is to be performed is frequently not an easy task. Most contracts call for a monetary payment of some sort, and when, under the Coburn and Interstate Lumber cases, this was made the single determinative factor, the location was normally clear. After those decisions were changed, that certainty disappeared. The Hardenburgh court, anticipating the difficulties that could result, laid down a succession of interpretive rules which have generally been followed and developed in later cases.

This portion of the section seeks to state the case rules in a form as brief and complete as possible although, in dealing with a series of court opinions that are lengthy and diverse, and extend over a period of 40 years, the rules are not always simple and clear.

The Hardenburgh rules establish a basic framework. If a contract specifies a place of performance, the matter is settled; the courts will accept the designation. Where the contract is not specific, the court will look to see whether the contract allows performance to occur only at a particular site. If so, that is the location "by necessary implication." Some of these determinations are reasonably simple, others complex. In the uncomplicated category are such cases as Colbert Drug v. Electrical Products, 106 Mont. 11, 74 P.2d 437 (1937) where the contract, although it did not specify any county as the place of performance, was to maintain neon signs in Butte; Thomas v. Cloyd, 110 Mont. 343, 100 P.2d 938 (1940) in which the defendant contracted to secure employment for the plaintiff in Butte; and Love v. Mon-O-Co Oil, 133 Mont. 56, 319 P.2d 1056 (1958), an action on a contract to drill an oil well on a described tract of land which lay in Fallon county. In each case the Court found a county of performance specified by necessary implication.

Where both parties have duties and obligations which must be carried out at different locations, fixing the place of performance becomes more difficult. Before Hardenburgh, place of payment was the sole determining factor in most cases. After Hardenburgh, the court, in a search for a similar touchstone, experimented with a number of factors; place of negotiation, place of execution, place of payment, or some combination of them. Ultimately, it settled on the "county of activity," that is, the county where the primary purpose of the contract was to be accomplished.

Determining "county of activity" as outlined in the series of cases which fixed this as the test, involves several steps. It begins with a consideration of all the duties and obligations of all the parties (Hardenburgh); then the court seeks to determine the ultimate purpose to be achieved and decide which of the various acts are primary and which subsidiary to that purpose. The county where the primary actions are to be performed is the county of activity. The process was most clearly demonstrated in Brown v. First Federal Savings and Loan, 144 Mont. 149, 394 P.2d 1017 (1964), which also contains the clearest expression of the principle. The plaintiffs, residents of Lewis and Clark County, received a loan from the defendant loan association to build a house in Helena. The association's office was in Great Falls; the loan was made there, payments were to be received there, the contractors and subcontractors were to be supervised and paid from there, and all the financial activities performed there. The actual construction, however, was all in Lewis and Clark County. The plaintiffs' action was for breach of defendant's obligations to supervise and pay the contractors properly. Defendants claimed venue was in Cascade County because the suit concerned duties to be performed there. Plaintiffs maintained that the contract existed primarily to build a house in Lewis and Clark County, and that was the proper county of performance. The Supreme Court held for the plaintiffs, saying, in part, "The theatre of performance, by necessary implication of what the parties intended as evidenced by the terms of the contract, is Helena."

Brown is one of a number of cases holding that it is the overall purpose of the contract, not the particular provision that is in contest in the action, which governs venue. It is also one of a series, again beginning with Hardenburgh, which have decided what is "necessarily implied" about performance of particular kinds of contracts. It is these rules that are set out in subsections (2)(a) through (2)(d) of the draft bill.

The lead-in to subsection (2) recognizes that the contracts named in the subsection are not an exclusive list of contracts, but merely those in which a rule has evolved. The Commission does not intend to require that all contracts somehow be pigeon-holed into one of the categories to establish venue. Contracts not within the list are subject to analysis under subsection (1)(b)(ii) to establish venue.

Subsection (2)(a) incorporates the holding of the Hardenburgh case, which involved the sale of a business and included real and personal, tangible and intangible property; McNussen v. Graybeal, 141 Mont. 571, 380 P.2d 575 (1963) dealing with the sale of milk produced and gathered in Lake county but sold in Missoula (venue was held to be in Missoula county where delivery and sale was made); and Hopkins v. Scottie Homes, 180 Mont. 498, 591 P.2d 230 (1979) where a mobile home was financed and sold in Valley county for delivery and erection in Musselshell county (venue lay in Musselshell county where delivery was to be made and the home set up).

Subsection (2)(b) adopts the rule declared in Hardenburgh for employment contracts. The Hardenburgh decision specifically overruled the portion of State ex rel. Coburn v. District Court, 41 Mont. 84, 108 P. 145 (1910) which had held that the venue of any contract calling for payment of money was at the residence of the creditor, but adopted the holding of Coburn that the place of performance of a labor contract was the place where the labor or services were to be performed. No subsequent cases have dealt with the question, so the basic rule of Coburn and Hardenburgh is clearly in force and is expressed in this subsection.

Subsection (2)(c) sets out the "insurance and indemnity" rule expressed in Hardenburgh, Hartford Accident and Indemnity Co. v. Viken, 157 Mont. 93, 483 P.2d 266 (1971), and General Insurance Co. v. Town Pump, 196 Mont. 531, 640 P.2d 463 (1982). Hardenburgh did not deal with insurance, so its discussion of the subject is technically dictum, but the Court was trying to deal with all the implications of the basic change it had made by overruling the Coburn and Interstate Lumber cases. The later Hartford and General Insurance opinions adopted Hardenburgh's rationale and applied it to the insurance contracts at issue in those cases. Using the "principal activity" test of Brown v. First Federal, supra, the Court in Hartford ruled that the performance called for in an insurance or indemnity contract is payment by the insurer on the happening of the named contingency. General Insurance made this doctrine more specific by holding that the place of performance of an insurance contract covering property in a number of different locations was in the county where the particular property involved in the claim at issue was situated.

The language of subsection (2)(c) is taken from the opinions in the Hardenburgh and Hartford cases.

Subsection (2)(d) is the rule of Brown v. First Federal, supra. Brown dealt with a contract for the original construction of a building, but the conclusion seems inescapable that its rationale is equally applicable to repair contracts, so they are included.

Note: Not all of the cases construing the contract exception to the basic venue rule, even those beginning with Hardenburgh, are totally reconcilable. Considering their numbers, it would be a miracle if they were. This proposed section is based on the large majority of the cases, which includes all of those that are most detailed and thoroughly considered, holding that contract venue lies in the county where the principal activity is to take place. A few opinions seem to state that a contract can have more than one place of performance, depending on the part of the contract sought to be enforced or the purpose of the specific litigation. These cases ignore the statutory language referring to the county in which the contract was to be performed, and are an open invitation to continue the endless round of litigation that the contract exception has spawned in the past. The proposed section therefore presumes a single place of performance of any contract, located in the county of its principal activity.

This proposal would follow and reaffirm Hardenburgh, Brown, McNussen v. Graybeal, and Hopkins v. Scottie Homes, but reject the rule of Peenstra v. Berek, 188 Mont. 489, 614 P.2d [520], which held that a contract for sale of goods was divisible into separate performances by buyer and seller. Each was to occur in a different county—the seller was to deliver the goods in the buyer's county, and the buyer was to make payments in the seller's county. Since the seller's performance was complete and he had brought the action for payment, the Court said, venue lay in the county where the buyer was to perform by making payment. Peenstra casts doubt on the entire sequence of decisions since Hardenburgh and throws the law back into uncertainty. The proposed section rejects it and any other decisions based on a "multiple performance" concept.

Compiler's Comments

1985 Amendment: In lead-in of (1) substituted "The proper place of trial for actions upon contracts is either" for "Actions upon contracts may be tried in"; inserted (1)(a) relating to venue in county where defendant resides; at end of first sentence of (1)(b) deleted "subject, however, to the power of the court to change the place of trial as provided in this code" and inserted language on determining in which county a contract is to be performed; and inserted (2) setting forth a partial list of classes of contracts and the appropriate venue (see Ch. 432, sec. 9, L. 1985).

Case Notes

General 151
Performance of Contract 153

GENERAL

Venue in Action Naming Two Defendants — Venue Proper for One Defendant Proper for Both — Improper Change of Venue: Plaintiff brought complaints against two employees who were allegedly involved in kickback schemes involving the purchase and sale of certain feed ingredients on plaintiff's behalf. Under the allegations, no county was a proper venue for both defendants on all claims. One defendant was granted a change of venue to the county where that employee performed his employment contract, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. Under 25-2-116, if an action names two or more defendants, a county that is a proper place of trial for any defendant is proper for all defendants. Because the action as a whole could have been brought in the county of residence of either defendant, the change of venue was not proper under the prerequisite in 25-2-114 that applies when an action is brought in a county that is not a proper place of trial. The county where plaintiff brought the action was a proper venue, and the case was remanded for reinstatement of the original county as the proper venue. Farmers Union Ass'n v. Paquin, 2009 MT 305, 352 M 390, 217 P3d 74 (2009).

Proper Venue for Contract Action: At the option of the plaintiff in a contract action, venue is proper in either the county where the defendant resides or the county where the contract is to be performed. The contract in this case was for the sale of goods and provision of services but made no provision for place of performance. The District Court correctly determined that the county where the principal activity of the contract occurred was a proper venue for the action. Missouri-Stone Co. v. Barber Seed Serv., Inc., 256 M 66, 844 P2d 112, 49 St. Rep. 1139 (1992), followed in Tractor & Equip. Co. v. Zerbe Bros., 2001 MT 162, 306 M 111, 32 P3d 721 (2001).

Foreign Corporation and Montana Resident as Defendants: The rule set out in 25-2-118 that a foreign corporation may be sued in any county in the state does not apply when Montana residents are also named as defendants. In that case, venue is determined by Montana's other venue statutes. Platt v. Sears, 222 M 184, 721 P2d 336, 43 St. Rep. 1160 (1986).

Liability Insurance — Where Losses Suffered: A corporation residing in Silver Bow County purchased a liability insurance policy covering its various gasoline stations located throughout the state. In an action under the policy involving a gasoline station located in Gallatin County, venue was properly in that county, that being where the losses being paid for were suffered. Gen. Ins. Co. of America v. Town Pump, Inc., 196 M 531, 640 P2d 463, 39 St. Rep. 303 (1982).

Fraudulent Misrepresentations Preceding Contract Formation — Tort Action: When purchasing a bull, plaintiff relied on the defendant's alleged intentionally false and fraudulently made representations and brought an action for compensatory and punitive damages. As plaintiff chose to affirm the contract and sue for the misrepresentations preceding the contract, the action was in tort and not in contract. Woolcock v. Beartooth Ranch, 196 M 65, 637 P2d 520, 38 St. Rep. 2130 (1981).

County of Alleged Tort and Where Contract to Be Performed — Same County: The plaintiffs' allegation of defendants' tortious conduct in the county of plaintiffs' residence, when considered with the allegations that performance of the contract was to be in that county, was sufficient to uphold the determination of the District Court that proper venue for the action was in the county of plaintiffs' residence. Hopkins v. Scottie Homes, Inc., 180 M 498, 591 P2d 230 (1979).

Application to Foreign Corporate Surety: Action brought against foreign corporate surety without joinder of principal was properly venued in county where plaintiff resided, even though the bond assured a subcontract which was to be performed in another county and the residence of the subcontractor was in another county. Morgen & Oswood Constr. v. USF&G Co., 167 M 64, 535 P2d 170 (1975).

Action on Contract and in Tort: In action in which complaint stated a claim for breach of contract and an interrelated and dependent claim in tort, the county of performance of the contract was the county in which any tort was committed for purpose of determining venue. Slovak v. Kentucky Fried Chicken, 164 M 1, 518 P2d 791 (1974).

Burden of Proof: In contract action, once defendant showed that his place of residence was other than where suit was brought, the burden of proof was on the plaintiff to meet the motion for change of venue. Rapp v. Graham, 145 M 371, 401 P2d 579 (1965).

Stipulation of Venue in Contract: Defendant in action to recover monthly rental for electric signs was not entitled to change of venue where stipulation in contract established venue of any future suit or action instituted for enforcement of contract. Elec. Prod. Consol. v. Bodell, 132 M 243, 316 P2d 788 (1957).

Highway Contract — Residence of Purchaser: An action brought by a merchant against a state highway contractor and his bondsman under this section, 18-2-203, and 18-2-206 to recover for supplies furnished the former's subcontractor, was one upon a contract between the contractor and the state for the benefit of a third person and was triable in the county in which the person entitled to payment resided or had his place of business. H. Earl Clack Co. v. Staunton, 100 M 26, 44 P2d 1069 (1935).

Implied Contract Included: The term "contract", as used in this section, not being limited in meaning either by the context or by any qualifying word, must be accepted in its broadest signification, and as including every kind of contract, whether express or implied. State ex rel. Interstate Lumber Co. v. District Court, 54 M 602, 172 P 1030 (1918); but see Fraser v. Clark, 128 M 160, 273 P2d 105 (1954).

PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT

Alleged Misrepresentation of Nature of Horse — County Where Contract Performed Considered Place Where Tort Committed for Venue Purposes: Plaintiff contracted to purchase a gentle, broken horse in Yellowstone County and was subsequently injured while riding the horse in Silver Bow County, where plaintiff filed a tort action alleging misrepresentation of the nature of the horse. Defendants moved for a change of venue to Yellowstone County, but the motion was denied, so defendants appealed and the Supreme Court reversed. General application of tort venue law requires that a tort action be filed either in the county where the defendant resides or in the county where the offending actions of the tort were taken or committed. In this case, the contract for sale of the horse was performed in Yellowstone County, making that county a proper venue for a contract claim. Further, the alleged tortious conduct of misrepresentation of the nature of the horse also occurred in Yellowstone County. Thus, the tort was committed in Yellowstone County for venue purposes. Deichl v. Savage, 2009 MT 293, 352 M 282, 216 P3d 749 (2009).

Specific Statute Governing Venue in Contract Cases Controlling Over General Civil Venue Statute — Remand for Determination of Place Where Services to Be Performed Under Terms of Contract: Defendant hired plaintiff to perform legal services. About 1 month later, plaintiff was terminated, but defendant refused to pay for plaintiff's work. The District Court determined that under 25-2-118, proper venue was the place where defendant resided. The court also examined this section and held that because the action was a contract action, subsection (1)(a) of this section dictated that the action be held at the place of defendant's residence. Because the action was based on a contract, the specific provisions of this section prevailed over the general venue provisions for civil actions in 25-2-118. The District Court neglected to consider subsection (1)(b) of this section, which provides that a proper venue for contract actions may also be the county in which the contract was to be performed. Here, the record contained no written contracts for legal services, so the Supreme Court was unable to determine whether specific performance provisions had been included in the contract. The case was remanded so that the District Court could determine whether a specific place of performance was named in the contract, in which case the proper venue would be the named county or the county of residence of defendant. However, if there were no written contracts or if no specific place of performance was named, then proper venue would be the place where the services were performed or the county of residence of defendant. Whalen v. Mont. Right to Life Ass'n, 2002 MT 328, 313 M 204, 60 P3d 972 (2002).

Contract Agreement for Sale of Goods and Performance of Services — Venue Proper in Place of Principle Activity: A dispute arose between the parties to a contract regarding the proper county of venue. Plaintiff maintained that because the dispute arose out of a contract, proper venue should be determined under this section and that because the contract was for the sale of goods only, subsection (2)(a) of this section should apply to establish venue in Yellowstone County where possession of the goods was to be delivered. Although defendant agreed that this section applied, defendant contended that because the contract was for both the sale of goods and the performance of services, subsection (1)(b)(ii) of this section should apply, establishing appropriate venue in the county where the principle activity was to take place, which was Valley County. Defendant also argued that under 25-2-118, venue was proper in Valley County, defendant's county of residence. The District Court examined all the obligations required of the parties at the time of the agreement and applied Missouri-Stone Co. v. Barber Seed Serv., Inc., 256 M 66, 844 P2d 112 (1992), concluding that because the contract was for both the sale of goods and the performance of services, subsection (1)(b)(ii) of this section was the appropriate subsection under which to establish venue—in Valley County where the principle activity was to take place. The Supreme Court concurred. Venue was proper in either the county of defendant's residence or where the principle place of activity occurred, which in both cases was Valley County, so the District Court did not err in changing venue to Valley County. Tractor & Equip. Co. v. Zerbe Bros., 2001 MT 162, 306 M 111, 32 P3d 721 (2001).

Proper Venue for Architectural Services Contract: The proper venue for employment and service contracts is the place where the labor or services are to be performed, regardless of the place of payment for the services. Schutz Foss Architects v. Campbell, 243 M 194, 793 P2d 821, 47 St. Rep. 1129 (1990), distinguishing Whalen v. Snell, 205 M 299, 667 P2d 436 (1983).

Venue — Second Suit Abuse of Process: Venue was proper in Lewis and Clark County, the location clearly indicated in the contract as the place where the contract was to be performed. It was an abuse of process for the defendant in a suit filed in District Court in Lewis and Clark County to file an action against the plaintiff in Justice's Court in Granite County. This was an attempt to thwart the plain provisions of the written contract and a use of the court system to accomplish that goal. The Supreme Court affirmed the order of the Lewis and Clark County District Court requiring defendant to dismiss its action filed in Justice's Court in Granite County. Leasing, Inc. v. Discovery Ski Corp., 235 M 133, 765 P2d 176, 45 St. Rep. 2250 (1988).

Action to Recover Fees for Negotiating Services: Plaintiff alleged breach of contract in a suit to recover fees for negotiating services he rendered for defendants. The court held that under this section, the appropriate venue was in the county where the contract was to be performed and that under 25-2-201, the District Court must make the initial factual determination as to where the contract was performed. The court distinguished Whalen v. Snell, 205 M 299, 667 P2d 436 (1983) (an action to recover attorney fees), as being a bad faith tort claim (rather than a breach of contract claim) for which venue was properly determined under 25-2-102 (since renumbered 25-2-122). Hurly v. Studer, 234 M 100, 761 P2d 821, 45 St. Rep. 1761 (1988).

Importance of Contractual Venue Stipulation — Court Discretion: When faced with a contractual stipulation to venue, the court must place venue in the stipulated county when requested by the parties. A stipulation does not remove the court's discretion to change venue when the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice require it; however, an agreement to place venue in a particular county is a most important factor for the court to consider. Given the court's wide discretion under 25-2-201(3), the court's decision will not be disturbed in the absence of clear evidence of abuse of that discretion. Mont. Wholesale Accounts Serv. v. Penington, 233 M 72, 758 P2d 759, 45 St. Rep. 1302 (1988).

Breach of Property Warranty — Venue Where Property Located: Defendants, residents of Missoula County, sold property located in Granite County to plaintiffs. The deal was closed in Missoula County, and payments were made under the contract for deed into an escrow account in Missoula County. Plaintiffs discovered defects with the fireplace and sewer system of the house. The parties reached an agreement to offset $3,000 from the purchase price for fireplace repairs. Plaintiffs alleged it cost $12,000 more to repair the fireplace and sewer system and filed suit. At the time of filing, all payments under the contract had been made. Defendants moved to have venue changed to Missoula County, contending that under 25-2-108 (now 25-2-118), they were entitled to be sued in the county where they reside. However, the court found that 25-2-101 (now 25-2-121) provides a specific exception regarding venue on contract suits. Section 25-2-101 (now 25-2-121) gives a plaintiff the choice of bringing an action on a contract in the county where the contract was to be performed, regardless of the defendant's residence. The court held that the gravamen of the issue presented is whether sellers performed by delivering the property in Granite County defect free. The issue did not concern the payments in Missoula. Letford v. Kraus, 206 M 493, 672 P2d 265, 40 St. Rep. 1802 (1983).

Contract for Legal Services — Venue in County Where Payments Made: Plaintiff, an attorney, sued defendant, his former client, alleging that defendant had failed to pay legal fees incurred in a divorce and further that defendant had repudiated his obligation to pay for the legal services, thus committing the tort of bad faith. Plaintiff filed the action in the county in which his law office was located. Defendant moved for a change of venue to the county of his residence. The District Court granted defendant's motion. Plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court, ruling that the tort, if committed at all, was committed where payment was to be made. The court further stated that even if the plaintiff had alleged breach of contract rather than or in addition to the tort claim, venue would have been properly laid in the county in which plaintiff's law office was located. The court reasoned that the place where the divorce action was tried was not relevant to the venue issue; what was relevant was the place at which defendant was to have performed his obligation to pay the legal fees. Whalen v. Snell, 205 M 299, 667 P2d 436, 40 St. Rep. 1283 (1983).

Liability Insurance — Where Losses Suffered: A corporation residing in Silver Bow County purchased a liability insurance policy covering its various gasoline stations located throughout the state. In an action under the policy involving a gasoline station located in Gallatin County, venue was properly in that county, that being where the losses being paid for were suffered. Gen. Ins. Co. of America v. Town Pump, Inc., 196 M 531, 640 P2d 463, 39 St. Rep. 303 (1982).

Venue — Contract as Specifying Place of Performance: In a suit on a contract of sale for nonpayment of the balance of the purchase price of furniture purchased in one county and delivered to another county, the District Court properly denied defendant/buyer's claim that venue should be set where defendant lives and where the goods were delivered. If by the express terms of a contract, place of performance is established, 25-2-101 (now 25-2-121) applies and venue exists where the performance is to occur, Deimler v. Ostler, 183 M 480, 600 P2d 814 (1979); Hopkins v. Scottie Homes, Inc., 180 M 498, 591 P2d 230 (1979), rather than where defendant resides as is normally the case under 25-2-108 (now 25-2-118). Here, since the contract specifies that the remaining performance (payment by the buyer) should occur in the county where the goods were purchased, this county is the county of proper venue. Peenstra v. Berek, 188 M 489, 614 P2d 520 (1980). (Annotator's note: Chapter 432, L. 1985, amended this section to reject the holding in Peenstra and any other decisions based on a "multiple performance" concept. See Evidence Commission Recommendations for Revisions located in annotations to 25-2-121.)

Determination of Intended Place of Performance — Contract for Sale of Real Estate: In an action to recover a commission for the sale of real estate in which the residence of plaintiff, the place of deposit of earnest money, and the place of escrow were undisputedly in Cascade County, the District Court did not abuse its discretion by finding that by necessary implication the parties intended Cascade County to be the place of performance. Therefore, proper venue was determined by 25-2-101 (now 25-2-121) and not 25-2-108 (now 25-2-118). Deimler v. Ostler, 183 M 480, 600 P2d 814 (1979).

Oral Agreement for Procurement of Insurance: When party failed to procure insurance orally agreed upon, proper venue rests at the place of performance because the agreement implied that insurance would be arranged at defendant's place of business. Laforest v. Leland, 171 M 518, 559 P2d 1177 (1977).

Intent of Parties: Where intent of parties was that contract would be performed in either Cascade or Chouteau County and contract was performed in Cascade County until breach, venue of action on contract was in Cascade County rather than county of defendant's residence. Armon v. Stewart, 162 M 262, 511 P2d 8 (1973).

Basis for Venue Insufficient: In bringing suit where contract is to be performed, rather than place of defendant's residence, a mere direction by the seller as to the place of payment is not sufficient to maintain venue within exception to this section, nor can a promise to remit to cover the purchase price be sued upon by the seller in the county of the point to which the remittance is to be made. Rapp v. Graham, 145 M 371, 401 P2d 579 (1972).

Facts Relied on to Be Shown: To maintain suit in county other than that of defendant's residence, plaintiff must show clearly the facts relied on to bring the case within one of the exceptions to the rule. The contract must state clearly that it is to be performed in county other than that of defendant's residence so that no other fair construction can be placed upon it. Rapp v. Graham, 145 M 371, 401 P2d 579 (1972).

Inapplicable to Implied Contract: "Place of performance" rule regarding venue in contract actions was inapplicable in action based on implied contract that did not specify place of payment; change of venue to county where defendants resided was proper. Bick v. Haidle, 156 M 350, 480 P2d 818 (1971).

Action on Account: In action on account for grazing rentals on lands owned or controlled by plaintiff, trial court erred in granting motion for change of venue where action was predicated upon contract to be performed in county where action was brought. Cormier Bros., Inc. v. Willcutt, 154 M 297, 462 P2d 889 (1969).

Clause in Contract: Contract clause expressly requiring defendant to perform by making payments in county other than defendant's county of residence came within the operation of this section thereby entitling plaintiff to institute action on contract in county in which payments were to be made. McGregor v. Svare, 151 M 520, 445 P2d 571 (1968).

Delivery of Cattle: In suit against seller for breach of express warranty against diseased cattle, buyer properly exercised option in initiating suit in county where cattle were delivered as county where contract was to be performed. Neely v. Steinbach, 149 M 119, 423 P2d 584 (1967).

Choice of Plaintiff: If contract is to be performed in a county other than the county of defendant's residence, then the plaintiff has his choice of the two counties in which to sue. He may sue in the county where defendant resides or in the county where the contract is to be performed. The provisions of this section are permissive. Brown v. First Fed. S & L Ass'n of Great Falls, 144 M 149, 394 P2d 1017 (1964).

Place of Performance to Be Shown: In order for plaintiff to maintain action on contract in a county where defendant does not reside, the place of performance must be evident either by express terms of contract or by necessary implication that a county other than that of defendant's residence is intended to be the county of performance. Brown v. First Fed. S & L Ass'n of Great Falls, 144 M 149, 394 P2d 1017 (1964).

Oral Lease: In an action for breach of an oral agreement to lease farm land, venue was in the county where the estate of one of the defendants was being probated, in which the other defendants resided, in which the land was located, and in which service was made and the creditor's claim filed. Erickson v. Toy, 142 M 121, 385 P2d 268 (1963).

Pleading Unclear — Change of Venue Proper: Defendants had a right to a change of venue to the county of their residence where the plaintiffs' pleadings did not clearly establish that the contract forming the basis for the action was to be performed in the county where action was brought. McNussen v. Graybeal, 141 M 571, 380 P2d 575 (1963).

Actions to Which Section Applies: This section applies only to such actions as are based upon contracts which plainly show, either by their express terms or by necessary implication therefrom, that the contracting parties at the time of contracting did mutually agree upon a particular county other than that of defendant's residence wherein they intended that their contract was to be performed. Love v. Mon-O-Co Oil Corp., 133 M 56, 319 P2d 1056 (1958).

Use of "May": The word "may" in this section should not be given the force of "must". Love v. Mon-O-Co Oil Corp., 133 M 56, 319 P2d 1056 (1958).

History of Exception to Rule: Early decisions uniformly held that in actions upon contracts this section applied only to actions upon express contracts wherein the contract sued upon discloses on its face that it was to be performed in a particular county other than that of defendant's residence. Later cases departed from the earlier decisions and held that the performance exception applies to a contract which failed to state or provide for any place where such contract was to be performed. The case of State ex rel. Interstate Lumber Co. v. District Court, 54 M 602, 172 P 1030 (1918), went further and expressly overruled the earlier cases. The construction given in the Interstate Lumber Co. case and the overruling of the earlier decisions by the case are expressly disapproved. Fraser v. Clark, 128 M 160, 273 P2d 105 (1954).

Application of Statute: Where plaintiffs, operating an outdoor advertising business in the city of Missoula and surrounding territory with defendant (all residents of said city), sold their interest to defendant and 2 years later brought suit on the contract in Richland County, then plaintiffs' residence, although the parties intended the contract to be performed in Missoula County, venue in the instant case is regulated by the rule (defendant's residence) rather than by the performance exception. Hardenburgh v. Hardenburgh, 115 M 469, 146 P2d 151 (1944).

Contract of Indemnity: The place of performance of a contract of indemnity, as regards the venue of an action thereon, is the county wherein the loss or injury occurs or wherein a judgment is obtained against the assured or indemnitee (differentiating between venue of actions on contracts of indemnity and insurance, and contracts of sale). Hardenburgh v. Hardenburgh, 115 M 469, 146 P2d 151 (1944).

Exception to General Rule: The general rule governing venue in civil actions is that the action shall be tried in the county in which the defendant resides at the commencement of the action. The phrase in the last sentence of this section "in which the contract was to be performed" permits the parties, in exception to the general rule, to agree on the county of performance, but applies only to actions based upon contracts which plainly show either by express terms or necessary implication that when contracting the parties mutually agreed upon a particular county other than defendant's residence for performance or payment. Hardenburgh v. Hardenburgh, 115 M 469, 146 P2d 151 (1944).

"Performance" Defined: Performance of a contract is the doing of the things promised to be done, and while the obligation may be for the delivery of money only, in which event performance is called "payment", where the contract calls for the doing of various things (as did the contract in the instant case, payment being only one of them), payment alone would not constitute performance. Hardenburgh v. Hardenburgh, 115 M 469, 146 P2d 151 (1944).

Stipulation as to Place of Performance: A contract is performable at the place stipulated by the parties or in the absence of a stipulation at the place where the parties supposedly understood at the time of the contract that it was to be performed. In the absence of an express stipulation or of facts and circumstances showing that the parties intended performance to be elsewhere, the place of performance is considered to be the place where the contract was made. Hardenburgh v. Hardenburgh, 115 M 469, 146 P2d 151 (1944).

Tender Rule Overruled: On review of a number of prior decisions of the court involving the venue statutes, either applying the old English rule relating to tender in the matter of performance (i.e., that where the place of payment is not specified the debtor must seek his creditor and make tender wherever he may be found) or construing the word "may" as "must", such decisions were expressly overruled; held, that the tender rule is wholly inconsistent with, and the antithesis of the general venue rule, and that "may" as used in this section is a permissive word. (Cases which held "may" construed as "must" are State ex rel. Interstate Lumber Co. v. District Court, 54 M 602, 172 P 1030 (1918); Colbert Drug Co. v. Elec. Prod. Consol., 106 M 11, 74 P2d 437 (1937); and Thomas v. Cloyd, 110 M 343, 100 P2d 938 (1940).) Hardenburgh v. Hardenburgh, 115 M 469, 146 P2d 151 (1944).

Place of Performance in Alternative: Where the place of performance of a contract is in the alternative, ordinarily the promisor may elect place of performance, but if he allows the given date of performance to elapse without performing either his right of election is lost, and if he is sued for breach of contract, the right to select the place of trial passes to the promisee, irrespective of the contention of promisor that, the place of performance having been in his county, the cause should be tried there. Thomas v. Cloyd, 110 M 343, 100 P2d 938 (1940).

Loan of Money: The proper county in which to commence an action for money loaned is where performance was to be made, i.e., where payment was to be made, defendant's residence not being a material consideration. Kroehnke v. Gold Creek Min. Co., 102 M 21, 55 P2d 678 (1936).

No Place of Performance Designated: Where a contract does not designate the place of payment of a money obligation, the law makes it payable where the creditor resides or where he may be found, if within the state, and upon failure of the debtor to seek the creditor for the purpose of making payment, the latter may sue in the county of his residence. Elec. Prod. Consol. v. Goldstein, 97 M 581, 36 P2d 1033 (1934); Silver v. Morin, 74 M 398, 240 P 825 (1925); but see Hardenburgh v. Hardenburgh, 115 M 469, 146 P2d 151 (1944).

Full Performance: The provision of this section that actions upon contracts must be tried in the county in which the contract is to be performed means full not part performance. Hanlon v. Great N. Ry., 83 M 15, 268 P 547 (1928), distinguished in Thomas v. Cloyd, 110 M 343, 100 P2d 938 (1940).

Presumption as to Place of Payment: Where a contract of sale of personal property provides that payment shall be made in a county other than the one in which action is commenced, the defendant is entitled to a change of venue to that county, but where it does not so provide, the presumption is that payment is to be made at the creditor's residence or place of business, and the action is triable in his county. Courtney v. Gordon, 74 M 408, 241 P 233 (1925), distinguished in State ex rel. Gen. Oil Corp. v. Kelly, 94 M 445, 23 P2d 555 (1933).

Refusal to Change Venue as Error: Under this section refusal to change the place of trial of an action on a contract from the county of plaintiff's residence to the county in which the contract was to be performed was error. Feldman v. Sec. St. Bank, 62 M 330, 206 P 425 (1922).

Place of Payment as Place of Performance: Where men are employed to work at a mine, and no place of payment is mentioned, an action for wages may be tried in the county where the mine is situated, that being the place of performance. State ex rel. Coburn v. District Court, 41 M 84, 108 P 144 (1910).

CHANGE OF VENUE

Agreements Involving Purchase and Financing of Mobile Home: Plaintiffs, mobile home purchasers and their bank, sued a Butte bank in Ravalli County for wrongful conversion, breach of agreement, breach of statutory duty to file a satisfaction of a chattel mortgage, wrongful repossession, breach of an obligation of good faith, and fraud. The case revolved around the purchasers' agreement with a realtor to buy the mobile home, on the condition that the purchasers' bank approve the financing, and the Butte bank's agreement with the purchasers' bank that the Butte bank would release its lien on the mobile home, which the Butte bank had financed to the realtor, when the realtor was paid for the mobile home. The purchasers' bank paid the realtor, who then went out of business. The Butte bank did not relinquish the lien and attempted to repossess the mobile home. The trial court properly held that venue in Ravalli County was proper as to both agreements and properly denied the Butte bank's motion for a change of venue to Butte-Silver Bow County. Depee v. First Citizen's Bank of Butte, 258 M 217, 852 P2d 592, 50 St. Rep. 505 (1993).

Principal Place of Business Proper Venue: The plaintiff brought suit against the defendant bank to enforce a letter of credit established on its behalf by an insurance company that subsequently went into liquidation. The bank moved for a change of venue, relying on state insurance laws. The Supreme Court held that a letter of credit, as opposed to an instrument of guaranty, created a primary obligation on the part of the bank that is independent from any obligations of the party that established the letter of credit. In light of the nature of a letter of credit, the bankrupt company and its status had nothing to do with the dispute between the parties; proper venue was the county where the defendant had its principal place of business. Gerling Global Reinsurance Corp. v. First Interstate Bank, 242 M 216, 789 P2d 1237, 47 St. Rep. 726 (1990).

Suit Filed in Proper County — Defendant May Not Change Venue to Other Proper County: When a suit may properly be commenced in more than one county and plaintiff files in one of the permissible counties, defendant may not change the venue of the action to a different county even if the county preferred by defendant is also a proper place for trial. Melroe v. Doyle, 239 M 524, 781 P2d 1134, 46 St. Rep. 1884 (1989).

Filing Proper in County Where Tort Occurred: Parties met in Dawson County and orally agreed that defendant would find, evaluate, and appraise potential mineral investment opportunities for plaintiffs, but there was no agreement on a place of performance of the oral contract. Parties later met in Flathead County, and defendant apprised plaintiffs of the value of mineral interests in eastern Montana and western North Dakota. Plaintiffs purchased the interests for $175,000 but subsequently determined the interests were nearly worthless. Plaintiffs filed a breach of contract and related tort suit in Flathead County. Defendant sought change of venue to Dawson County, his place of residence. Absent a written contract with express terms or an agreement on where the oral contract was to be performed, the District Court correctly determined that any tort resulting from defendant's alleged misrepresentation would have had to occur in Flathead County; therefore, the motion for change of venue was properly denied. Berlin v. Boedecker, 235 M 443, 767 P2d 349, 46 St. Rep. 125 (1989).

Proper Venue for Interpleader Complaint and Cross-Claim in Real Property Transaction: The proper venue for an interpleader complaint requesting the resolution of conflicting demands made upon an escrow agent holding documents for a contract for deed as well as for an action seeking to affect repossession, foreclosure, or forfeiture of an interest in real property when the escrow documents were held in a county different from that in which the property was located was determined under 25-2-123 to be the county in which the property is located. St. Bank of Townsend v. Worline, 227 M 315, 738 P2d 1295, 44 St. Rep. 1112 (1987).

Venue Properly Removed: In an action sounding in contract and tort, venue properly was removed from the county where business was done by the first defendant, a foreign corporation having no residence for venue purposes, to the county where the plaintiffs and other defendant resided and where the accident occurred. The venue statutes for actions in contract (25-2-121) and in tort (25-2-122) contain exceptions to the basic venue rule; these two statutes control the issue of proper venue. Platt v. Sears, 222 M 184, 721 P2d 336, 43 St. Rep. 1160 (1986).

Reconsideration of Previous Venue Ruling: The employer filed an action in Lewis and Clark County against the employee and the Department of Labor and Industry. The employee moved for a change of venue to Yellowstone County, which was denied. A hearing was held and the matter sent back to the Department for further proceedings, which continued without conclusion. The employee then brought an action against the employer in Yellowstone County. The employer's request for a change of venue to Lewis and Clark County was properly denied. The Department is not a party to the present action, and therefore the court is not bound by 25-2-105 (renumbered 25-2-125), which requires that a cause against the Department be tried in the county in which it arose or in Lewis and Clark County. Although the two actions arose out of the same act, occurrence, or transaction, the merits of the case were not reached in the Lewis and Clark County action. The mere fact that the cases are the same does not preclude one court from reconsidering a ruling of a court of coordinate jurisdiction. The Yellowstone County District Court did not err by reconsidering the venue ruling of the Lewis and Clark County court as Yellowstone County is the proper venue. Mereness v. Frito-Lay, Inc., 216 M 154, 700 P2d 182, 42 St. Rep. 716 (1985).

Proper County for Trial on Contract: When it is clear from the status of the pleadings and the uncontroverted facts that a contract was entered into and to be performed in one county, it was proper for the District Court to deny a motion for a change of place of trial to the county where defendants reside. Clark Fork Paving, Inc. v. Atlas Concrete & Paving, 178 M 8, 582 P2d 779 (1978).

Commission Agreement — Denial of Change Improper: Denial of defendant's motion for change of venue to place where he resided was improper since where plaintiff-relator did not plead the commission agreement itself or include it as an exhibit, there was no way of considering the venue matter except on the residence of the defendant. Rapp v. Graham, 145 M 371, 401 P2d 579 (1965), distinguished in Boucher v. Steffes, 160 M 482, 503 P2d 659 (1972).

Change Properly Denied: Although express terms of construction loan agreement between borrowers residing in Lewis and Clark County and lender in Cascade County did not designate place of performance of the contract, District Court of Lewis and Clark County properly denied motion of lender for change of venue of action for breach of the contract, where borrowers' affidavit in opposition to the motion showed that the contract was to be performed in Lewis and Clark County, the loan agreement, note and mortgage being executed in Lewis and Clark County for home to be built in that county, and inspection, supervision, and completion of the home were to take place in Lewis and Clark County where all bills were to be paid. Brown v. First Fed. S & L Ass'n of Great Falls, 144 M 149, 394 P2d 1017 (1964).

Personal Injury Under Contract — Change Denied: In an action for personal injuries sustained by an employee of a railroad company, a change of venue will not be granted to the county of defendant's residence, where the complaint averred that the railroad upon which plaintiff was employed was lying within a particular county and at the time of the injury, the plaintiff was in the service of the defendant upon said railroad, as such averments sufficiently state the county in which the contract of employment was to be performed. Oels v. Helena & Livingston Smelting & Reduction Co., 10 M 524, 26 P 1000 (1891).

25-2-122. Torts.

Evidence Commission Recommendations for Revisions

Explanation: This section changes the form but not the substance of the tort exception to the basic venue rule, and adds, in the last sentence of subsection (2) [now (1)(b)], the essence of the Supreme Court's holding in Slovak v. Kentucky Fried Chicken, 164 Mont. 1, 518 P.2d 791 (1974).

The present language of section 25-2-102 [renumbered 25-2-122], like the identical wording of the contract exception, that the action "may be tried" in the county where the tort was committed, has contributed to the "mountain of cases" that Justice Sheehy complained of in the Clark Fork Paving case. The principal case, Seifert v. Gehle, 133 Mont. 320, 323 P.2d 269 (1958) followed the Hardenburgh interpretation—that the language was permissive and created an alternative to the basic rule that venue lies at the defendant's residence. This holding has not been seriously questioned since it was handed down. It accords with the contract cases and makes the interpretation uniform.

The problems that arose after Seifert were in fixing the situs of torts that involved no physical injury. Three times in 10 years the Supreme Court had to determine the county where torts would be held to be committed if they arose from a business relationship (Brown v. First Federal, supra; Foley v. General Motors, 159 Mont. 469, 499 P.2d 774 (1972); Slovak v. Kentucky Fried Chicken, 164 Mont. 1, 518 P.2d 791 (1974)). The common factor in all the cases was the existence of a contract between the parties, out of which the tort was claimed to have sprung.

In Brown and Foley the question was not reached because other considerations were decisive, but the issue was central and squarely presented in Slovak. The Court decided that in tort actions arising from contractual relationships, the tort has the same situs, for venue purposes, as the contract.

This proposed section codifies the rules of Seifert and Slovak.

Case Notes

General 160

GENERAL

General Determination of Venue in Civil Actions — Exceptions: The county where the defendant resides generally provides the proper place for trial in a civil action; however, Montana law provides exceptions to the general rule. The proper place for trial of a tort action is where the defendant resides or where the tort was committed. Venue is proper for an action for the recovery of a statutory penalty in the county where the cause or some part of the cause arose. When venue is proper in more than one county, then any one of the designated counties is a proper place for trial. Circle S Seeds of Mont., Inc. v. Mont. Merchandising, Inc., 2006 MT 311, 335 M 16, 157 P3d 671 (2006).

Venue When No Mandatory Penalty Exists — Trademark Infringement: Plaintiff corporation brought a trademark infringement action in Gallatin County. Defendant corporation sought a change of venue to Cascade County because defendant resided there and because any alleged tort occurred there. The District Court applied 25-2-124 and determined that because 30-13-335 imposed a statutory penalty for trademark infringement, venue was proper in Gallatin County as the place where the cause or some part of the cause arose. Defendant appealed on grounds that the court should have applied this section because the claims were based in tort and because any alleged tort would have been committed in defendant's business offices in Cascade County where the decision to use the trademark originated. The Supreme Court found that the penalty in 30-13-335 was optional and at the discretion of the trial court, rather than mandatory. Because the statute failed to exact punishment, it was error for the District Court to apply 25-2-124 to determine venue because a statutory penalty was not imposed. The Supreme Court then addressed defendant's argument that any alleged tort was committed in Cascade County. Pursuant to the holding in BHC Holding Co. v. Hurley, 242 M 4, 788 P2d 322 (1990), tort is committed, for purposes of determining venue, where there is a concurrence of breach of obligation and the occasion of damages. Defendant may have made the decision to use the trademark at its offices in Cascade County, making Cascade County a proper venue for the case, but that action simply started in motion defendant's duty not to interfere with plaintiff's business. The alleged breach reached fruition when defendant widely distributed its products containing the allegedly illegal trademark to the marketplace, including Gallatin County, the location of plaintiff's principal place of business and the place where plaintiff allegedly suffered lost profits and other related damages. Thus, the concurrence of breach of obligation and the occasion of damages occurred in Gallatin County, rendering Gallatin County a proper venue. Therefore, even though the District Court improperly applied 25-2-124, its determination that Gallatin County was a proper venue was legally correct under this section, so the District Court was affirmed. Circle S Seeds of Mont., Inc. v. Mont. Merchandising, Inc., 2006 MT 311, 335 M 16, 157 P3d 671 (2006).

Venue Rules for Limited Liability Partnerships: Venue rules for a limited liability partnership are the same as for a general partnership. A partnership resides where any partner resides for purposes of venue, so a tort action against a limited liability partnership may be filed in any county where any general or limited partner resides. Maupin v. Meadow Park Manor, 2005 MT 304, 329 M 413, 125 P3d 611 (2005).

Plaintiff's Ability to Maintain Action Against Defunct Corporation: In an asbestos contamination case, 47 plaintiffs sued 53 defendants in Cascade County, including one defendant, Robinson Insulation Company (Robinson), that was a defunct corporation. Another defendant, Atlantic Richfield Company (Atlantic) moved for a change of venue to Flathead County, contending that as a defunct corporation, Robinson did not reside in Cascade County at the commencement of the action and had been improperly joined so that venue could be maintained in Cascade County. However, Robinson's status as a defunct corporation did not mandate a change of venue. The corporate survival statutes, 35-1-935 and 35-1-937, maintained the status quo concerning corporate rights and responsibilities before and after dissolution, including actions against defunct corporations. Atlantic's argument that application of this interpretation to Robinson would require impermissible retroactive application of the corporate survival statutes failed because Robinson acquired no vested right to be free from liability before the running of the statute of repose in former 35-1-930 (repealed 1991). Denial of Atlantic's motion to change venue was affirmed. Allen v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2005 MT 281, 329 M 230, 124 P3d 132 (2005), following Williams v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., 174 M 387, 571 P2d 90 (1977).

Venue Determined by Allegations in Complaint — Venue for Case Against Defunct Corporation: In an asbestos contamination case, 47 plaintiffs sued 53 defendants in Cascade County, including one defendant, Robinson Insulation Company (Robinson), that was a defunct corporation that had resided in and operated out of Cascade County. Defendant Atlantic Richfield Company (Atlantic) moved for a change of venue to Flathead County, contending that Robinson did not reside in Cascade County at the commencement of the action and had been improperly joined so that venue could be maintained in Cascade County. The motion for change of venue was denied, and Atlantic appealed. The Supreme Court noted that a motion to change the place of trial brought in a proper county may not be granted and that for tort actions the proper venue is the county where any defendant resided at the commencement of the action or the county where the tort was committed. The court applied the principles of Petersen v. Tucker, 228 M 393, 742 P2d 483 (1987), in holding that the court will not go beyond the allegations in the complaint to determine questions of venue. Plaintiffs named Robinson as a defendant in both the original and amended complaint, and the District Court did not dismiss Robinson as a defendant, so Cascade County was a proper venue for the case. Denial of the motion for change of venue was affirmed. Allen v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2005 MT 281, 329 M 230, 124 P3d 132 (2005).

Provision Treating Victims of Nonresident Corporate Tortfeasors Differently From Victims of Other Nonresident Tortfeasors — Unconstitutional Violation of Equal Protection: The provisions of subsection (2) of this section provide different venues for tort suits brought against nonresident corporate defendants and other nonresident defendants. Applying the rational basis test, the Supreme Court found no question that tort victims are not treated equally under the statutory venue limitations and that the subsection discriminates against a tort victim injured by a corporate nonresident, whose choice of venue is limited to only four options according to the corporate status of the defendant, as opposed to a tort victim injured by a noncorporate nonresident whose choice of venue may be any Montana county. By limiting the choice of venue, plaintiffs are unconstitutionally deprived of the equal protection guaranteed by Art. II, sec. 4, Mont. Const. (See 1997 amendment.) Davis v. Union Pac. RR Co., 282 M 233, 937 P2d 27, 54 St. Rep. 328 (1997), distinguishing Ford v. Burlington N. RR, 250 M 188, 819 P2d 169 (1991), and followed in Isakson v. Burlington N. RR Co., 282 M 296, 937 P2d 472, 54 St. Rep. 389 (1997). See also State ex rel. Burlington N. RR Co. v. District Court, 270 M 146, 891 P2d 493 (1995).

FELA Action Not Dismissible on Grounds of Inconvenience — Number of Out-of-State Filings Irrelevant: A District Court may not dismiss a FELA action because it considers itself to be an inconvenient forum and may not change the place of a FELA trial based on the doctrine of forum non conveniens, whether based on common law or as codified in 25-2-201. This issue will not henceforth be reexamined on the basis of the number of out-of-state FELA cases filed in Montana. (However, see the 1995 and 1997 amendments to this section, which restricted this decision.) State ex rel. Burlington N. RR Co. v. District Court, 270 M 146, 891 P2d 493, 52 St. Rep. 118 (1995).

Attorney Malpractice — Venue in County Where Breach of Contract Occurs: The plaintiffs brought a malpractice suit against an attorney, alleging that he had failed to renegotiate certain loans on their behalf. The defendant moved for a change of venue to the county where his office was located. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's denial of the motion on the grounds that venue in a tort action is proper in the county where there is a concurrence of the breach of the obligation and the occasion of damages. BHC Holding Co. v. Hurley, 242 M 4, 788 P2d 322, 47 St. Rep. 490 (1990).

Civil and Tort Actions — Venue: In all civil actions, the proper place of trial is in the county of defendant's residence; but in tort actions, the proper place may be the county of defendant's residence or the county where the tort was committed. Brown v. Hartwell, 226 M 130, 734 P2d 204, 44 St. Rep. 527 (1987).

Foreign Corporation and Montana Resident as Defendants: The rule set out in 25-2-118 that a foreign corporation may be sued in any county in the state does not apply when Montana residents are also named as defendants. In that case, venue is determined by Montana's other venue statutes. (See the 1995 and 1997 amendments to this section, which limits the place of trial against a foreign corporation.) Platt v. Sears, 222 M 184, 721 P2d 336, 43 St. Rep. 1160 (1986).

Venue for Insurer Bad Faith Tort — County Where Investigation and Negotiation Transpired: In action for bad faith against insurer and its claims representative under 33-18-201, defendants moved for change of venue from Flathead County to Cascade County. Defendants contended that Cascade County was proper venue since the claims representative maintained an office and accomplished all work and decisions there. The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's denial of the motion, finding that the defendant's duty to investigate and negotiate could have been realistically performed only in Flathead County where the plaintiff's farm and the provider of defective potting soil were located. Since venue in Flathead County was proper for the insurer, it was also proper for the claims representative who resided in Cascade County. Streich & Associates, Inc. v. St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co., 221 M 209, 717 P2d 1101, 43 St. Rep. 752 (1986).

Choice of Venue in Tort Action — 1985 Law Codifying Longstanding Rule: A 1985 amendment to 25-2-102 (renumbered 25-2-122) codified the longstanding interpretation of the tort venue exception to the basic venue rule in 25-2-108 (renumbered 25-2-118). Under that longstanding rule, plaintiff in this case could sue either in the county in which the tort occurred or in a county in which one of the five defendants resided. Bradley v. Valmont Indus., Inc., 216 M 429, 701 P2d 997, 42 St. Rep. 925 (1985), cited in Carter v. Nye, 266 M 226, 879 P2d 729, 51 St. Rep. 781 (1994).

Malpractice in Prescribing Medication — Where Tort Is Committed: A Fergus County resident traveled to Yellowstone County, where a Billings doctor prescribed medicine that allegedly caused seizures and other injuries. She sued the doctor for malpractice. Any malpractice occurred in Yellowstone County, where the diagnosis and prescription were made. That is where the tort was committed, not in Fergus County where the medicine was taken and the injury occurred. Therefore, proper venue was in Yellowstone County. The mere allegation that the doctor failed to monitor the patient's use of the medication did not on its face allege that a tort was committed in Fergus County. Howard v. Dooner Laboratories, Inc., 211 M 312, 688 P2d 279, 41 St. Rep 1381 (1984), distinguished in Carter v. Nye, 266 M 226, 879 P2d 729, 51 St. Rep. 781 (1994).

Venue for Action for Tortious Failure to Pay Legal Fees: Plaintiff, an attorney, sued defendant, his former client, alleging that defendant had failed to pay legal fees incurred in a divorce and further that defendant had repudiated his obligation to pay for the legal services, thus committing the tort of bad faith. Plaintiff filed the action in the county in which his law office was located. Defendant moved for a change of venue to the county of his residence. The District Court granted defendant's motion. Plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court, ruling that the tort, if committed at all, was committed where payment was to be made. The court further stated that even if the plaintiff had alleged breach of contract rather than or in addition to the tort claim, venue would have been properly laid in the county in which plaintiff's law office was located. The court reasoned that the place where the divorce action was tried was not relevant to the venue issue; what was relevant was the place at which defendant was to have performed his obligation to pay the legal fees. Whalen v. Snell, 205 M 299, 667 P2d 436, 40 St. Rep. 1283 (1983).

Venue for Tort Action Against Two Counties: Plaintiffs brought a class action suit against Dow Chemical Co., Lake County, and Missoula County. The complaint did not allege that either Missoula County or Lake County was the exclusive cause of one injury. Rather, the pleadings indicated that the plaintiffs could have been damaged by the actions of either or both counties acting separately. In such a situation both counties are not necessary parties to one action, and the counties should be sued where they are located. The suit would be properly filed in Lake County for the tort allegedly committed against the Lake County plaintiffs. Dow Chemical Co. is entitled to a change of venue as to the claims filed by the Lake County plaintiffs. State ex rel. Kesterson v. District Court, 189 M 20, 614 P2d 1050 (1980).

FELA Actions — Application of Forum Non Conveniens: With the plaintiff, the scene of the injury, and most of the witnesses in Idaho, a suit for personal injuries filed in Montana was dismissed by the District Court under the doctrine of forum non conveniens. The Supreme Court reversed stating that the doctrine must be tempered by an open-door policy and that the doctrine should not presently be applied to FELA actions. (However, see the 1995 and 1997 amendments to this section, which restricted this decision.) Bevacqua v. Burlington N., Inc., 183 M 237, 598 P2d 1124 (1979).

Forum Non Conveniens Not Applicable in FELA Suits: The doctrine of forum non conveniens is not applicable to a FELA suit filed in a Montana District Court. There is a strong policy favoring plaintiff's forum selection in FELA cases, and the Montana Constitution states that the courts of justice must be open to all persons. (However, see the 1995 and 1997 amendments to this section, which restricted this decision.) Bevacqua v. Burlington N., Inc., 183 M 237, 598 P2d 1124 (1979); Labella v. Burlington N., Inc., 182 M 202, 595 P2d 1184 (1979). See also Great N. Ry. v. District Court, 139 M 453, 365 P2d 512 (1961).

County of Alleged Tort and Where Contract to Be Performed — Same County: The plaintiffs' allegation of defendants' tortious conduct in the county of plaintiffs' residence, when considered with the allegations that performance of the contract was to be in that county, was sufficient to uphold the determination of the District Court that proper venue for the action was in the county of plaintiffs' residence. Hopkins v. Scottie Homes, Inc., 180 M 498, 591 P2d 230 (1979).

Action on Contract and in Tort: In action in which complaint stated a claim for breach of contract and an interrelated and dependent claim in tort, the county of performance of the contract was the county in which any tort was committed for purpose of determining venue. Slovak v. Kentucky Fried Chicken, 164 M 1, 518 P2d 791 (1974).

No Montana Residents: Although either the county of residence of defendant or county where tort was committed was proper county in which to bring action for personal injury arising from accident, where none of the defendants were residents of Montana, the action was triable in any county designated by plaintiff in his complaint. (However, see the 1995 and 1997 amendments to this section, which restricted this decision.) Tassie v. Cont. Oil Co., 228 F. Supp. 807 (D.C. Mont. 1964).

Advice Not Unethical: Attorney's advice to a client that a personal injury action had to be filed in the county where the cause arose was not improper or unethical. Petition of Wasson, 143 M 323, 389 P2d 406 (1963).

Action for Conversion: Lincoln County was the proper county for trial of action where complaint by which plaintiff commenced suit alleged plaintiff's ownership and right of possession of the timber in Lincoln County, conversion by the defendants, and resulting damage. Johnson v. Clark, 131 M 454, 311 P2d 772 (1957).

False Representation: Action brought 2 years after dissolution of partnership for damages resulting from false representations, a paragraph of the complaint alleging that defendant purchased a house with part of the partnership funds and that plaintiff was entitled to one-half the profits received on its sale, was for damages and at law and the proper venue was in the county where the tort was committed. Brownback v. Nelson, 122 M 525, 206 P2d 1017 (1949).

False Representations — No Judicial Estoppel by Complaint: Where plaintiff in first complaint for damages alleged that false representations were made in one county, he was not precluded from alleging that the false representations were made in another county in a subsequent complaint since the representation may have been made in both places. Brownback v. Nelson, 122 M 525, 206 P2d 1017 (1949).

Action Proper Where Tort Was Committed: An action for tort is properly triable in the county where the tort was committed. Stewart v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 93 M 390, 18 P2d 801 (1933); Enos v. Am. Sur. Co. of New York, 95 M 588, 28 P2d 197 (1933), distinguished in Bergin v. Temple, 111 M 539, 111 P2d 286 (1941).

Action in Claim and Delivery: The action in claim and delivery is founded upon a tort and must be tried in the county where the tort was committed. Kalberg v. Greiner, 91 M 509, 8 P2d 799 (1932).

Personal Injuries to Railroad Employee: Under this section an action for tort must be tried in the county in which it was committed. An action by a railroad employee for personal injuries sustained in a county other than that of his residence was properly triable in the county where the accident occurred subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial. (However, see the 1995 amendment to this section, which restricted this decision.) Dryer v. Director-General of Railroads, 66 M 298, 213 P 210 (1923).

CHANGE OF VENUE

Negligence in Motor Vehicle Accident — Venue Proper in County Where Collision Occurred, Not Where Vehicle Came to Rest: The parties were involved in a car accident in Teton County. As a result of the collision, the plaintiff's vehicle was propelled over the county line into Cascade County. The plaintiff filed a negligence claim in Cascade County against the driver of the other vehicle. The defendant filed a motion to change venue, arguing that Cascade County was not a proper venue because the tort did not occur there and no defendant resided there. The plaintiff urged the District Court to apply the rationale in Circle S Seeds of Mont., Inc. v. Mont. Merchandising, Inc., 2006 MT 311, 335 Mont. 16, 157 P.3d 671, to conclude that venue was proper in Cascade County. The court declined and granted the defendant's motion to change venue. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed and agreed that although the plaintiff suffered injuries in Cascade County, for purposes of venue, the tort was committed in the county where the cars collided. Yeager v. Morris, 2013 MT 44, 369 Mont. 90, 296 P.3d 1164.

Alleged Misrepresentation of Nature of Horse — County Where Contract Performed Considered Place Where Tort Committed for Venue Purposes: Plaintiff contracted to purchase a gentle, broken horse in Yellowstone County and was subsequently injured while riding the horse in Silver Bow County, where plaintiff filed a tort action alleging misrepresentation of the nature of the horse. Defendants moved for a change of venue to Yellowstone County, but the motion was denied, so defendants appealed and the Supreme Court reversed. General application of tort venue law requires that a tort action be filed either in the county where the defendant resides or in the county where the offending actions of the tort were taken or committed. In this case, the contract for sale of the horse was performed in Yellowstone County, making that county a proper venue for a contract claim. Further, the alleged tortious conduct of misrepresentation of the nature of the horse also occurred in Yellowstone County. Thus, the tort was committed in Yellowstone County for venue purposes. Deichl v. Savage, 2009 MT 293, 352 M 282, 216 P3d 749 (2009).

Proper Venue for Malicious Prosecution Claim Considered County Where Breach of Duty and Damages Occur: Plaintiff filed a malicious prosecution claim in Missoula County, alleging that defendant intentionally and maliciously filed and prosecuted an unsupportable federal cause of action in that county. Defendant moved for a change of venue, but the District Court concluded that Missoula County was a proper venue and denied the motion. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Defendant's purported breach of duty occurred upon filing the claim in Missoula County, and plaintiff incurred damages in that county, so the concurrence of breach and damages in Missoula County supported the District Court's conclusion that Missoula County was a proper venue for the malicious prosecution claim. Deist v. Thornton, 2009 MT 21, 349 M 94, 201 P3d 800 (2009). See also Carter v. Nye, 266 M 226, 879 P2d 729 (1994).

Change of Venue on Multiple Claims to Defendants' County of Residence While Allowing Plaintiff to Pursue Venue Established by Contract Proper: The franchise agreement between one plaintiff and defendants provided that plaintiff could elect to initiate an action concerning breach of the agreement in Yellowstone County. Franchise agreements with other plaintiffs provided that Missoula County would be the place of venue. All plaintiffs joined in a suit against defendants, which was filed in Yellowstone County. Defendants moved for a change of venue to Missoula County where the company headquarters were located, and the motion was granted. Plaintiff whose agreement allowed for a Yellowstone County venue was allowed to sever its claims and keep its action in that county if desired. Plaintiffs appealed the venue change, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The determination of whether a county is the proper place for trial is a question of law involving application of the venue statutes to pleaded facts. The general rule in 25-2-118 provides that the proper place for trial in civil actions is the defendant's county of residence. Additionally, in a case involving multiple claims, 25-2-116 provides that a party that is entitled to a change of venue on any claim is entitled to a change of venue on the entire action, subject to the power of the trial court to separate claims or issues for trial. Therefore, the District Court did not err in moving the venue to Missoula County where defendants resided and in allowing the plaintiff with a contractual provision for trial in Yellowstone County to pursue its action there. DML, Inc. v. Fulbright, 2005 MT 204, 328 M 212, 119 P3d 93 (2005), followed in Buhmann v. St., 2008 MT 465, 348 M 205, 201 P3d 70 (2008), and distinguishing Wentz v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 14, 928 P2d 237 (1996), and Liang v. Lai, 2004 MT 188, 322 M 199, 94 P3d 759 (2004).

Venue in Matter Involving Multiple Defendants — Plaintiff's Venue Alternatives Properly Exercised: Plaintiff's husband was killed in an accident at the city bus barn in Lewis and Clark County in Helena. Plaintiff filed a survivorship/wrongful death action in Silver Bow County against defendant city in Lewis and Clark County and against defendant gas company with its principal place of business in Silver Bow County. The city moved for a change of venue to Lewis and Clark County, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the city argued that because Gabriel v. School District No. 4, 264 M 177, 870 P2d 1351 (1994), and Wentz v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 14, 928 P2d 237 (1996), established that the proper venue for trial of a combined survivorship/wrongful death action is either the county where the survivorship action arose or the county where the wrongful death claim arose and that neither claim in this case arose in Silver Bow County, Silver Bow County was not a proper venue. Plaintiff contended that under 25-2-117, when there are multiple defendants, a proper place for trial of any defendant is proper for all defendants. The Supreme Court agreed with plaintiff. Although Gabriel and Wentz approved counties where survivorship or wrongful death actions arose as proper venues, neither case established those counties as exclusive venues for survivorship/wrongful death actions. In cases with multiple defendants pursuant to 25-2-117, including defendants that are both political subdivisions and private entities, 25-2-126, which provides venue for actions against political subdivisions, does not prevail over this section, which provides venue for tort actions, but rather provides alternative venue options to a plaintiff. The plaintiff properly exercised a venue option here, and denial of the change of venue motion was affirmed. Meyer v. Mont. Power Co., LLC, 2005 MT 66, 326 M 283, 109 P3d 269 (2005), distinguishing Whalen v. Mont. Right to Life Ass'n, 2002 MT 328, 313 M 204, 60 P3d 972 (2002).

Venue Rights of FELA Plaintiff With Tort Claim Against Out-of-State Corporate Defendant: Rule filed an action in Cascade County seeking damages for personal injury arising from Rule's railroad employment in Dawson County, Rule's county of residence. Defendant moved for a change of venue to Dawson County or Yellowstone County, the location of defendant's resident agent. The District Court granted the motion and ordered the case moved to either county, at Rule's option. Rule appealed the change of venue, contending that the District Court erred in applying Montana tort venue statutes to Rule's Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) claim and that subsection (2) of this section constituted an unconstitutional arbitrary and capricious limitation on FELA venue practice in Montana. The Supreme Court disagreed. In enacting subsection (2) of this section the Legislature did not create an exception for FELA claims. The venue options in subsection (2) of this section are sufficient for FELA plaintiffs to meet the concerns in both the federal law and under Montana cases. Because federal law allows states to enact venue laws applicable to FELA actions, there is no legal impediment to treating FELA plaintiffs the same as other plaintiffs with tort claims against out-of-state corporate defendants. Rule failed to establish why application of subsection (2) of this section to FELA cases exceeded legislative discretion in enacting venue statutes and thus failed to meet the burden of proving that the statute is unconstitutional. The change of venue was affirmed. Rule v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co, 2005 MT 6, 325 M 329, 106 P3d 533 (2005), following Miles v. Ill. Cent. RR Co., 315 US 698 (1942). See also Davis v. Union Pac. RR Co., 282 M 233, 937 P2d 27 (1997).

Erroneous Change of Venue for Defendants When Proper Venue Chosen by Plaintiff: Plaintiff filed a tort action in Flathead County where a slip and fall accident occurred. Defendants moved for and were granted a change of venue to Sanders County where one defendant resided. Plaintiff appealed the venue change, and the Supreme Court reversed, noting that a defendant must be granted a change of venue if an action is brought in a county that is not statutorily designated as a proper place for trial, but because Flathead County was the location of the premises where the allegedly tortious act occurred, it was a proper venue, so no motion to change the place of trial on the entire action could be granted. Because plaintiff chose a proper venue, the District Court erred when it granted defendants' venue change. Liang v. Lai, 2004 MT 188, 322 M 199, 94 P3d 759 (2004), following Nelson v. Cenex, Inc., 2004 MT 170, 322 M 54, 97 P3d 1073 (2004). See also Wentz v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 14, 928 P2d 237 (1996), and Ward v. Johnson, 2012 MT 96, 365 Mont. 19, 277 P.3d 1216.

Location of Resident Agent of Foreign Corporation Proper Venue in Tort Action: Nelson worked for a Minnesota corporation at a refinery in Yellowstone County. Nelson brought a tort action based on exposure to asbestos during employment, naming as defendants three Minnesota corporations that operated the refinery and two individuals from Yellowstone County who worked as plant managers. Nelson resided in Missoula County, and the corporations' resident agent was located in Lewis and Clark County. Nelson brought the action in Lewis and Clark County. The corporations moved for a change of venue to Yellowstone County, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. A defendant may move for a change of venue when an action is not brought in a county that is statutorily designated as a proper place for trial, and the motion must be granted if the county in which the action is filed is not a proper place for trial. If more than one county is proper, the action may be brought in any of those counties and a motion for change of venue may not be granted. The general rule for determining venue is 25-2-118, but there are statutory exceptions to the general rule for specific types of actions. Venue rules for tort actions are in this section, including venue for tort actions against a foreign corporation, one of which is the county in which the corporation's resident agent is located. Thus, Lewis and Clark County was a proper venue for trial, and the District Court did not err in denying the motion for change of venue. Nelson v. Cenex, Inc., 2004 MT 170, 322 M 54, 97 P3d 1073 (2004), distinguishing Platt v. Sears, 222 M 184, 721 P2d 336 (1986), and followed in Ward v. Johnson, 2012 MT 96, 365 Mont. 19, 277 P.3d 1216.

Burden of Proof on Moving Party Seeking Change of Venue — Error in Shifting Burden of Proof Regarding Residency to Nonmoving Party: Lockhead and Weinstein were involved in an altercation in Missoula. Lockhead subsequently filed a motion in Silver Bow County seeking damages from Weinstein for defamation, negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress, and malicious prosecution. In the complaint, Lockhead alleged that he resided in Butte. Weinstein then moved for a change of venue to Missoula, contending that Lockhead was actually a resident of Missoula rather than Silver Bow County and that the trial should be moved for the convenience of witnesses and the promotion of justice. At a hearing on the motion, Weinstein submitted an affidavit stating that Silver Bow County homeless shelters, the police department, and the post office had been searched for proof of Lockhead's residency, and none could be found. Lockhead also filed an affidavit stating that he resided in Butte at the time that the complaint was filed and that he had no intention of moving. The District Court concluded that Lockhead had failed to establish that he was a resident of Butte and granted Weinstein's motion for a change of venue. Although a District Court may consider affidavits related to a motion to change venue, the averments of a complaint will be taken as true in considering the motion. As movant, Weinstein bore the burden of proof in support of the motion, but failed to carry the burden of proving that Lockhead did not reside in Butte at the time that the complaint was filed or that Lockhead actually resided elsewhere. Thus, the District Court erred by shifting the burden of proving residency to Lockhead, and the change of venue motion was reversed. Lockhead v. Weinstein, 2001 MT 132, 305 M 438, 28 P3d 1081 (2001).

No Defendant Residing in State — Plaintiff May File in Any County, Not Just County Where Alleged Injury Occurred: Norwest Bank argued that the lower court erred in refusing to change venue to Yellowstone County, which was the county where its registered agent was located and where the alleged injury occurred. The Supreme Court held that the statute requiring that a suit be brought in the county where the resident agent resides did not apply to Norwest because the statute referred to corporations incorporated in a state other than Montana and Norwest as a federally chartered bank did not qualify as a corporation. The Supreme Court also held that although one statute allowed the filing of a suit in the county where the alleged injury occurred, another allowed a plaintiff to file in any county when none of the defendants were a resident of the state. Therefore, the plaintiff had properly filed in Cascade County. The bank was not entitled to a change of venue. Spoonheim v. Norwest Bank Mont., 277 M 417, 922 P2d 528, 53 St. Rep. 764 (1996).

Venue for Case Involving Tort Claim Against One Defendant and Contract Claim Against Another: As part of an insurance policy coverage dispute, plaintiff brought a tort claim against one defendant who resided in Lewis and Clark County and a breach of contract claim against another defendant who resided in Powell County. The District Court granted a change of venue to Powell County. Under this section, the proper venue for tort claims is the county where the contract was to be performed. Nothing in this section suggests an intention to limit its application to cases in which the tort and contract claim are made against the same defendant. Because both counties were proper venues for the tort claim, no change of venue motion could be granted on the grounds that the action was not brought in a proper county. The District Court was reversed. Standley v. Travelers Indem. Co., 259 M 269, 855 P2d 1020, 50 St. Rep. 788 (1993).

Agreements Involving Purchase and Financing of Mobile Home: Plaintiffs, mobile home purchasers and their bank, sued a Butte bank in Ravalli County for wrongful conversion, breach of agreement, breach of statutory duty to file a satisfaction of a chattel mortgage, wrongful repossession, breach of an obligation of good faith, and fraud. The case revolved around the purchasers' agreement with a realtor to buy the mobile home, on the condition that the purchasers' bank approve the financing, and the Butte bank's agreement with the purchasers' bank that the Butte bank would release its lien on the mobile home, which the Butte bank had financed to the realtor, when the realtor was paid for the mobile home. The purchasers' bank paid the realtor, who then went out of business. The Butte bank did not relinquish the lien and attempted to repossess the mobile home. The trial court properly held that venue in Ravalli County was proper as to both agreements and properly denied the Butte bank's motion for a change of venue to Butte-Silver Bow County. Depee v. First Citizen's Bank of Butte, 258 M 217, 852 P2d 592, 50 St. Rep. 505 (1993).

Choice of County in Tort Action Against Nonresident Defendant: In a tort action against a nonresident defendant, the plaintiff may choose either the county where the tort was committed or any county in Montana. (However, see the 1995 and 1997 amendments to this section, which restricted this decision.) Haug v. Burlington N. RR Co., 236 M 368, 770 P2d 517, 46 St. Rep. 432 (1989), overruling McAlear v. Kasak, 225 M 113, 731 P2d 908, 44 St. Rep. 81 (1987).

Filing Proper in County Where Tort Occurred: Parties met in Dawson County and orally agreed that defendant would find, evaluate, and appraise potential mineral investment opportunities for plaintiffs, but there was no agreement on a place of performance of the oral contract. Parties later met in Flathead County, and defendant apprised plaintiffs of the value of mineral interests in eastern Montana and western North Dakota. Plaintiffs purchased the interests for $175,000 but subsequently determined the interests were nearly worthless. Plaintiffs filed a breach of contract and related tort suit in Flathead County. Defendant sought change of venue to Dawson County, his place of residence. Absent a written contract with express terms or an agreement on where the oral contract was to be performed, the District Court correctly determined that any tort resulting from defendant's alleged misrepresentation would have had to occur in Flathead County; therefore, the motion for change of venue was properly denied. Berlin v. Boedecker, 235 M 443, 767 P2d 349, 46 St. Rep. 125 (1989).

Action Filed in Proper County — Motion to Remove to Another Proper County Properly Denied: Once an action has been filed in a proper county, the District Court cannot grant a motion to have it removed to another county of proper venue. Petersen v. Tucker, 228 M 393, 742 P2d 483, 44 St. Rep. 1625 (1987).

Venue When Student Lives in One County but Attends School by Bus in Another: A student lived in Missoula County but was bused to school in Lake County where an accident occurred during a school-sponsored event and where the supervisor lived. The District Court properly determined venue to be in Lake County since limited contact with Missoula County for a bus route did not make it a county in which a school district, primarily located and operated in Lake County, could be sued. The Supreme Court declined to address whether a school district is properly labeled a "political subdivision" and therefore did not apply 25-2-126 to the question of venue. Mapston v. Joint School District, 227 M 521, 740 P2d 676, 44 St. Rep. 1281 (1987).

Tort Action — Change of Venue for Nonresident Defendant Proper: Following an allegation of sexual harassment, lawyer filed defamation suit. The District Court granted nonresident defendant's motion for a change of venue, moving the tort action to the county in which the lawyer's office was located and where the tort allegedly arose. Upon appeal, the Supreme Court upheld the District Court, ruling that in a tort action, proper venue for suing a nonresident defendant is in either the county of defendant's residence or the county where the tort occurred. McAlear v. Kasak, 225 M 113, 731 P2d 908, 44 St. Rep. 81 (1987), overruled in Haug v. Burlington N. RR Co., 236 M 368, 770 P2d 517, 46 St. Rep. 432 (1989). (However, see the 1995 and 1997 amendments to this section, which restricted this decision.)

Venue Properly Removed: In an action sounding in contract and tort, venue properly was removed from the county where business was done by the first defendant, a foreign corporation having no residence for venue purposes, to the county where the plaintiffs and other defendant resided and where the accident occurred. The venue statutes for actions in contract (25-2-121) and in tort (25-2-122) contain exceptions to the basic venue rule; these two statutes control the issue of proper venue. Platt v. Sears, 222 M 184, 721 P2d 336, 43 St. Rep. 1160 (1986).

Change of Venue in Tort Action — Attorney Inaction: A Billings attorney, sued by his Missoula client for legal malpractice moved for a change of venue to Yellowstone County, the location of his law office. The motion was granted by the District Judge, who relied on Whalen v. Snell, 205 M 299, 667 P2d 436, 40 St. Rep. 1283 (1983), in granting the change of venue. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that although the attorney may arguably have been negligent in pursuing the civil action in Missoula, there was no harm until the Statute of Limitations ran on filing a claim in Helena, Lewis and Clark County, where the claim should have been filed. A tort, if one occurred at all, would have resulted from the attorney's inaction in Yellowstone County, the site of his law office. Vehrs v. Moses, 220 M 473, 716 P2d 207, 43 St. Rep. 537 (1986).

Reconsideration of Previous Venue Ruling: The employer filed an action in Lewis and Clark County against the employee and the Department of Labor and Industry. The employee moved for a change of venue to Yellowstone County, which was denied. A hearing was held and the matter sent back to the Department for further proceedings, which continued without conclusion. The employee then brought an action against the employer in Yellowstone County. The employer's request for a change of venue to Lewis and Clark County was properly denied. The Department is not a party to the present action, and therefore the court is not bound by 25-2-105 (renumbered 25-2-125), which requires that a cause against the Department be tried in the county in which it arose or in Lewis and Clark County. Although the two actions arose out of the same act, occurrence, or transaction, the merits of the case were not reached in the Lewis and Clark County action. The mere fact that the cases are the same does not preclude one court from reconsidering a ruling of a court of coordinate jurisdiction. The Yellowstone County District Court did not err by reconsidering the venue ruling of the Lewis and Clark County court as Yellowstone County is the proper venue. Mereness v. Frito-Lay, Inc., 216 M 154, 700 P2d 182, 42 St. Rep. 716 (1985).

Timeliness of Brief in Support of Motion for Change of Venue: In an action for strict liability in tort for personal injuries, defendant filed a motion for change of venue on November 17, 1982, and a brief in support of the motion on November 24, 1982. The motion was denied by the District Court for failure to file a supporting brief within 5 days, the time limit allowed by Rule II of the Uniform Rules for District Courts of Montana. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case to District Court, ruling that under former Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), three of the days intervening between the time of filing of the motion and the time of filing of the brief are excluded from the calculation of the maximum permissible time, so the filing of the brief was timely. Tanniehill v. Remington Arms Co., 207 M 501, 675 P2d 948, 41 St. Rep. 103 (1984).

Fraudulent Misrepresentations Preceding Contract Formation: When purchasing a bull, plaintiff relied on defendant's alleged intentionally false and fraudulently made representations and brought an action in Cascade County for compensatory and punitive damages. As plaintiff chose to affirm the contract and sue for the misrepresentations preceding the contract, the action was in tort. However, venue was properly changed to Stillwater County where the auction, sale, and payment, and therefore the tort, if any, took place. Further, under the general rule, an action is to be brought where the defendant resides (Stillwater County), and plaintiff did not show a clear reason for applying an exception. Woolcock v. Beartooth Ranch, 196 M 65, 637 P2d 520, 38 St. Rep. 2130 (1981).

Estate Joined — No Right to Change of Venue: Where the driver of one vehicle and the estate of the driver of the other vehicle had been joined as defendants in tort action, the one driver had no right to change of venue after the dismissal of the estate since the plaintiff in joining the resident estate as a defendant had reasonable grounds to believe that he had a cause of action against the resident estate. Boucher v. Steffes, 160 M 482, 503 P2d 659 (1972).

Section as Permissive: The provisions of this section are permissive only and where five separate actions were brought in four widely separated counties against the same defendant involving the same accident, court did not abuse its discretion in granting change of venue under 25-2-201 to the place where the tort occurred, for the convenience of the witnesses. Putro v. Mannix Elec., Inc., 147 M 314, 412 P2d 410 (1966).

Defendant Not Entitled to Change From Proper County: Defendant is not entitled to a change of venue in personal injury action where plaintiff filed the action in the proper county. Tassie v. Cont. Oil Co., 228 F. Supp. 807 (D.C. Mont. 1964).

No Reason for Change Shown: Where personal injury action arising from accident occurring in Fallon County, Montana, was commenced in Silver Bow County, Montana, by nonresident plaintiff, and nonresident defendants in removing action to federal District Court designated Billings Division, but stated no statutory grounds for change of venue and did not show good cause for assignment to Billings Division, plaintiff was entitled to change of venue to Butte Division in which Silver Bow County was located. Tassie v. Cont. Oil Co., 228 F. Supp. 807 (D.C. Mont. 1964).

Waiver of Improper Venue: Plaintiff by instituting his action in a county other than where the accident occurred or the defendant resided, waived his right to have the action tried in either of these counties, and defendant had the right to have the place of trial changed to either of the latter counties. Seifert v. Gehle, 133 M 320, 323 P2d 269 (1958).

Error to Refuse Motion for Change: It was error for the District Court of M County to overrule defendants' motion for change of venue to L County where an accident occurred, under the power of the court to change the place of trial made compulsory by 25-2-201, even though the District Court of L County could, in its discretion, retransfer the cause to M County to subserve the convenience of witnesses—the ground upon which the court based its order refusing to change the place of trial. Maio v. Greene, 114 M 481, 137 P2d 670 (1943).

False Imprisonment Denial as Abuse of Discretion: In an action for false imprisonment commenced in a county other than the one in which the tort was alleged to have been committed, the District Court abused its discretion in denying defendant's motion for change of venue asked for on the ground of the convenience of witnesses and the promotion of justice, on affidavits showing, among other things, that a large number of its witnesses residing in Idaho a short distance from the county seat of the county to which it was proposed to have the cause removed, would attend the trial but would decline to attend if held in the county in which the action was brought some 340 miles distant, etc., no affidavits being filed in opposition; irrespective of company's showing in support of the motion as made, it was entitled to the change of place of trial, under this section, to the county where the alleged tort was committed. Atkinson v. Bonners Ferry Lumber Co., 74 M 393, 240 P 823 (1925).

Separate Causes of Action: Where the complaint contained two causes of action in tort, in the first of which the county in which the tort was committed was stated, while in the second it was not, a change of venue was properly granted to the county of defendant's residence on the second cause of action, and the defendant's right to such change could not be abridged by reason of the fact that the first cause of action was properly triable in the county where the action was commenced. Yore v. Murphy, 10 M 304, 25 P 1039 (1890).

Compiler's Comments

1985 Amendment: At beginning of (1) before "the county", substituted "The proper place of trial for the following actions is" for "Actions for the following causes must be tried in"; at end of lead-in of (1) deleted "subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as provided in this code"; at beginning of (3) inserted "The proper place of trial for"; and made minor changes in phraseology.

Purpose of Recommendations: For an explanation of the circumstances leading to the above Evidence Commission recommendations for revisions, see part compiler's comments under Title 25, ch. 2, part 1.

Case Notes

One-Action Rule Not Violated by Separate Foreclosure Suits:

The District Court order granting summary judgment in Flathead County on a promissory note after the bank had already obtained judgment in Gallatin County on the same promissory note was not an additional judgment but an integrated proceeding allowing foreclosure of the Flathead property. Jones v. First Sec. Bank of Bozeman, 249 M 221, 814 P2d 988, 48 St. Rep. 653 (1991).

The bank brought two separate actions in two different counties to foreclose on separate parcels of property, both of which secured the defendant's promissory note which was in default. The Supreme Court ruled that the bank was not violating the one-action rule because the two actions were filed simultaneously, incorporating each other by reference, and therefore were not an attempt to circumvent the one-action rule. First Sec. Bank v. Jones, 243 M 301, 794 P2d 679, 47 St. Rep. 1238 (1990).

Determining Venue for Ancillary Claims: The lower court allowed a third party, seeking to foreclose on real property, to intervene in an action between the plaintiff and the defendant. The plaintiff moved for a change of venue to the county in which the property was located. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's refusal to change venue on the basis that the intervenor's claims were only ancillary to the original suit and therefore were not determinative as to venue. Whitefish Credit Union Ass'n, Inc. v. Glacier Wilderness Ranch, Inc., 242 M 471, 791 P2d 1363, 47 St. Rep. 892 (1990).

Proper Venue for Interpleader Complaint and Cross-Claim in Real Property Transaction: The proper venue for an interpleader complaint requesting the resolution of conflicting demands made upon an escrow agent holding documents for a contract for deed as well as for an action seeking to affect repossession, foreclosure, or forfeiture of an interest in real property when the escrow documents were held in a county different from that in which the property was located was determined under 25-2-123 to be the county in which the property is located. St. Bank of Townsend v. Worline, 227 M 315, 738 P2d 1295, 44 St. Rep. 1112 (1987).

Real Property Partition — Change of Venue — Jurisdiction: Appellants contention that 25-2-103 (renumbered 25-2-123) requires that a hearing on partition of property be had only in the county where the property is located is without merit. This statute is a venue statute, not a statute establishing or restricting jurisdiction. Any District Court in the state has jurisdiction over a civil cause of action such as a property partition. Miller v. Miller, 189 M 356, 616 P2d 313, 37 St. Rep. 1523 (1980).

Real Property Partition — When Change of Venue Required: Sections 25-2-103 (renumbered 25-2-123) and 25-2-201 are in pari materia and must be read together, and under 25-2-201, in the absence of a motion for a change of venue, an action may be brought in any county of the state and may be tried where brought. Miller v. Miller, 189 M 356, 616 P2d 313, 37 St. Rep. 1523 (1980).

Change of Venue in Class Action for Property Damage — Multiple Causes of Action: In their complaint for a class action, all plaintiffs alleged real property damage. Section 25-2-103 (renumbered 25-2-123) sets venue for actions for injury to real property "in the county in which the subject of the action . . . is situated . . .". The "subject of the action" in this case would appear to be located in Lake County as to the Lake County plaintiffs and properly triable there. The Supreme Court has determined that if a complaint contains more than one cause of action and a defendant is entitled to a change of venue in one of those actions, the motion for a change of venue must be granted. This is so despite the fact that the other causes of action are properly triable where the action was commenced. Thus, where venue as to the real property damage claim against Dow Chemical Co. is properly in Lake County, venue as to all claims against Dow should be moved to Lake County. State ex rel. Kesterson v. District Court, 189 M 20, 614 P2d 1050 (1980).

"Subject of Action" Defined: The phrase "subject of the action" as used in subsection (1) is not synonymous with the term "cause of action" nor with the term "object of the action". Subject of the action denotes the plaintiff's principal primary right to enforce or maintain that for which the action is brought and does not denote the specific thing in regard to which the legal controversy is carried on. Fraser v. Clark, 128 M 160, 273 P2d 105 (1954).

Application to Equity Proceedings: While the code sections relating to venue and change of venue refer only to "actions" which technically speaking may be said to apply only to actions at law, the term includes "suits" embracing both law actions and suits in equity. McKinney v. Mires, 95 M 191, 26 P2d 169 (1933).

Application to Proceedings to Adjudicate Water Rights:

An action to ascertain, determine, and decree the extent and priority to the use of water partakes of the nature of an action to quiet title to real property. Whitcomb v. Murphy, 94 M 562, 23 P2d 980 (1933).

In an action to adjudicate water rights on a main river and its tributaries, the District Court of a county in which plaintiffs' lands lay and through which the main river flowed had jurisdiction to adjudicate the rights to waters of a tributary flowing entirely within another county, under Art. VIII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. VIII, sec. 4, 1972 Mont. Const.), and this section, and the above rule. Whitcomb v. Murphy, 94 M 562, 23 P2d 980 (1933), distinguished in State ex rel. McKnight v. District Court, 111 M 520, 111 P2d 292 (1941).

Proceedings to condemn water appropriated for irrigation purposes may be brought and tried in the court in which the land is situated, though the water is to be taken in another county. Helena v. Rogan, 26 M 452, 68 P 798 (1902).

Application to Specific Performance Actions: This section has no application to an action to enforce the specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of real estate. Silver Camp Min. Co. v. Dickert, 31 M 488, 78 P 967 (1904).

Constitutionality: Part of this section (formerly section 93-2901, R.C.M. 1947) does not contravene Art. VIII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const. Bookwalter v. Conrad, 15 M 464, 39 P 573 (1895).

25-2-124. Recovery of statutory penalty or forfeiture.

Evidence Commission Recommendations for Revisions

Explanation: Amended only to conform with terminology and principles set forth in sections 1 through 10 of the draft [25-2-111 through 25-2-118, 25-2-121, and 25-2-122].

Compiler's Comments

1985 Amendment: At beginning substituted "The proper place of trial" for "Actions"; near middle of section, after "some part thereof arose," deleted "subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial"; and made minor changes in phraseology.

Purpose of Recommendations: For an explanation of the circumstances leading to the above Evidence Commission recommendations for revisions, see part compiler's comments under Title 25, ch. 2, part 1.

Case Notes

General Determination of Venue in Civil Actions — Exceptions: The county where the defendant resides generally provides the proper place for trial in a civil action; however, Montana law provides exceptions to the general rule. The proper place for trial of a tort action is where the defendant resides or where the tort was committed. Venue is proper for an action for the recovery of a statutory penalty in the county where the cause or some part of the cause arose. When venue is proper in more than one county, then any one of the designated counties is a proper place for trial. Circle S Seeds of Mont., Inc. v. Mont. Merchandising, Inc., 2006 MT 311, 335 M 16, 157 P3d 671 (2006).

Venue When No Mandatory Penalty Exists — Trademark Infringement: Plaintiff corporation brought a trademark infringement action in Gallatin County. Defendant corporation sought a change of venue to Cascade County because defendant resided there and because any alleged tort occurred there. The District Court applied this section and determined that because 30-13-335 imposed a statutory penalty for trademark infringement, venue was proper in Gallatin County as the place where the cause or some part of the cause arose. Defendant appealed on grounds that the court should have applied 25-2-122 because the claims were based in tort and because any alleged tort would have been committed in defendant's business offices in Cascade County where the decision to use the trademark originated. The Supreme Court found that the penalty in 30-13-335 was optional and at the discretion of the trial court, rather than mandatory. Because the statute failed to exact punishment, it was error for the District Court to apply this section to determine venue because a statutory penalty was not imposed. The Supreme Court then addressed defendant's argument that any alleged tort was committed in Cascade County. Pursuant to the holding in BHC Holding Co. v. Hurley, 242 M 4, 788 P2d 322 (1990), tort is committed, for purposes of determining venue, where there is a concurrence of breach of obligation and the occasion of damages. Defendant may have made the decision to use the trademark at its offices in Cascade County, making Cascade County a proper venue for the case, but that action simply started in motion defendant's duty not to interfere with plaintiff's business. The alleged breach reached fruition when defendant widely distributed its products containing the allegedly illegal trademark to the marketplace, including Gallatin County, the location of plaintiff's principal place of business and the place where plaintiff allegedly suffered lost profits and other related damages. Thus, the concurrence of breach of obligation and the occasion of damages occurred in Gallatin County, rendering Gallatin County a proper venue. Therefore, even though the District Court improperly applied this section, its determination that Gallatin County was a proper venue was legally correct under 25-2-122, so the District Court was affirmed. Circle S Seeds of Mont., Inc. v. Mont. Merchandising, Inc., 2006 MT 311, 335 M 16, 157 P3d 671 (2006).

Penalty for Failure to Repair Partition Fence: Where defendant, a landowner on land adjoining plaintiff's, refused to help rebuild a partition fence between the parties' property when plaintiff requested him to do so under 70-16-209, plaintiff's action under that section and 25-2-104 (renumbered 25-2-124) to recover the costs of construction of the fence was an action to recover a "penalty" within the meaning of 25-2-104 (renumbered 25-2-124) and must therefore be tried in the county where the cause of action arose. Hidden Hollow Ranch v. Collins, 146 M 321, 406 P2d 365 (1965).

25-2-125. Against public officers or their agents.

Case Notes

Place Where Effect of Decision to Award Contract Felt to Be Considered in Determining Where Cause of Action Arose: In determining proper venue in a contract case, it is not only the place where the decision to award the contract was made but also the place where the effect of the decision is felt that must be considered in determining where the cause of action arose. I.S.C. Distrib., Inc. v. Trevor, 259 M 460, 856 P2d 977, 50 St. Rep. 880 (1993).

Proper Venue in Dispute Between Counties: In a change of venue dispute between Missoula County and Lake County Commissioners regarding payment of District Court expenses by Missoula County for transcripts and judicial decisions in cases filed in Lake County when both counties were part of the same judicial district: (1) Lake County argued that under 25-2-126, Missoula County was excluded as a proper place for trial; while (2) Missoula County argued that under 25-2-125, Missoula County was a proper place for trial and that therefore Lake County could not change venue. The Supreme Court found that 25-2-125 supported Lake County as the proper venue, but it further held that there were grounds for a reasonable person to believe that, considering the nature of the controversy and the parties involved, a fair trial could not be had in either county. Therefore, under 25-2-201, the District Court was directed to enter an order changing venue to Lewis and Clark County. Missoula County v. Hutchin, 223 M 55, 724 P2d 183, 43 St. Rep. 1527 (1986).

No Change of Venue — County and Public Officials: Plaintiff Weiss was severely injured in a one-car accident in Glacier County. A complaint was filed in Gallatin County, Weiss' place of residence. Codefendants, Glacier County and Glacier County Commissioners, filed a motion for a change of venue from Gallatin to Glacier County, asserting that 25-2-125 and 25-2-126 require an action against a county or its Commissioners to be brought in the county of the alleged tort. The District Judge denied the motion, reasoning that venue was proper as to the state defendants, therefore venue was proper as to all defendants. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed with the plaintiffs' assertion that 25-2-117, enacted in 1985, rather than 25-2-125 and 25-2-126, was controlling. The court held that 25-2-117 was intended to apply to all venue provisions, including the provisions relating to suits against counties and public officials, and that denial of a change of venue was consistent with the provision of 25-2-117 which states that an action may be brought in any county where venue is proper and other defendants joined, though venue otherwise would not lie against those defendants. Weiss v. St., 219 M 447, 712 P2d 1315, 43 St. Rep. 82 (1986).

Venue — Nature of Action and Place Where It Arose: Plaintiff, a regional supervisor for defendant in Missoula, was notified that he was to be demoted. Plaintiff filed an application for an appropriate writ. Defendant moved to change venue to Helena, which was granted. The venue issue was appealed. In this action both the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks and the director were named defendants. Both 2-9-312 (renumbered as part of 25-2-126) and 25-2-105 (renumbered 25-2-125) are applicable and must be harmonized, as both Missoula County and Lewis and Clark County were proper for venue. The court considered the nature of the action and the place where it arose. Because the challenged state action concerned and would affect a person and a position in Missoula, the court found that Missoula County was the proper county of venue. Ford v. Dept. of Fish, Wildlife, & Parks, 208 M 132, 676 P2d 207, 41 St. Rep. 220 (1984).

Mandamus — Venue: Plaintiffs brought an action seeking mandamus to compel the Department of State Lands (functions now transferred to Department of Natural Resources and Conservation) and Department of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Department of Environmental Quality) to review their granting of permits to ASARCO, Inc. for a mining operation in Lincoln County. ASARCO moved to change venue from Lewis and Clark to Lincoln County. The motion was denied and this appeal followed. ASARCO claims that venue lies in the county in which the alleged harm is threatened, the harm being caused by physical alteration of the land and not by actions of public agencies wherever they may be situated. Plaintiffs contend that when an action is one for the mandamus, proper venue lies in the county where the public official or agency resides. The Supreme Court concluded that the wrongful acts, issuance of an operating permit by the Department's refusal to require pollution discharge permits, occurred in Lewis and Clark County, and therefore venue was proper there. Cabinet Resource Group v. Dept. of St. Lands, 189 M 349, 616 P2d 310, 37 St. Rep. 1493 (1980).

Venue of Appeal of Decision of Board: Under 50-5-306 (now repealed), which provided for an appeal of a decision of the Board of Health and Environmental Sciences (now abolished) regarding a certificate of need for a health care facility, venue was determined by the Montana Administrative Procedure Act, and the District Court properly determined that venue should remain in Lewis and Clark County. Mont. Health Systems Agency, Inc. v. Bd. of Health & Environmental Sciences, 188 M 188, 612 P2d 1275 (1980).

Determining Venue in Action on P.S.C. Order: In an action on an order entered by the Montana Public Service Commission, it is not the mere making of the order but the place where it is put into operation that determines where the cause of action arises. St. v. Dept. of Public Service Regulation, 181 M 225, 593 P2d 34 (1979).

Action in Mandamus: Petitioner (a County Assessor) contended that an alleged wrong occurred in Silver Bow County where he began receiving paychecks for less than the claimed amount.

However, respondent's (Director of Department of Revenue) motion for a change of venue was erroneously denied since the alleged neglectful or intentional failure to pay the full amount of wages due petitioner occurred in Lewis and Clark County, the county where the public official officially resides. McGrath v. Dore, 177 M 179, 580 P2d 1385 (1978).

Action to Recover Taxes: In an action to recover taxes paid under protest, venue existed in the county where the taxpayer was located, audit conducted, additional tax assessment paid, and protest fund maintained. Roundup Nat'l Bank v. Dept. of Revenue, 175 M 133, 572 P2d 910 (1977).

Human Rights Commission: The cause of action for infringement of the right against self-incrimination by defendants' exercise of investigative powers under the antidiscrimination law arose in Gallatin County because the method of investigation there was at issue rather than the statutory power of the defendants to investigate. Thus, venue properly existed where the cause of action arose. School District v. Human Rights Comm'n, 173 M 113, 566 P2d 799 (1977).

Board of Plumbers: In a declaratory judgment action brought by private litigants in their county of residence against the Board of Plumbers, the operation or effect of the Board's action was challenged in the plaintiffs' county only, and the plaintiffs' county was held to be the proper place of trial. Billings Assoc. Plumbing v. Emerson, 172 M 369, 563 P2d 1123 (1977).

Injunctions — Venue — State Agency Involvement: Notwithstanding the fact that a state agency headquartered in Helena was involved as a defendant, when an injunction was aimed at stopping irreparable harm in another county, venue was proper in the latter county. Guthrie v. Dept. of Health & Environmental Sciences, 172 M 142, 561 P2d 913 (1977).

Mandamus — Failure to Set Hearing: A mandamus action to compel the Division of Workers' Compensation to set a hearing lies in Lewis and Clark County, the location of the Division's offices and the place where the official duty arises. Lunt v. Div. of Workers' Compensation, 167 M 251, 537 P2d 1080 (1975).

State Agency as Officer: The Division of Workers' Compensation is a "public officer" within the meaning of this section. Lunt v. Div. of Workers' Compensation, 167 M 251, 537 P2d 1080 (1975).

Governor: Complaint that Governor's executive order establishing multi-county planning districts was inconsistent with legislative resolution stated a cause of action arising in the county of the Governor's official residence, and venue should have been changed to Lewis and Clark County. Guildroy v. Anderson, 159 M 325, 497 P2d 688 (1972).

Tax Regulations: Proceeding for Writ of Prohibition to restrain Board of Equalization from enforcing amendments to regulations relating to corporation license tax allegedly due on patronage dividends of farm cooperatives should have been brought in the First Judicial District under this section and 15-31-505. State ex rel. Fulton v. District Court, 139 M 573, 366 P2d 435 (1961).

Cause of Action Defined: The word "cause" has a variety of meanings, but in connection with the case at bar for false imprisonment, it can mean only "cause of action". "Action" is defined by 27-1-102 as a proceeding for "redress or prevention of wrong", and "cause of action" has repeatedly been defined by this court as "the right which a party has to institute a judicial proceeding". Bergin v. Temple, 111 M 539, 111 P2d 286 (1941).

Sheriff:

Within the meaning of this section the word "cause" means cause of action, the latter term embracing the right which a party has to institute a judicial proceeding. A cause of action "arises" when it originates, comes into being or becomes operative when the act is done or not done; the time determines the place. In an action for false imprisonment against a Sheriff, based on unlawful arrest, the cause of action arose when and where the arrest was made, irrespective of the Sheriff's taking the party across the line of a neighboring county a short distance on their way to the county seat. Bergin v. Temple, 111 M 539, 111 P2d 286 (1941).

Where a Sheriff made an arrest in a county other than his own without a warrant, there placing plaintiff in jail several hours and thereafter transported him to his own county and detained him in jail there for some 12 days, at least a portion of several causes of action stated in the complaint against the officer and his sureties for false arrest and imprisonment arose in the county in which the plaintiff was arrested, and therefore his action was properly triable there. Enos v. Am. Sur. Co., 95 M 588, 28 P2d 197 (1933), distinguished in Bergin v. Temple, 111 M 539, 111 P2d 286 (1941).

Under this section, a Sheriff sued in his official capacity is entitled to have the case tried in the county of which he is such officer. State ex rel. Davis v. District Court, 72 M 56, 231 P 395 (1924), distinguished in Enos v. Am. Sur. Co., 95 M 588, 28 P2d 197 (1933).

Warden of Penitentiary: An action against the Warden of the state penitentiary, for tortious acts alleged to have been committed by him in the exercise of his authority as a public officer, is properly triable in the county where such acts were done. If the plaintiff selects another place of trial, the defendant has no absolute right to have it changed to the county where such acts were committed. State ex rel. Stephens v. District Court, 43 M 571, 118 P 268 (1911).

25-2-126. Against state and political subdivisions.

Evidence Commission Recommendations for Revisions

Explanation: [Subsection (2)] Amended only to conform with terminology and principles set forth in sections 1 through 10 of the draft [25-2-111 through 25-2-118, 25-2-121, and 25-2-122].

[Subsections (1) and (3)] Amended to conform to the rest of the bill in terminology for inclusion into Title 25, chapter 2, part 1. Section was originally enacted relating to sovereign immunity actions, but the Commission believes it should properly be moved to general venue provisions.

Compiler's Comments

1999 Amendment: Chapter 128 deleted former (2) that read: "(2) The proper place of trial for an action against a county is that county unless such action is brought by a county, in which case any county not a party thereto is also a proper place of trial"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 1999.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 128, L. 1999, provided: "WHEREAS, in Wentz v. Montana Power Co., 280 Mont. 14, 928 P.2d 237, 53 St. Rep. 1277 (1996), the Montana Supreme Court held that section 25-2-126(2), MCA, is superseded by section 25-2-126(3), MCA."

1985 Amendment: In (1), at beginning substituted "The proper place of trial for an action against the state is" for "Actions against the state shall be brought", near middle substituted "claim" for "cause of action", rearranged language of former last sentence that read "In addition, a resident of the state may bring an action in the county of his residence"; in (2), at beginning inserted "The proper place of trial for", substituted "is that county" for "may be commenced and tried in such county", after "in which case", deleted "it may be commenced and tried in", at end inserted "is also a proper place of trial"; at beginning of (3) substituted "The proper place of trial for an action" for "Actions" and substituted "claim" for "cause of action"; and made minor changes in phraseology.

Purpose of Recommendations: For an explanation of the circumstances leading to the above Evidence Commission recommendations for revisions, see part compiler's comments under Title 25, ch. 2, part 1.

Case Notes

Transfer of Venue for Convenience of Witnesses Affirmed: Plaintiff owned one of three sites in Kalispell that the state sought to remediate for hazardous or deleterious substances. The state brought suit in Lewis and Clark County to establish liability for remediation, and the Lewis and Clark County District Court held that plaintiff was liable. Prior to the ruling but after the trial, the state issued a record of decision outlining the state's chosen remediation plan. Plaintiff then filed a challenge to the record of decision in Flathead County. The state moved for a change of venue to Lewis and Clark County for the convenience of witnesses and to promote the ends of justice. The Flathead County District Court granted the venue change, and plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. There was no question that Lewis and Clark County was a proper venue, and even if Flathead County was also a proper venue, the Flathead County District Court still had authority to transfer the case. Further, a decision to change venue on grounds of the convenience of witnesses and to promote the ends of justice is not subject to interlocutory challenge, so plaintiff's appeal was dismissed. BNSF Ry Co. v. St., 2010 MT 46, 355 Mont. 296, 228 P.3d 1115, following State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Pegasus Gold Corp., 270 Mont. 32, 889 P.2d 1197 (1995).

Venue in Matter Involving Multiple Defendants — Plaintiff's Venue Alternatives Properly Exercised: Plaintiff's husband was killed in an accident at the city bus barn in Lewis and Clark County in Helena. Plaintiff filed a survivorship/wrongful death action in Silver Bow County against defendant city in Lewis and Clark County and against defendant gas company with its principal place of business in Silver Bow County. The city moved for a change of venue to Lewis and Clark County, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the city argued that because Gabriel v. School District No. 4, 264 M 177, 870 P2d 1351 (1994), and Wentz v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 14, 928 P2d 237 (1996), established that the proper venue for trial of a combined survivorship/wrongful death action is either the county where the survivorship action arose or the county where the wrongful death claim arose and that neither claim in this case arose in Silver Bow County, Silver Bow County was not a proper venue. Plaintiff contended that under 25-2-117, when there are multiple defendants, a proper place for trial of any defendant is proper for all defendants. The Supreme Court agreed with plaintiff. Although Gabriel and Wentz approved counties where survivorship or wrongful death actions arose as proper venues, neither case established those counties as exclusive venues for survivorship/wrongful death actions. In cases with multiple defendants pursuant to 25-2-117, including defendants that are both political subdivisions and private entities, this section, which provides venue for actions against political subdivisions, does not prevail over 25-2-122, which provides venue for tort actions, but rather provides alternative venue options to a plaintiff. The plaintiff properly exercised a venue option here, and denial of the change of venue motion was affirmed. Meyer v. Mont. Power Co., LLC, 2005 MT 66, 326 M 283, 109 P3d 269 (2005), distinguishing Whalen v. Mont. Right to Life Ass'n, 2002 MT 328, 313 M 204, 60 P3d 972 (2002).

News Coverage of Trial Not Considered Inflammatory — Change of Venue Properly Denied: The first trial in this case resulted in a jury verdict for plaintiff, but the then-presiding judge ordered a new trial after concluding that the initial verdict had been tainted by the jury's exposure to media publicity. The replacement judge denied plaintiff's motion for a change of venue on retrial, and plaintiff appealed. A party seeking a change of venue on grounds of prejudicial pretrial publicity must prove that the publicity was inflammatory and inflamed the prejudice of the community to the extent that a reasonable possibility existed that the party would not receive a fair trial. Here, plaintiff conceded that the media coverage had been balanced and factual, rather than biased or inflammatory. News accounts containing factual reports of court filings or events that are devoid of editorializing do not rise to the level of inflammatory publicity, even when the reports contain information unfavorable to the party seeking the change of venue. Plaintiff's speculative attempt to create the appearance of impropriety on the basis of balanced and factual publicity did not amount to a showing of prejudice, so denial of the motion for change of venue was not an abuse of discretion. LaTray v. Havre, 2000 MT 119, 299 M 449, 999 P2d 1010, 57 St. Rep. 497 (2000). See also St. v. Fuhrmann, 278 M 396, 925 P2d 1162 (1996).

Wrongful Death Action — County May Be Sued in Another County: Plaintiff's husband suffered a heart attack in Rosebud County and later died in Yellowstone County. Plaintiff sued in Yellowstone County. Rosebud County and other defendants moved to change venue. The District Court refused, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The location where death occurs is determinative for venue purposes of where the tort of wrongful death arises. Subsection (2) of this section (now deleted, see 1999 amendment) is superseded by subsection (3). Wentz v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 14, 928 P2d 237, 53 St. Rep. 1277 (1996).

Proper Venue for Wrongful Death Action: As set out in Carroll v. W.R. Grace & Co., 252 M 485, 830 P2d 1253 (1992), because death is a necessary element in a wrongful death action, a wrongful death action accrues at the time of the death rather than on the date of injury, for statute of limitations purposes. The corollary to Carroll is that for purposes of determining venue under this section, a wrongful death claim arises where the death occurs. Gabriel v. School District No. 4, 264 M 177, 870 P2d 1351, 51 St. Rep. 217 (1994), followed in Wentz v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 14, 928 P2d 237, 53 St. Rep. 1277 (1996). However, see Meyer v. Mont. Power Co., LLC, 2005 MT 66, 326 M 283, 109 P3d 269 (2005), in which it was held that in cases with multiple defendants, neither Gabriel nor Meyer establish those counties where survivorship or wrongful death actions arose as exclusive venues for survivorship/wrongful death actions.

University as "State" and Not "Political Subdivision" for Purposes of Venue: Minervino filed an action in Cascade County against the University of Montana (now University of Montana-Missoula), claiming that because the University is a political subdivision under subsection (3) of this section, the University campus in Great Falls established proper venue in Cascade County. The Supreme Court traced the legislative history of this section and concluded that because it was once codified as part of Title 2, ch. 9, the definition of "state" in 2-9-101 applied. Because the University is part of the state under subsection (1) of this section, venue was not proper in Cascade County because Minervino did not claim she was a resident there nor did the claim arise there. Minervino v. Univ. of Mont., 258 M 493, 853 P2d 1242, 50 St. Rep. 629 (1993).

Venue in Action in Which State Is Defendant: Although the general rule, as stated in 25-2-118, is that the proper place for trial of a civil action is the county in which the defendant resides, an exception in this section applies to situations in which the state is a defendant. Under the plain meaning of the exception, the county of plaintiff's residence is a proper venue in a civil suit naming the state as defendant. As noted in Petersen v. Tucker, 228 M 393, 742 P2d 483, 44 St. Rep. 1625 (1987), the purpose of this section is to afford citizens a practical and inexpensive forum for suits against the state, and this section is to be liberally construed in favor of private litigants. Kendall v. St., 231 M 316, 752 P2d 1091, 45 St. Rep. 646 (1988), followed in Topco, Inc. v. St., 275 M 352, 912 P2d 805, 53 St. Rep. 175 (1996).

Action Filed in Proper County — Motion to Remove to Another Proper County Properly Denied: Once an action has been filed in a proper county, the District Court cannot grant a motion to have it removed to another county of proper venue. Petersen v. Tucker, 228 M 393, 742 P2d 483, 44 St. Rep. 1625 (1987), followed in Gabriel v. School District No. 4, 264 M 177, 870 P2d 1351, 51 St. Rep. 217 (1994), and Topco, Inc. v. St., 275 M 352, 912 P2d 805, 53 St. Rep. 175 (1996).

Venue When Student Lives in One County but Attends School by Bus in Another: A student lived in Missoula County but was bused to school in Lake County where an accident occurred during a school-sponsored event and where the supervisor lived. The District Court properly determined venue to be in Lake County since limited contact with Missoula County for a bus route did not make it a county in which a school district, primarily located and operated in Lake County, could be sued. The Supreme Court declined to address whether a school district is properly labeled a "political subdivision" and therefore did not apply 25-2-126 to the question of venue. Mapston v. Joint School District, 227 M 521, 740 P2d 676, 44 St. Rep. 1281 (1987).

Proper Venue in Dispute Between Counties: In a change of venue dispute between Missoula County and Lake County Commissioners regarding payment of District Court expenses by Missoula County for transcripts and judicial decisions in cases filed in Lake County when both counties were part of the same judicial district: (1) Lake County argued that under 25-2-126, Missoula County was excluded as a proper place for trial; while (2) Missoula County argued that under 25-2-125, Missoula County was a proper place for trial and that therefore Lake County could not change venue. The Supreme Court found that 25-2-125 supported Lake County as the proper venue, but it further held that there were grounds for a reasonable person to believe that, considering the nature of the controversy and the parties involved, a fair trial could not be had in either county. Therefore, under 25-2-201, the District Court was directed to enter an order changing venue to Lewis and Clark County. Missoula County v. Hutchin, 223 M 55, 724 P2d 183, 43 St. Rep. 1527 (1986).

No Change of Venue — County and Public Officials: Plaintiff Weiss was severely injured in a one-car accident in Glacier County. A complaint was filed in Gallatin County, Weiss' place of residence. Codefendants, Glacier County and Glacier County Commissioners, filed a motion for a change of venue from Gallatin to Glacier County, asserting that 25-2-125 and 25-2-126 require an action against a county or its Commissioners to be brought in the county of the alleged tort. The District Judge denied the motion, reasoning that venue was proper as to the state defendants, therefore venue was proper as to all defendants. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed with the plaintiffs' assertion that 25-2-117, enacted in 1985, rather than 25-2-125 and 25-2-126, was controlling. The court held that 25-2-117 was intended to apply to all venue provisions, including the provisions relating to suits against counties and public officials, and that denial of a change of venue was consistent with the provision of 25-2-117 which states that an action may be brought in any county where venue is proper and other defendants joined, though venue otherwise would not lie against those defendants. Weiss v. St., 219 M 447, 712 P2d 1315, 43 St. Rep. 82 (1986).

Action Against County — Former Law: Plaintiff was mistakenly arrested in Lincoln County pursuant to a Flathead County arrest warrant. He brought an action for wrongful arrest in Lincoln County. The Supreme Court held, under former 2-9-312(2) (renumbered 25-2-126(3)), that venue was proper in either county and affirmed the District Court's order denying Flathead County's request for a change of venue. Spencer v. Flathead County, 212 M 399, 687 P2d 1390, 41 St. Rep. 1823 (1984), followed in Gabriel v. School District No. 4, 264 M 177, 870 P2d 1351, 51 St. Rep. 217 (1994). See also Wentz v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 14, 928 P2d 237, 53 St. Rep. 1277 (1996).

Venue — Action Against Multiple Counties: In 1981, Silver Bow County erroneously reissued the registration number of plaintiff's vehicle to another automobile. The automobile was subsequently reported stolen. The vehicle was recovered but not shown as such on county records. Defendant, a Jefferson County Deputy Sheriff, saw plaintiff's vehicle and requested status information. The vehicle was shown as stolen. Plaintiff was arrested and later released upon discovery of the error. Plaintiff brought suit against both Silver Bow and Jefferson Counties in Silver Bow District Court seeking damages on several grounds. Jefferson County moved for a change of venue, which was denied. The Supreme Court found that if the provisions of the venue statutes and the Rules of Civil Procedure were applied strictly, plaintiff would be placed in an impossible situation whereby both counties were indispensable parties and either could object to venue and be entitled to a change or dismissal. The court, relying on State ex rel. Mont. Deaconess Hosp. v. Park County, 142 M 26, 381 P2d 297 (1963), affirmed the refusal to grant a change of venue because both counties were necessary parties and because venue was proper at least as to Silver Bow County. Hutchinson v. Moran, 207 M 330, 673 P2d 818, 40 St. Rep. 2081 (1983).

Change of Venue for Tort Class Action — Multiple Defendants: Plaintiffs brought a class action suit against Dow Chemical Co., Lake County, and Missoula County. The complaint did not allege that either Missoula County or Lake County was the exclusive cause of one injury. Rather, the pleadings indicated that the plaintiffs could have been damaged by the actions of either or both counties acting separately. In such a situation both counties are not necessary parties to one action, and the counties should be sued where they are located. The suit would be properly filed in Lake County for the tort allegedly committed against the Lake County plaintiffs. Dow Chemical Co. is entitled to a change of venue as to the claims filed by the Lake County plaintiffs. State ex rel. Kesterson v. District Court, 189 M 20, 614 P2d 1050 (1980).

Judicial Review: Appeal for judicial review of an administrative decision of the County Welfare Board does not constitute an action against the county, and such appeal is properly brought in the county where the plaintiff resides. State ex rel. Hendrickson v. Gallatin County, 165 M 135, 526 P2d 354 (1974).

Action by County Against Nonresident: This section does not require a change of venue where a county brings action against a nonresident in the District Court of that county. Carter County v. Cambrian Corp., 143 M 193, 387 P2d 904 (1963).

Joinder of Counties as Defendants: Where two counties are necessary parties defendant, the action may be brought in either and an alternative writ will not issue. State ex rel. Mont. Deaconess Hosp. v. Park County, 142 M 26, 381 P2d 297 (1963).

Authority for Action: The provision that "an action against a county may be commenced" therein (by a litigant other than a county) constitutes a grant of authority to sue, otherwise lacking. The provision must be strictly construed, and if an action be brought in a county other than the one sued, the District Court thereof is without jurisdiction to try it. Good Roads Mach. Co. v. Broadwater Co., 94 M 68, 20 P2d 834 (1933). See Johnson v. Billings, 101 M 462, 54 P2d 579 (1936).

25-2-131. Specific statutes control.

Evidence Commission Recommendations for Revisions

Explanation: This section is to reaffirm that general venue statutes, even though they are later enactments, are not intended to disturb specific code sections establishing venue. In such cases the specific statute not within Title 25, chapter 2, part 1 is controlling.

Change of Venue

Part Case Notes

Action Filed in Proper County — Motion to Remove to Another Proper County Properly Denied: Once an action has been filed in a proper county, the District Court cannot grant a motion to have it removed to another county of proper venue. Petersen v. Tucker, 228 M 393, 742 P2d 483, 44 St. Rep. 1625 (1987).

Motion to Change Venue After Default Judgment Entered — Denied as Untimely — Proper Course Suggested: A motion for a change of venue may not be made after judgment has been entered. Thus, in this case defendant's motion to change venue was correctly denied as untimely because a default divorce judgment had been granted. Defendant's proper course of action should have been to move for relief from judgment under former Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded); then, if granted, she should attempt to withdraw her initial appearance and request a change of venue. Hoyt v. Hoyt, 208 M 83, 675 P2d 392, 41 St. Rep. 183 (1984).

GENERAL

District Court Authorized to Transfer Venue — No Authority to Transfer to Specific Department of Another District: The Commissioner of Political Practices filed a civil enforcement action in Lewis and Clark County District Court against the plaintiff, who was a candidate for a Senate district that included all of Park County and most of Sweet Grass County. After the filing, the plaintiff initiated a declaratory judgment action in Park County District Court, raising issues similar to those raised in the enforcement action. The Commissioner answered the declaratory action and filed a motion to transfer the declaratory judgment action from Park County to Lewis and Clark County pursuant to Rule 42(a)(2), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20). The Commissioner withdrew his motion to transfer, but the Park County District Court ordered, sua sponte, that the case be transferred to a specific department within Lewis and Clark County District Court. On appeal, the Supreme Court upheld the transfer, reasoning that 25-2-201 requires a venue change if the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice would be promoted by the change. However, the Supreme Court reversed the Park County District Court's transfer of the action to a specific department within Lewis and Clark County District Court, as issues of consolidation remained with the District Court Judges of Lewis and Clark County. Wagman v. Motl, 2015 MT 168, 379 Mont. 439, 352 P.3d 609.

Venue for Parenting Plan Proper Where Filed — Transfer of Venue Improper: The grandmother filed a petition for a parenting plan in Flathead County, where she and the child resided. The mother filed a motion for a change of venue to Hill County, where she resided. The District Court granted the change of venue, believing that 1-1-215 required the change in venue. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the change of venue, ruling that under 40-4-211 venue was proper in either county. In re S.C.B., 2015 MT 19, 378 Mont. 89, 342 P.3d 46.

Forum Selection — Similar Issues to Be Tried in Same Forum: After a dispute arose involving two contracts between two companies based in California, one company filed suit in California and the other filed suit in Montana. The Montana District Court denied a motion to dismiss or stay, prompting a petition to the Supreme Court for supervisory control. Applying the doctrine of forum non conveniens, the Supreme Court granted the petition that the Montana suit should be dismissed, concluding that the terms of one contract required the contract to be litigated in California and that the second contract, which involved similar issues, would be more appropriately tried in the same forum in order to promote judicial expediency and prevent inconsistent judgments. San Diego Gas & Electric Co. v. Ninth Judicial District Court, 2014 MT 191, 375 Mont. 517, 329 P.3d 1264.

Improper Consolidation of Two Cases Pending in Separate Courts — Change of Venue Granted: Drew filed an employment discrimination complaint against Yellowstone County and two County Commissioners. The Commission for Human Rights issued its decision, and Drew appealed certain aspects of the decision to the First Judicial District Court in Lewis and Clark County—a proper venue as the county where the Commission for Human Rights had its principal office. Meanwhile, Yellowstone County and the Commissioners appealed other aspects of the decision to the Thirteenth Judicial District Court in Yellowstone County. Drew moved for a change of venue to Lewis and Clark County. Yellowstone County conceded that Lewis and Clark County was a proper venue for Drew's petition, but argued in Thirteenth Judicial District Court that Yellowstone County's petition justified a separate appeal in a proper District Court of the county's choice because the issues were different from those presented in Drew's petition. The Thirteenth Judicial District Court disagreed and consolidated the appeals in Lewis and Clark County, and Drew appealed. The Supreme Court cited federal law for the proposition that cases to be consolidated must be pending in the same court, so a cause of action pending in one jurisdiction cannot be consolidated with a cause of action pending in another jurisdiction, even though there may be a disparity in the issues under appeal or cross-appeal. Therefore, even though the practical result was the same, the Thirteenth Judicial District Court's consolidation order was reversed, and the court was ordered to grant Drew's motion for a change of venue. Yellowstone County v. Drew, 2007 MT 130, 337 M 346, 160 P3d 557 (2007).

Venue Rights of FELA Plaintiff With Tort Claim Against Out-of-State Corporate Defendant: Rule filed an action in Cascade County seeking damages for personal injury arising from Rule's railroad employment in Dawson County, Rule's county of residence. Defendant moved for a change of venue to Dawson County or Yellowstone County, the location of defendant's resident agent. The District Court granted the motion and ordered the case moved to either county, at Rule's option. Rule appealed the change of venue, contending that the District Court erred in applying Montana tort venue statutes to Rule's Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) claim and that 25-2-122(2) constituted an unconstitutional arbitrary and capricious limitation on FELA venue practice in Montana. The Supreme Court disagreed. In enacting 25-2-122, the Legislature did not create an exception for FELA claims. The venue options in 25-2-122(2) are sufficient for FELA plaintiffs to meet the concerns in both the federal law and under Montana cases. Because federal law allows states to enact venue laws applicable to FELA actions, there is no legal impediment to treating FELA plaintiffs the same as other plaintiffs with tort claims against out-of-state corporate defendants. Rule failed to establish why application of 25-2-122(2) to FELA cases exceeded legislative discretion in enacting venue statutes and thus failed to meet the burden of proving that the statute is unconstitutional. The change of venue was affirmed. Rule v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co, 2005 MT 6, 325 M 329, 106 P3d 533 (2005), following Miles v. Ill. Cent. RR Co., 315 US 698 (1942). See also Davis v. Union Pac. RR Co., 282 M 233, 937 P2d 27 (1997).

Erroneous Change of Venue for Defendants When Proper Venue Chosen by Plaintiff: Plaintiff filed a tort action in Flathead County where a slip and fall accident occurred. Defendants moved for and were granted a change of venue to Sanders County where one defendant resided. Plaintiff appealed the venue change, and the Supreme Court reversed, noting that a defendant must be granted a change of venue if an action is brought in a county that is not statutorily designated as a proper place for trial, but because Flathead County was the location of the premises where the allegedly tortious act occurred, it was a proper venue, so no motion to change the place of trial on the entire action could be granted. Because plaintiff chose a proper venue, the District Court erred when it granted defendants' venue change. Liang v. Lai, 2004 MT 188, 322 M 199, 94 P3d 759 (2004), following Nelson v. Cenex, Inc., 2004 MT 170, 322 M 54, 97 P3d 1073 (2004). See also Wentz v. Mont. Power Co., 280 M 14, 928 P2d 237 (1996), and Ward v. Johnson, 2012 MT 96, 365 Mont. 19, 277 P.3d 1216.

Location of Resident Agent of Foreign Corporation Proper Venue in Tort Action: Nelson worked for a Minnesota corporation at a refinery in Yellowstone County. Nelson brought a tort action based on exposure to asbestos during employment, naming as defendants three Minnesota corporations that operated the refinery and two individuals from Yellowstone County who worked as plant managers. Nelson resided in Missoula County, and the corporations' resident agent was located in Lewis and Clark County. Nelson brought the action in Lewis and Clark County. The corporations moved for a change of venue to Yellowstone County, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. A defendant may move for a change of venue when an action is not brought in a county that is statutorily designated as a proper place for trial, and the motion must be granted if the county in which the action is filed is not a proper place for trial. If more than one county is proper, the action may be brought in any of those counties and a motion for change of venue may not be granted. The general rule for determining venue is 25-2-118, but there are statutory exceptions to the general rule for specific types of actions. Venue rules for tort actions are in 25-2-122, including venue for tort actions against a foreign corporation, one of which is the county in which the corporation's resident agent is located. Thus, Lewis and Clark County was a proper venue for trial, and the District Court did not err in denying the motion for change of venue. Nelson v. Cenex, Inc., 2004 MT 170, 322 M 54, 97 P3d 1073 (2004), distinguishing Platt v. Sears, 222 M 184, 721 P2d 336 (1986), and followed in Ward v. Johnson, 2012 MT 96, 365 Mont. 19, 277 P.3d 1216.

Third-Party Defendant Related to District Court Judge — Denial of Motion for Change of Venue When Not Timely Filed: Over a 2 ½-year period, one of plaintiff's employees forged signatures on more than 100 company checks and money orders, made them payable to herself, and deposited the proceeds in her personal account in a Missoula credit union. Plaintiff ultimately filed an action against the credit union and sought a change of venue from Missoula County on grounds that a fair trial could not be had in that county. The employee was related to one of the District Court judges in the county, although not the same judge that heard the case, but plaintiff nevertheless asserted a conflict of interest because both judges worked in the same courthouse in the same judicial district. The motion for change of venue was denied, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The motion for change of venue was not filed within 20 days of the credit union's answer, as required in former Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), so the untimely motion was properly denied. Yarbro, Ltd. v. Missoula Fed. Credit Union, 2002 MT 152, 310 M 346, 50 P3d 158 (2002).

Burden of Proof on Moving Party Seeking Change of Venue — Error in Shifting Burden of Proof Regarding Residency to Nonmoving Party: Lockhead and Weinstein were involved in an altercation in Missoula. Lockhead subsequently filed a motion in Silver Bow County seeking damages from Weinstein for defamation, negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress, and malicious prosecution. In the complaint, Lockhead alleged that he resided in Butte. Weinstein then moved for a change of venue to Missoula, contending that Lockhead was actually a resident of Missoula rather than Silver Bow County and that the trial should be moved for the convenience of witnesses and the promotion of justice. At a hearing on the motion, Weinstein submitted an affidavit stating that Silver Bow County homeless shelters, the police department, and the post office had been searched for proof of Lockhead's residency, and none could be found. Lockhead also filed an affidavit stating that he resided in Butte at the time that the complaint was filed and that he had no intention of moving. The District Court concluded that Lockhead had failed to establish that he was a resident of Butte and granted Weinstein's motion for a change of venue. Although a District Court may consider affidavits related to a motion to change venue, the averments of a complaint will be taken as true in considering the motion. As movant, Weinstein bore the burden of proof in support of the motion, but failed to carry the burden of proving that Lockhead did not reside in Butte at the time that the complaint was filed or that Lockhead actually resided elsewhere. Thus, the District Court erred by shifting the burden of proving residency to Lockhead, and the change of venue motion was reversed. Lockhead v. Weinstein, 2001 MT 132, 305 M 438, 28 P3d 1081 (2001).

Standard of Review of Motion for Change of Venue: Whether a county is a proper place for trial is a question of law involving the application of the venue statutes to pleaded facts. Thus, the Supreme Court's review of a District Court's grant or denial of a motion for change of venue is plenary, and the Supreme Court will simply determine whether the motion was legally correct. Lockhead v. Weinstein, 2001 MT 132, 305 M 438, 28 P3d 1081 (2001). See also Sprinkle v. Burton, 280 M 358, 935 P2d 1094 (1996).

FELA Action Not Dismissible on Grounds of Inconvenience — Number of Out-of-State Filings Irrelevant: A District Court may not dismiss a FELA action because it considers itself to be an inconvenient forum and may not change the place of a FELA trial based on the doctrine of forum non conveniens, whether based on common law or as codified in this section. This issue will not henceforth be reexamined on the basis of the number of out-of-state FELA cases filed in Montana. (However, see the 1995 and 1997 amendments to 25-2-122, which restricted this decision.) State ex rel. Burlington N. RR Co. v. District Court, 270 M 146, 891 P2d 493, 52 St. Rep. 118 (1995).

Failure to Transfer Venue for Convenience and Justice Not Subject to Interlocutory Appeal: The Department of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Department of Environmental Quality) brought an action in Lewis and Clark County against Pegasus Gold Corporation (Pegasus) and Zortman Mining, Inc. (ZMI), for numerous violations of the Montana water quality laws at the Zortman and Landusky mines located in Phillips County. Defendant ZMI moved for change of venue under both subsections (1) and (3) of this section. The District Court refused to transfer venue under subsection (1) without discussing the merits of ZMI's claim under subsection (3), and ZMI appealed. The Supreme Court refused to consider the merits of ZMI's claim under subsection (3), holding that the language of former Rule 1(b)(2), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), is intended to allow interlocutory appeals only of a District Court's refusal to change venue under subsection (1) of this section. State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Pegasus Gold Corp., 270 M 32, 889 P2d 1197, 52 St. Rep. 64 (1995).

Venue Properly Based Solely Upon Allegations in Complaint — Affidavits Not Considered — Venue Found Proper for Both Defendants: The Department of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Department of Environmental Quality) brought an action in Lewis and Clark County against Pegasus Gold Corporation (Pegasus) and Zortman Mining, Inc. (ZMI), for numerous violations of the Montana water quality laws at the Zortman and Landusky mines located in Phillips County. The complaint alleged that Pegasus owned or controlled the mines and that both Pegasus and ZMI did business in Lewis and Clark County, making that county a proper place for venue. ZMI moved to change venue to Phillips County, alleging that Pegasus did not own or control ZMI, and attached affidavits of Fletcher and Erickson to support its motion. Citing Petersen v. Tucker, 228 M 393, 742 P2d 483 (1987), the Supreme Court held that the District Court properly relied upon the allegations in the complaint without considering the two affidavits. The Supreme Court held that inasmuch as Pegasus was a named defendant at the time of the complaint and did business in Lewis and Clark County, that county was proper for venue. The Supreme Court noted that because the motion for change of venue did not refer to or rely upon the Fletcher affidavit, it was properly not considered by the District Court. The Supreme Court also noted that because the Erickson affidavit did not contradict the allegations in the complaint that Pegasus owned or controlled ZMI, the District Court was correct in focusing on the allegations in the complaint. The Supreme Court held that venue was properly found in Lewis and Clark County for both defendants because under the provisions of 25-2-117, a county that is proper venue for one defendant is proper for both. State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Pegasus Gold Corp., 270 M 32, 889 P2d 1197, 52 St. Rep. 64 (1995).

Venue for Action for Failure to Maintain Workers' Compensation Insurance: Under 39-71-516, an independent cause of action for failure to maintain workers' compensation insurance must be brought in the District Court in the district in which the claimant resides or in which the alleged violation occurs. As established in Melroe v. Doyle, 239 M 524, 781 P2d 1134 (1989), a defendant may not change venue to a different county when a suit may be commenced in more than one county and the plaintiff files in one of the permissible locations. Barthule v. Karman, 268 M 477, 886 P2d 971, 51 St. Rep. 1423 (1994).

Forum Non Conveniens and Right to Change of Venue Inapplicable to FELA Actions: In Federal Employers Liability Act cases, neither the doctrine of forum non conveniens nor the right to change of place of trial is available. (However, see the 1995 and 1997 amendments to 25-2-122, which restricted this decision.) Haug v. Burlington N. RR Co., 236 M 368, 770 P2d 517, 46 St. Rep. 432 (1989).

Filing Proper in County Where Tort Occurred: Parties met in Dawson County and orally agreed that defendant would find, evaluate, and appraise potential mineral investment opportunities for plaintiffs, but there was no agreement on a place of performance of the oral contract. Parties later met in Flathead County, and defendant apprised plaintiffs of the value of mineral interests in eastern Montana and western North Dakota. Plaintiffs purchased the interests for $175,000 but subsequently determined the interests were nearly worthless. Plaintiffs filed a breach of contract and related tort suit in Flathead County. Defendant sought change of venue to Dawson County, his place of residence. Absent a written contract with express terms or an agreement on where the oral contract was to be performed, the District Court correctly determined that any tort resulting from defendant's alleged misrepresentation would have had to occur in Flathead County; therefore, the motion for change of venue was properly denied. Berlin v. Boedecker, 235 M 443, 767 P2d 349, 46 St. Rep. 125 (1989).

Action to Recover Fees for Negotiating Services: Plaintiff alleged breach of contract in a suit to recover fees for negotiating services he rendered for defendants. The court held that under 25-2-121, the appropriate venue was in the county where the contract was to be performed and that under this section, the District Court must make the initial factual determination as to where the contract was performed. The court distinguished Whalen v. Snell, 205 M 299, 667 P2d 436 (1983) (an action to recover attorney fees), as being a bad faith tort claim (rather than a breach of contract claim) for which venue was properly determined under 25-2-102 (since renumbered 25-2-122). Hurly v. Studer, 234 M 100, 761 P2d 821, 45 St. Rep. 1761 (1988).

Importance of Contractual Venue Stipulation — Court Discretion: When faced with a contractual stipulation to venue, the court must place venue in the stipulated county when requested by the parties. A stipulation does not remove the court's discretion to change venue when the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice require it; however, an agreement to place venue in a particular county is a most important factor for the court to consider. Given the court's wide discretion under subsection (3) of this section, the court's decision will not be disturbed in the absence of clear evidence of abuse of that discretion. Mont. Wholesale Accounts Serv. v. Penington, 233 M 72, 758 P2d 759, 45 St. Rep. 1302 (1988), followed in In re Marriage of Lockman, 266 M 194, 879 P2d 710, 51 St. Rep. 726 (1994).

Proper Venue in Dispute Between Counties: In a change of venue dispute between Missoula County and Lake County Commissioners regarding payment of District Court expenses by Missoula County for transcripts and judicial decisions in cases filed in Lake County when both counties were part of the same judicial district: (1) Lake County argued that under 25-2-126, Missoula County was excluded as a proper place for trial; while (2) Missoula County argued that under 25-2-125, Missoula County was a proper place for trial and that therefore Lake County could not change venue. The Supreme Court found that 25-2-125 supported Lake County as the proper venue, but it further held that there were grounds for a reasonable person to believe that, considering the nature of the controversy and the parties involved, a fair trial could not be had in either county. Therefore, under 25-2-201, the District Court was directed to enter an order changing venue to Lewis and Clark County. Missoula County v. Hutchin, 223 M 55, 724 P2d 183, 43 St. Rep. 1527 (1986).

Venue Properly Removed: In an action sounding in contract and tort, venue properly was removed from the county where business was done by the first defendant, a foreign corporation having no residence for venue purposes, to the county where the plaintiffs and other defendant resided and where the accident occurred. The venue statutes for actions in contract (25-2-121) and in tort (25-2-122) contain exceptions to the basic venue rule; these two statutes control the issue of proper venue. (However, see the 1995 and 1997 amendments to 25-2-122, which limits the place of trial against a foreign corporation.) Platt v. Sears, 222 M 184, 721 P2d 336, 43 St. Rep. 1160 (1986).

Venue — Nature of Action and Place Where It Arose: Plaintiff, a regional supervisor for defendant in Missoula, was notified that he was to be demoted. Plaintiff filed an application for an appropriate writ. Defendant moved to change venue to Helena, which was granted. The venue issue was appealed. In this action both the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks and the director were named defendants. Both 2-9-312 (renumbered as part of 25-2-126) and 25-2-105 (renumbered 25-2-125) are applicable and must be harmonized, as both Missoula County and Lewis and Clark County were proper for venue. The court considered the nature of the action and the place where it arose. Because the challenged state action concerned and would affect a person and a position in Missoula, the court found that Missoula County was the proper county of venue. Ford v. Dept. of Fish, Wildlife, & Parks, 208 M 132, 676 P2d 207, 41 St. Rep. 220 (1984).

Timeliness of Brief in Support of Motion for Change of Venue: In an action for strict liability in tort for personal injuries, defendant filed a motion for change of venue on November 17, 1982, and a brief in support of the motion on November 24, 1982. The motion was denied by the District Court for failure to file a supporting brief within 5 days, the time limit allowed by Rule II of the Uniform Rules for District Courts of Montana. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case to District Court, ruling that under former Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), three of the days intervening between the time of filing of the motion and the time of filing of the brief are excluded from the calculation of the maximum permissible time, so the filing of the brief was timely. Tanniehill v. Remington Arms Co., 207 M 501, 675 P2d 948, 41 St. Rep. 103 (1984).

Change of Venue — Defendant's Personal Privilege in Main Action: Plaintiff (Novco) brought an action against the Graingers (defendants) on two counts, for payment for automobile parts delivered to Sunset Carburetor and Electric, Inc., and against Harold Grainger individually to collect on a bad check drawn on the account of Sunset Automotive, Inc., upon which Novco alleged Grainger was personally liable. The Graingers defaulted, which default was subsequently set aside, and they filed an answer, a counterclaim, and a third-party complaint. The third-party complaint alleged that Sunset Carburetor and Electric, Inc., was the real party in interest and liable to Novco. Sunset moved for a change of venue, which the District Court denied. The Montana Rules of Civil Procedure do not permit a third-party plaintiff to implead as a third-party defendant a party who is not a party to the original action and who is or may be liable to the original plaintiff. Former Rule 14(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), only permits impleader of a party who "is or may be liable" to the third-party plaintiff. The Supreme Court followed the federal court rule and held that the privilege of objecting to venue in the main action is a personal privilege belonging to the defendant in the main action alone and not to a third-party defendant. Novco v. Grainger, 199 M 291, 649 P2d 445, 39 St. Rep. 1367 (1982).

Real Property Partition — When Change of Venue Required: Sections 25-2-103 (renumbered 25-2-123) and 25-2-201 are in pari materia and must be read together, and under 25-2-201, in the absence of a motion for a change of venue, an action may be brought in any county of the state and may be tried where brought. Miller v. Miller, 189 M 356, 616 P2d 313, 37 St. Rep. 1523 (1980).

Venue for Tort Class Action Against Counties: Plaintiffs brought a class action suit against Dow Chemical Co., Lake County, and Missoula County. The complaint did not allege that either Missoula County or Lake County was the exclusive cause of one injury. Rather, the pleadings indicated that the plaintiffs could have been damaged by the actions of either or both counties acting separately. In such a situation both counties are not necessary parties to one action, and the counties should be sued where they are located. The suit would be properly filed in Lake County for the tort allegedly committed against the Lake County plaintiffs. Dow Chemical Co. is entitled to a change of venue as to the claims filed by the Lake County plaintiffs. State ex rel. Kesterson v. District Court, 189 M 20, 614 P2d 1050 (1980).

Venue of Appeal of Decision of Board: Under 50-5-306 (now repealed), which provided for an appeal of a decision of the Board of Health and Environmental Sciences (now abolished) regarding a certificate of need for a health care facility, venue was determined by the Montana Administrative Procedure Act, and the District Court properly determined that venue should remain in Lewis and Clark County. Mont. Health Systems Agency, Inc. v. Bd. of Health & Environmental Sciences, 188 M 188, 612 P2d 1275 (1980).

Failure to File Tax Return — Change of Venue Denied: Venue of a criminal action charging intentional failure to file a properly completed Montana individual income tax return would lie in either Lewis and Clark County or the county in which defendants reside. But, since the complaint was filed in the former and no legal justification or prejudice was shown to support transfer, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court's change of venue from Lewis and Clark County. Dept. of Revenue v. Lane, 187 M 230, 609 P2d 300 (1980), following St. v. Bretz, 169 M 505, 548 P2d 949 (1976). (The determination of venue in Bretz was reversed in St. v. Bretz, 180 M 307, 590 P2d 614 (1979), because the conviction was reversed on another issue and the court corrected what was then viewed as manifest error on the prior venue decision.)

Change of Venue From One Proper County to Another Based on Residence Denied: Under 17-4-103, Lewis and Clark County was a proper venue for an action to recover funds paid to the defendant by the state and defendant's motion for a change of venue to the county in which the defendant resided was properly denied. The courts are powerless to transfer a cause to another venue, based on the residence of the parties, even though the other venue may also have been proper. The power to change the place of trial based on residence exists only when the county designated in the complaint is not the proper county. St. v. Sec. St. Bank, 184 M 461, 603 P2d 681 (1979).

Time for Motion to Change Venue for Interests of Justice and Witness Convenience: The District Court properly denied as premature a motion for a change of venue on the grounds that the interests of justice and the convenience of witnesses would be best served. Former case law required that the motion may be made only after an answer has been filed, and former Rule 12(b)(iii), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), preserves that policy. St. v. Sec. St. Bank, 184 M 461, 603 P2d 681 (1979).

Change of Venue for Taxpayer Bias — Motion Not Timely Filed: A motion for a change of venue, based on the allegation that county taxpayers could not be unbiased jurors in a case in which that county was a party because the county taxpayers risked higher taxes if the county lost the case, was denied because the movant did not file the motion within 20 days after the answer or within 20 days after an event affording good cause to believe an impartial trial could not be had. Keith v. Liberty County Hosp. & Nursing Home, 183 M 39, 598 P2d 203 (1979).

County Taxpayers as Jurors — Motion Properly Denied: Where county brought an action for damages done to bridge struck by defendant's truck, it was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to deny a motion for a change of venue even though the jury was made up, necessarily, of taxpayers of that county, each of whom had a pecuniary interest of $31. Carter County v. Cambrian Corp., 143 M 193, 387 P2d 904 (1963).

Action in Mandamus: Petitioner (a County Assessor) contended that an alleged wrong occurred in Silver Bow County where he began receiving paychecks for less than the claimed amount. However, respondent's (Director of Department of Revenue) motion for a change of venue was erroneously denied since the alleged neglectful or intentional failure to pay the full amount of wages due petitioner occurred in Lewis and Clark County, the county where the public official officially resides. McGrath v. Dore, 177 M 179, 580 P2d 1385 (1978).

Board of Plumbers: In a declaratory judgment action brought by private litigants in their county of residence against the Board of Plumbers, the operation or effect of the Board's action was challenged in the plaintiffs' county only and the plaintiffs' county was held to be the proper place of trial. Billings Assoc. Plumbing v. Emerson, 172 M 369, 563 P2d 1123 (1977).

Injunctions — Venue — State Agency Involvement: Notwithstanding the fact that a state agency headquartered in Helena was involved as a defendant, when an injunction was aimed at stopping irreparable harm in another county, venue is proper in the latter county. Guthrie v. Dept. of Health & Environmental Sciences, 172 M 142, 561 P2d 913 (1977).

Multiple Defendants — Good Faith Belief of Plaintiff as to Residency: Even after dismissal (from a tort action arising outside the state) of the only defendants residing in the county where the action was brought, the remaining defendants were not entitled to have the venue changed to the county of their residence so long as the plaintiff reasonably believed in good faith, when he brought the action, that he had a cause of action against the defendants resident in the county where brought. Boucher v. Steffes, 160 M 482, 503 P2d 659 (1972).

Change of Venue — Multiple Reasons: Under statute providing that on proper motion the court must change place of trial when convenience of witnesses and ends of justice would be promoted and under further statute requiring action to be tried in county in which defendants reside at commencement of action, defendants were entitled to have action moved to county upon which all agreed, which was residence of one defendant, which was place insurance contract was entered into, which was where tort occurred, and which was most convenient for defendants and their witnesses. Truck Ins. Exch. v. Nat'l Farmers Union Property & Cas. Co., 149 M 387, 427 P2d 50 (1967).

Time for Motion: Court's discretion in granting change of venue under subsection (3) of this section cannot be exercised until after a defendant has answered, so that where action was brought under 25-2-108 (renumbered 25-2-118) in county where codefendant lived, denial of first motion before defendant had answered applied only to the residency requirement of the codefendant and did not bar determination of second motion made under this section after defendant had answered. Putro v. Mannix Elec., Inc., 147 M 314, 412 P2d 410 (1966).

Multiple Causes of Action — Motion Properly Granted: Where the defendant is entitled to a change of venue on one cause of action in a complaint containing more than one cause of action, the motion for change must be granted even though the other cause or causes would be triable where the plaintiff commenced the action. Beavers v. Rankin, 142 M 570, 385 P2d 640 (1963).

Discretion of Court — Motion Properly Denied: An order refusing an application for a change of venue will not be set aside in the absence of an abuse of judicial discretion. Little v. Strobel, 136 M 272, 346 P2d 971 (1959); McGraff v. McGillvray, 135 M 256, 339 P2d 478 (1959); St. v. Spotted Hawk, 22 M 33, 55 P 1026 (1899); In re Davis' Estate, 11 M 1, 27 P 342 (1891); Territory v. Manton, 8 M 95, 19 P 387 (1888); Kennon v. Gilmer, 5 M 257, 5 P 847 (1884), reversed on other grounds in 131 US 22 (1889); Territory v. Corbett, 3 M 50 (1877).

Change of Venue Not a Defense: A motion seeking a change of venue under this section is not a defense within the meaning of 27-1-501. McGraff v. McGillvray, 135 M 256, 342 P2d 736 (1959).

Discretion of Court — Language Not Mandatory: The word "must" as used in this section does not mandatorily require the trial judge to grant the motion as a matter of course. McGraff v. McGillvray, 135 M 256, 339 P2d 478 (1959).

Contract Action — Choice of Venue: Either the county of defendant's residence or the county where the contract was to be performed is the proper county for the trial of the action. If the plaintiff chooses either of those counties, defendant may not have it removed, except that it is still subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as provided by subsections (2) and (3) of this section. Love v. Mon-O-Co Oil Corp., 133 M 56, 319 P2d 1056 (1958).

Discretion of Court — Language Mandatory:

The provisions of this section are mandatory in the cases covered by subsection (1) and on timely and proper application require the District Court to change the venue. Johnson v. Clark, 131 M 454, 311 P2d 772 (1957).

The provisions of this section are mandatory, and require the District Court to change the venue, but only after a motion has been filed and a showing made as required by the particular subsection of the section under which the change of venue is sought. The court cannot act of its own motion, for while a party may have an absolute right to a change of venue, it is a right that he may waive, and the court is without authority to invoke the statute in his behalf. State ex rel. Gnose v. District Court, 30 M 188, 75 P 1109 (1904).

Time of Determining Cause for Change — Venue Not Affected by Amended Complaint: Right of defendants to a change of place of trial to the proper county depends upon the state of plaintiff's original complaint at the time defendants made their first general appearance, and was not affected by the filing of an amended complaint changing the action from a tort action to one sounding in contract. Johnson v. Clark, 131 M 454, 311 P2d 772 (1957).

Motion Required: Since the District Court can only act upon motion in the matter of changing the place of trial, it is the duty of defendant desiring a change of venue on the ground that the county in which the action was brought was not the county of his residence, under this section, to make a motion to that effect, the demand for such change referred to in section 93-2905, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), not supplying the place of such motion. Danielson v. Danielson, 62 M 83, 203 P 506 (1921).

Notice of Motion Not Required: Notice of motion for change of place of trial is not required to be given to the adverse party. State ex rel. Lohman v. District Court, 49 M 247, 141 P 659 (1914); State ex rel. Jenkins v. District Court, 32 M 595, 81 P 351 (1905).

No Application to Contempt Cases: This section does not apply to contempt proceedings. State ex rel. Carleton v. District Court, 33 M 138, 82 P 789 (1905); State ex rel. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. Harney, 30 M 193, 76 P 10 (1904), distinguished in State ex rel. Nissler v. Donlan, 32 M 256, 80 P 244 (1905).

"Place of Trial" Construed: In the expression "place of trial", as used in statutes of this character, the word "place" primarily means county, and not the immediate place where the trial court sits. In this connection it is equivalent to neighborhood or place of a crime, or a cause of action, or the political division within which a jury must be gathered for the trial, and is synonymous with the word "venue". State ex rel. Sackett v. Thomas, 25 M 226, 64 P 503 (1901).

Proof of Cause for Change Required: The power of courts to grant changes of venue is limited to the exercise of a judicial discretion, on good cause shown, which must consist of facts beyond the mere opinion and conclusions of the party making the affidavits. Kennon v. Gilmer, 5 M 257, 5 P 847 (1884), reversed on other grounds in 131 US 22 (1889). See Territory v. Manton, 8 M 95, 19 P 387 (1888).

CONVENIENCE OF WITNESSES

Transfer of Venue for Convenience of Witnesses Affirmed: Plaintiff owned one of three sites in Kalispell that the state sought to remediate for hazardous or deleterious substances. The state brought suit in Lewis and Clark County to establish liability for remediation, and the Lewis and Clark County District Court held that plaintiff was liable. Prior to the ruling but after the trial, the state issued a record of decision outlining the state's chosen remediation plan. Plaintiff then filed a challenge to the record of decision in Flathead County. The state moved for a change of venue to Lewis and Clark County for the convenience of witnesses and to promote the ends of justice. The Flathead County District Court granted the venue change, and plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. There was no question that Lewis and Clark County was a proper venue, and even if Flathead County was also a proper venue, the Flathead County District Court still had authority to transfer the case. Further, a decision to change venue on grounds of the convenience of witnesses and to promote the ends of justice is not subject to interlocutory challenge, so plaintiff's appeal was dismissed. BNSF Ry Co. v. St., 2010 MT 46, 355 Mont. 296, 228 P.3d 1115, following State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Pegasus Gold Corp., 270 Mont. 32, 889 P.2d 1197 (1995).

Failure to Transfer Venue for Convenience and Justice Not Subject to Interlocutory Appeal: The Department of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Department of Environmental Quality) brought an action in Lewis and Clark County against Pegasus Gold Corporation (Pegasus) and Zortman Mining, Inc. (ZMI), for numerous violations of the Montana water quality laws at the Zortman and Landusky mines located in Phillips County. Defendant ZMI moved for change of venue under both subsections (1) and (3) of this section. The District Court refused to transfer venue under subsection (1) without discussing the merits of ZMI's claim under subsection (3), and ZMI appealed. The Supreme Court refused to consider the merits of ZMI's claim under subsection (3), holding that the language of former Rule 1(b)(2), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), is intended to allow interlocutory appeals only of a District Court's refusal to change venue under subsection (1) of this section. State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Pegasus Gold Corp., 270 M 32, 889 P2d 1197, 52 St. Rep. 64 (1995).

Venue Properly Based Solely Upon Allegations in Complaint — Affidavits Not Considered — Venue Found Proper for Both Defendants: The Department of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Department of Environmental Quality) brought an action in Lewis and Clark County against Pegasus Gold Corporation (Pegasus) and Zortman Mining, Inc. (ZMI), for numerous violations of the Montana water quality laws at the Zortman and Landusky mines located in Phillips County. The complaint alleged that Pegasus owned or controlled the mines and that both Pegasus and ZMI did business in Lewis and Clark County, making that county a proper place for venue. ZMI moved to change venue to Phillips County, alleging that Pegasus did not own or control ZMI, and attached affidavits of Fletcher and Erickson to support its motion. Citing Petersen v. Tucker, 228 M 393, 742 P2d 483 (1987), the Supreme Court held that the District Court properly relied upon the allegations in the complaint without considering the two affidavits. The Supreme Court held that inasmuch as Pegasus was a named defendant at the time of the complaint and did business in Lewis and Clark County, that county was proper for venue. The Supreme Court noted that because the motion for change of venue did not refer to or rely upon the Fletcher affidavit, it was properly not considered by the District Court. The Supreme Court also noted that because the Erickson affidavit did not contradict the allegations in the complaint that Pegasus owned or controlled ZMI, the District Court was correct in focusing on the allegations in the complaint. The Supreme Court held that venue was properly found in Lewis and Clark County for both defendants because under the provisions of 25-2-117, a county that is proper venue for one defendant is proper for both. State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Pegasus Gold Corp., 270 M 32, 889 P2d 1197, 52 St. Rep. 64 (1995).

Time for Motion to Change Venue for Interests of Justice and Witness Convenience: The District Court properly denied as premature a motion for a change of venue on the grounds that the interests of justice and the convenience of witnesses would be best served. Former case law required that the motion may be made only after an answer has been filed, and former Rule 12(b)(iii), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), preserves that policy. St. v. Sec. St. Bank, 184 M 461, 603 P2d 681 (1979).

Five Separate Actions Against Defendant: Where affidavit showed that five separate actions had been brought against defendant in four widely separated counties involving the same occurrence, trial court properly granted change of venue for the convenience of the witnesses to the county where accident occurred although affidavit omitted names of witnesses and nature of their testimony. Putro v. Mannix Elec., Inc., 147 M 314, 412 P2d 410 (1966).

Determination Prior to Answer: Until defendant has answered, any action of the court in determining a motion for a change of venue is premature. McNeill v. McNeill, 122 M 413, 205 P2d 510 (1949).

Divorce Action: Where divorce action was not brought in the county of the residence of the defendant and defendant appeared by general demurrer (demurrer abolished by M.R.Civ.P.), and demanded that the action be transferred to the county of his residence, it was error for the court to refuse the transfer since the court could not be given such authority to retain jurisdiction in such county prior to the disposition of the demurrer and the answer of defendant. McNeill v. McNeill, 122 M 413, 205 P2d 510 (1949).

Rule Applicable to All Witnesses: Change of venue based upon convenience of witnesses relates to witnesses and the ends of justice generally, and not merely to the convenience of plaintiff's witnesses and the ends of justice from his point of view. The matter of convenience of witnesses cannot be invoked until after the answer has been filed in the cause since the trial court cannot consider the materiality of the witnesses in question or determine the issues until then. Maio v. Greene, 114 M 481, 137 P2d 670 (1943).

Balanced Evidence: Where application for change of venue was made on the ground of convenience of witnesses, and affidavits on both sides showed the witnesses to be accommodated were about evenly balanced, refusal of the motion was not an abuse of discretion. Where testimony of physicians could be submitted by deposition, inability to leave their practice to testify was not a compelling reason for granting a change. Westergard v. Westergard, 108 M 54, 88 P2d 5 (1939).

Refusal to Change Venue — Testimony by Deposition: Where testimony of liquidating officer of defunct bank was sought for production and identification of documents in his possession, his residence was more than 30 miles distant and out of county and attendance was not then compellable by subpoena, refusal of change of venue was not error since his testimony was obtainable by deposition. Kroehnke v. Gold Creek Min. Co., 100 M 571, 51 P2d 640 (1935).

False Imprisonment — Location of Witnesses: In an action for false imprisonment commenced in a county other than the one in which the tort was alleged to have been committed, the District Court abused its discretion in denying defendant's motion for change of venue asked for on the ground of the convenience of witnesses and the promotion of justice under this section. The motion was made on affidavits showing, among other things, that a large number of its witnesses residing in Idaho a short distance from the county seat of the county to which it was proposed to have the cause removed, would attend the trial, but would decline to attend if held in the county in which the action was brought, some 340 miles distant, etc., no affidavits being filed in opposition. Irrespective of company's showing in support of the motion as made, it was entitled to the change of place of trial, under 25-2-102 (renumbered 25-2-122), to the county where the alleged tort was committed. Atkinson v. Bonners Ferry Lumber Co., 74 M 393, 240 P 823 (1925).

IMPARTIAL TRIAL

Failure to Renew Venue Objection During Voir Dire — Fatal on Appeal: During the District Court's jury selection proceeding in a civil trial, the state failed to renew a motion for change of venue, and it ultimately agreed to the 12 empaneled jurors. On appeal, the state claimed that the District Court abused its discretion by denying the state's original motion to change venue, as there were reports in a local newspaper that were allegedly biased in favor of the plaintiffs. The Supreme Court applied St. v. Kingman, 2011 MT 269, 362 Mont. 330, 264 P.3d 1104, even though it was a criminal case, and held that the state waived the opportunity to object to venue when it failed to give the District Court an opportunity to revisit the venue ruling during the jury selection process. Weaver v. St., 2013 MT 247, 371 Mont. 476, 310 P.3d 495.

No Implication of Bias of Taxpayer Jurors Warranting Change of Venue: Plaintiff moved for a change of venue based on the fact that a jury panel would not render a fair verdict for plaintiff knowing that a judgment against the county would affect them as taxpayers. The motion was denied, and on appeal the Supreme Court affirmed. The panel was questioned extensively regarding their ability to render a fair verdict, even a verdict in favor of plaintiff. The jurors agreed that, even if they had concerns regarding how a verdict in favor of plaintiff would be paid, they would still be willing to return a large verdict for plaintiff if the evidence supported one. The Supreme Court declined to imply bias based solely on the jurors' status as taxpayers. In this case, the District Court weighed all the allegations and contentions and concluded that the citizens of the county could be fair and impartial jurors, and thus the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the change of venue. Eklund v. Wheatland County, 2009 MT 231, 351 M 370, 212 P3d 297 (2009).

No Error in Failure to Grant Change of Venue After Trial Begun: Dean moved for a change of venue at the end of the first day of trial, claiming that a fair trial could not be had because many venire members knew of the case, knew the parties, disapproved of marijuana use, and had been influenced by pretrial publicity and taxpayer bias. The trial court denied the change of venue motion, and on appeal the Supreme Court affirmed. The trial court allowed extensive voir dire, including private questioning of each panel member, and liberally granted motions to excuse jurors for cause. All jurors confirmed that their prior knowledge and opinions about witnesses would not interfere with their impartiality, and Dean made no assertion that the trial court abused its discretion by denying a challenge for cause to any juror. Denial of the belated motion for a venue change was affirmed. Dean v. Sanders County, 2009 MT 88, 350 M 8, 204 P3d 722 (2009).

News Coverage of Trial Not Considered Inflammatory — Change of Venue Properly Denied: The first trial in this case resulted in a jury verdict for plaintiff, but the then-presiding judge ordered a new trial after concluding that the initial verdict had been tainted by the jury's exposure to media publicity. The replacement judge denied plaintiff's motion for a change of venue on retrial, and plaintiff appealed. A party seeking a change of venue on grounds of prejudicial pretrial publicity must prove that the publicity was inflammatory and inflamed the prejudice of the community to the extent that a reasonable possibility existed that the party would not receive a fair trial. Here, plaintiff conceded that the media coverage had been balanced and factual, rather than biased or inflammatory. News accounts containing factual reports of court filings or events that are devoid of editorializing do not rise to the level of inflammatory publicity, even when the reports contain information unfavorable to the party seeking the change of venue. Plaintiff's speculative attempt to create the appearance of impropriety on the basis of balanced and factual publicity did not amount to a showing of prejudice, so denial of the motion for change of venue was not an abuse of discretion. LaTray v. Havre, 2000 MT 119, 299 M 449, 999 P2d 1010, 57 St. Rep. 497 (2000). See also St. v. Fuhrmann, 278 M 396, 925 P2d 1162 (1996).

Change of Venue Sought on Allegations of Prejudicial Pretrial Publicity — Elements Required to Be Proved: As established in St. v. Moore, 268 M 20, 885 P2d 457 (1994), a defendant who seeks a change of venue on the basis of prejudicial pretrial publicity must prove that the news reports were inflammatory and that the news reports actually inflamed the prejudice of the community to an extent that a reasonable possibility existed that the defendant may not receive a fair trial. In the present case, defendant contended that two inflammatory news articles were prejudicial due to the small number of people in the community where the crime occurred and their close-knit relationships. However, the total circulation of the newspapers that contained the inflammatory publicity was about 109 households in a county of 3,626 people, and only 6 of 78 potential jurors knew about the facts of the case from word or mouth, not the media. Affirming the denial of the venue change, the Supreme Court concluded that even if the news articles were inflammatory, they were not widespread enough in the community to generate a general belief of defendant's guilt throughout the jury pool and that the community as a whole could not have been affected to the extent that a reasonable possibility existed that defendant would not get a fair trial. St. v. Abe, 1998 MT 206, 290 M 393, 965 P2d 882, 55 St. Rep. 876 (1998).

Consideration by Court of Newspaper Articles Not Published Within Twenty Days of Motion to Change Venue: Mannix argued that the lower court erred in considering newspaper editorials published more than 20 days before the defendants' motion for change of venue. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had not abused its discretion because many of the articles published were editorials rather than news articles as had been the case in its decision in St. v. Pease, 227 M 424, 740 P2d 659 (1987). Mannix v. Butte Water Co., 259 M 79, 854 P2d 834, 50 St. Rep. 691 (1993).

Fair Trial Possible Despite Pretrial Publicity: Defendant was not denied a fair trial by being denied a change of venue in spite of local publicity generated by his trial. The Supreme Court quoted the test set forth in St. v. Holmes, 207 M 176, 674 P2d 1071, 40 St. Rep. 1973 (1983), that when prejudicial pretrial publicity is alleged, the publicity must be inflammatory and create a reasonable apprehension that a fair trial is not possible before the motion will be granted. In this case, the newspaper articles were news reports and did not meet the two prongs of the Holmes test. St. v. Pease, 227 M 424, 740 P2d 659, 44 St. Rep. 1203 (1987), followed in St. v. Sullivan, 266 M 313, 880 P2d 829, 51 St. Rep. 827 (1994), and St. v. Abe, 1998 MT 206, 290 M 393, 965 P2d 882, 55 St. Rep. 876 (1998).

No Finding of Juror Prejudice Due to Pretrial Publicity: The District Court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a change of venue and a motion for an individually sequestered voir dire when the allegations given for the requested change of venue failed to establish any possibility of jury prejudice due to pretrial publicity. The two jurors who heard anything about the case in the newspaper or radio were eliminated by peremptory challenge. Further, an alternate juror who read the articles but was not prejudiced did not sit as a juror in the deliberations. St. v. Hansen, 194 M 197, 633 P2d 1202, 38 St. Rep. 1541 (1981), reversed on fifth amendment grounds in Hansen v. Risley, 40 St. Rep. 2100 (D.C. Mont. 1983) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Change of Venue for Taxpayer Bias — Timely Motion Not Filed: A motion for a change of venue, based on the allegation that county taxpayers could not be unbiased jurors in a case in which that county was a party because the county taxpayers risked higher taxes if the county lost the case, was denied. The movant did not file the motion within 20 days after the answer or within 20 days after an event affording good cause to believe an impartial trial could not be had. Keith v. Liberty County Hosp. & Nursing Home, 183 M 39, 598 P2d 203 (1979).

Action by School District: In an action by school district against fire insurers for loss of school building the court did not abuse its discretion in denying motion for change of venue on the ground that a fair and impartial trial could not be had in the county because most jurors, of any county jury, would be residents of the school district. School District v. Globe & Republic Ins. Co. of Am., 142 M 220, 383 P2d 482 (1963).

Motion by Executor: An executor, like any other defendant, may have a change of place of trial under this section upon a proper showing that "there is reason to believe that an impartial trial cannot be had". McGraff v. McGillvray, 135 M 256, 342 P2d 736 (1959).

Wrongful Death by Murder: In an action for wrongful death in behalf of the heirs of a deceased murder victim against the estate of the alleged killer, where the facts indicating prejudice on the part of the public were denied and there was no activity indicating any prejudice, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying executor's motion for a change of venue. McGraff v. McGillvray, 135 M 256, 342 P2d 736 (1959).

Motion Addressed to Discretion of Court: A motion for change of venue on the ground that the movant cannot have an impartial trial in the county in which the action was brought, is addressed to the sound legal discretion of the District Court and its denial of the motion, though based upon conflicting affidavits, will not be disturbed on appeal unless it clearly appears that the court abused its discretion. Torstenson v. Independent Publishing Co., 86 M 163, 282 P 861 (1929).

WAIVER OF RIGHT TO CHANGE

Waiver of Appeal: Where defendant, after the lower court's denial of his motion for change of venue, appears in court and proceeds to trial, he waives his right to raise the question of the correctness of the court's order on appeal from the judgment against him. Letz v. Lampen, 110 M 477, 104 P2d 4 (1941).

How Waived: A defendant may waive his right to the privilege of a change of venue by omitting to demand the right or by failing to observe the statutory requirements. O'Hanion v. Great N. Ry., 76 M 128, 245 P 518 (1926).

Disqualification of Judge — Suspension of Motion: In the event that a judge is disqualified under section 93-2906(4), R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Supreme Court rule), a motion is made for a change of venue, and no qualified judge appears within 30 days to try the case, the motion is suspended for that length of time, at the expiration of which the transfer may be demanded, but the moving party is not bound to demand it; and if he does not, but thereafter has the cause set for hearing, he must be conclusively presumed to have waived the right to have it transferred. Bean v. Missoula Lumber Co., 40 M 31, 104 P 869 (1909).

Motion Required — Court Not to Prevent Waiver: The provisions of this section are mandatory, and require the District Court to change the venue, but only after a motion has been filed and a showing made as required. The court cannot act of its own motion, for while a party may have an absolute right to a change of venue, it is a right that he may waive, and the court is without authority to invoke the statute in his behalf. State ex rel. Gnose v. District Court, 30 M 188, 75 P 1109 (1904).

25-2-202. Change of venue on agreement of parties.

Case Notes

No Motion to Change Venue for Convenience of Witnesses — No Court Discretion to Deny Stipulation for Change of Venue: This section does not require any additional statutory reason to exist before the trial court is bound to grant a stipulation for change of venue. When there is no motion to change venue based on convenience of witnesses, the court does not have the discretion to deny a stipulation for change of venue. Fjelstad v. St., 277 M 112, 918 P2d 674, 53 St. Rep. 565 (1996), following State ex rel. Bonners Ferry Lumber Co., Ltd. v. District Court, 74 M 338, 240 P 388 (1925), and distinguishing Mont. Wholesale Accounts v. Penington, 233 M 72, 758 P2d 759 (1988).

Stipulation in Contract Allowed: Parties have a right to stipulate in advance where any action arising under a contract may be tried. Elec. Prod. Consol. v. Bodell, 132 M 243, 316 P2d 788 (1957).

Stipulation in Contract — Assignee Bound: Assignee of contract is bound by stipulation as to venue. Elec. Prod. Consol. v. Bodell, 132 M 243, 316 P2d 788 (1957).

Confession of Motion for Change as Stipulation: Confession of a motion for change of venue is tantamount to a stipulation for a change, and under this section where the parties stipulate to that effect, the District Court must order the change to the county agreed upon. State ex rel. Bonners Ferry Lumber Co. v. District Court, 74 M 338, 240 P 388 (1925).

Saving Clause — Code Commissioner Correction: Section 25, Ch. 368, L. 2015, provided: "[Sections 19 and 20] do not affect rights and duties that matured, penalties that were incurred, or proceedings that were begun before [the effective date of this act]."

Because these section references were not changed when new sections 20 and 22 were added to the bill by amendment, the code commissioner has determined that "[Sections 19 and 20]" should be replaced with "[Sections 19 and 21]" [25-3-106 and 27-2-205].

Nonseverability — Code Commissioner Correction: Section 26, Ch. 368, L. 2015, provided: "Except as provided in subsection (2), it is the intent of the legislature that each part of [this act] is essentially dependent upon every other part, and if one part is held unconstitutional or invalid, all other parts are invalid.

(2) If [section 19 or 20] is held unconstitutional, all other parts are valid."

Sheriff Protected Against Loss — Process Regular on Face: Where a Sheriff seized oil well piping under a search warrant and subsequently released it by order of the same Justice of the Peace to the custody from which he seized it, incidentally enabling the person who procured the warrant to take it, under claim of ownership, claim and delivery does not lie against Sheriff on theory of wrongful and negligent loss of possession. Conversion does not lie where no facts are alleged that he instigated or assisted in the alleged wrongful taking. Trespass and trespass on the case do not lie unless the injury is "proximate result" of Sheriff's wrongful or negligent acts or defaults. Harri v. Isaac, 111 M 152, 107 P2d 137 (1940).

Protection of Sheriff — Valid Judgment Required: In an action against a Sheriff for the value of personal property sold under execution issued against the property of a third person, the officer cannot justify under the execution, without proving the existence of a valid judgment. 2005 Amendment: Chapter 392 in (1) in first sentence before "courts" deleted "district" and in second sentence near middle substituted "within 20 days" for "not more than 15 days"; inserted (3) authorizing sheriff or levying officer to enclose return of summons, process, or order in envelope, postage paid, and deposit it in post office addressed to officer, agent, or attorney sending it in lieu of returning summons, process, or order to clerk of court; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2005.

1987 Amendment: In (2), near middle, inserted "or a registered process server".

1981 Amendment: In (2) substituted "a notice is" for "notices are", inserted "or was forwarded under 25-3-201" and "his return of"; deleted former subsection (3) relating to return by mail.

Case Notes

Delay in Filing Return — No Loss of Jurisdiction: The court does not lose jurisdiction over a defendant who has been properly served by the failure of the Sheriff to make the return within the time required by this section. Clinton v. Miller, 124 M 463, 226 P2d 487 (1951).

Failure to File Summons — No Loss of Jurisdiction: Mere failure or omission to file the original summons with the various returns thereon within the time specified in this section does not affect the District Court's jurisdiction. Clinton v. Miller, 124 M 463, 226 P2d 487 (1951).

Delay in Filing Return — Violation of Section: Where Sheriff served summons on defendant and mailed it with his official return to plaintiff's attorney who kept it for 18 days and then filed the summons and had defendant's default entered the first day defendant was in default, the return was irregular in two particulars, in that it was not returned and filed with the clerk by the officer serving it (see 2005 amendment) and it was not filed within 10 days after the service, both being required by this section. Madson v. Petrie Tractor & Equip. Co., 106 M 382, 77 P2d 1038 (1938).

Case Notes

Certainty of Proof Required to Overcome Return: Proof necessary to overcome the statements and recitals in a Sheriff's return must be clear, unequivocal, and convincing. Sewell v. Beatrice Foods Co., 145 M 337, 400 P2d 892 (1965).

Certainty of Proof Required to Overcome Return — Proof Found Sufficient: In reversing a default judgment obtained 7 years after an accident in which plaintiff was injured while riding in corporate defendant's truck, prima facie presumption of service was rebutted by plaintiff's long unexplained delay in asserting his claim, the testimony of defendant's district manager that there had been no service, and Sheriff's failure to make return within the required time. Sewell v. Beatrice Foods Co., 145 M 337, 400 P2d 892 (1965).

Certainty of Proof Required to Overcome Return — Proof Found Not Sufficient: A Sheriff's return stating that he offered land for sale in separate parcels, as required by the statute, is prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein and may be overcome only be clear, unequivocal, and convincing evidence. An affidavit later executed by the Sheriff and stating that he did not offer the land in separate parcels, but containing no excuse, explanation, or suggestion of mistake in the return, may be found not to be such clear, unequivocal, and convincing evidence. Husky Hi Power, Inc. v. Schmidt, 140 M 353, 372 P2d 142 (1962).

Execution Only Prima Facie Evidence: A Sheriff's return on execution is merely prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated and may be overcome by other evidence. Where his return in an action for the rescission of a land contract recited that he had delivered certain articles of personal property as directed, evidence regarding loss of or damage thereto was properly admissible. Silfvast v. Asplund, 99 M 152, 42 P2d 452 (1935).

Sheriff's Return of Execution — Prima Facie Evidence Only: The return of a Sheriff on execution sale is only prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein. It may be contradicted by other evidence, especially where the return is at variance with the officer's certificate of sale, by virtue of which latter instrument title to the property passes, subject to redemption. Sale cannot be affected by defects or informalities in the return. Commercial Bank & Trust Co. v. Jordan, 85 M 375, 278 P 832 (1929).

Sheriff's Return of Search Warrant — Prima Facie Evidence Only: The return of an officer upon a search warrant is prima facie evidence only of the facts stated therein and such facts stated in a warrant may be overcome by other evidence. State ex rel. Merrell v. District Court, 72 M 77, 231 P 1107 (1924).

Required Notice of Withdrawal of Counsel: When counsel for a party withdraws, in order to properly protect the interests of the unrepresented party, the opposing party, by written notice, must require the unrepresented party to appoint another attorney or appear in person, as provided in 37-61-405. The written notice must include the date of the next action required in the case and notice that if the unrepresented party fails to appoint an attorney or appear in person within 20 days from the date of notice, the action or other proceeding will proceed and may result in a judgment or other order being entered against the unrepresented party. Once proper notice is given, any continued refusal by the unrepresented party to participate in the proceedings may justly result in default judgment or other final judgment against that party's interests. Quantum Elec., Inc. v. Schaeffer, 2003 MT 29, 314 M 193, 64 P3d 1026 (2003), following McPartlin v. Fransen, 178 M 178, 582 P2d 1255 (1978), and Stanley v. Holms, 281 M 329, 934 P2d 196 (1997), and overruling Sikorski & Sons, Inc. v. Sikorski, 162 M 442, 512 P2d 1147 (1973), and Audit Serv., Inc. v. Kraus Constr., Inc., 189 M 94, 615 P2d 183 (1980), to the extent that Sikorski and Audit Serv. waived a failure of opposing counsel to comply with 37-61-405.

Withdrawal of Counsel — "Rule 10 Notice" Sent to Last-Known Address Held "Notice as Required by Law": In a dissolution proceeding between Christina and Laramie, Laramie's counsel withdrew after he had not been contacted by Laramie for approximately 18 months. In the notice of withdrawal, Laramie's counsel provided Christina's counsel with Laramie's last-known address. Christina's counsel then sent a "Rule 10 notice", pursuant to Rule 10, M.U.D.C.R. (Title 25, ch. 19), to Laramie at the address provided by his former counsel, informing Laramie that he must appoint another attorney, that trial was scheduled for a particular date, and that if he did not appoint an attorney or appear, a default judgment might be made against him. That notice was returned by the post office because Laramie was apparently no longer living at that address. After a decree of dissolution was entered, Christina's counsel obtained Laramie's address from his mother and sent Laramie a notice of entry of judgment. Fifty-six days later, Laramie moved pursuant to former Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), to set aside the judgment, arguing that Christina's counsel did not exercise due diligence in obtaining his correct mailing address and that if Christina's counsel obtained his correct address through his mother after entry of judgment, Christina's counsel could have done so before entry of judgment. Citing McPartlin v. Fransen, 178 M 178, 582 P2d 1255 (1978), and Stanley v. Holms, 281 M 329, 934 P2d 196 (1997), the Supreme Court held that Christina's counsel, by mailing the Rule 10 notice to Laramie's last-known address, satisfied the requirement that he make a good faith effort to notify Laramie and that Christina's counsel had no obligation to "track down" Laramie through his mother. In re Marriage of Wallace, 284 M 360, 944 P2d 227, 54 St. Rep. 920 (1997).

Initial Appearance — Appearance General — Waiver of All Irregularities: Defendants' attorney made an initial appearance to vacate a default judgment without reserving the question of personal jurisdiction. As a result, defendants' appearance was general and waived all irregularities in the service of process. Spencer v. Ukra, 246 M 430, 804 P2d 380, 48 St. Rep. 25 (1991), followed in Spiker Communications, Inc. v. St., 1998 MT 32, 287 M 345, 954 P2d 1145, 55 St. Rep. 114 (1998), and distinguished in MacPheat v. Schauf, 1998 MT 250, 291 M 182, 969 P2d 265, 55 St. Rep. 1032 (1998). However, see The Milky Whey, Inc. v. Dairy Partners, LLC, 2015 MT 18, 378 Mont. 75, 342 P.3d 13, holding that under new Rule 4, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), a notice of appearance is not a responsive pleading and does not acquiesce to the jurisdiction of the court unless it is accompanied by a motion or a responsive pleading.

Pretrial Stipulations as Vitiating Requirement: When a case is tried and submitted on agreed facts, the court is bound by the stipulation and will proceed accordingly. Big Sky Livestock v. Herzog, 171 M 409, 558 P2d 1107 (1976).

Motion to Strike as General Appearance: Defendants filing motion to strike portions of plaintiff's complaint made their general appearance in the case. Johnson v. Clark, 131 M 454, 311 P2d 772 (1957).

Entitlement to Appeal Notice: Attorneys appearing were entitled to notice of appeal. In re Malick's Estate, 124 M 585, 228 P2d 963 (1951).

Notice of Application for Leave to Present Evidence Unnecessary: Plaintiff, in a proceeding in which a temporary injunction was issued without notice, has the right under 27-19-402 (repealed in 1979) to present affidavits and oral testimony in opposition to a motion to dissolve the injunction, and since defendant knew the time of the hearing on the motion to dissolve and was advised by 27-19-402 (repealed in 1979) of plaintiff's right, service of notice upon defendant of the application for leave to exercise such right was unnecessary and would have been an idle gesture. State ex rel. Bottomly v. District Court, 115 M 400, 143 P2d 559 (1943).

Notice to Defendant or Attorney Required: Under this section and 25-3-402, the defendant in an action, or his attorney, if he has appeared by attorney, is entitled to notice of all subsequent proceedings. Barrick v. Porter, 56 M 247, 184 P 217 (1919).

Notice to Be Presumed: While defendants were entitled to notice and an opportunity to be heard on a motion for a new trial, it will be presumed in the absence of a showing of lack of notice that the proceedings were regular and that they had notice. Lish v. Martin, 55 M 582, 179 P 826 (1919).

Request for Extension of Time to Answer as General Appearance: Where defendants, after a denial of their motion to dismiss the action, asked for and were granted time in which to answer to the merits, their request for time constituted a general appearance, the effect and scope of which could not be limited by a statement of counsel that he desired the record to show that his appearance was special. State ex rel. Mackey v. District Court, 40 M 359, 106 P 1098 (1910). See also State ex rel. Lane v. District Court, 51 M 503, 154 P 200 (1915).

Entitlement to Entry of Judgment: The entry of judgment is one of the "subsequent proceedings" mentioned in this section, of which a defeated party or his attorney is entitled to notice. State ex rel. Cohn v. District Court, 38 M 119, 99 P 139 (1909).

Case Notes

Custody Proceedings — Court-Appointed Attorney for Child — Service Required: While the appointment of an attorney to represent children in custody matters is discretionary with the court under 40-4-205, once an attorney has been appointed, it is required that he or she be served with all orders, pleadings, motions, notices, and other papers pertinent to the action. Further, the attorney must actively represent the children and be given an opportunity to present all evidence concerning the best interests of the children. In re Marriage of Hammill, 225 M 263, 732 P2d 403, 44 St. Rep. 220 (1987).

Constructive Service Not Allowed: In view of section 93-8507, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by former Rule 5, M.R.App.P., now superseded), this section will not permit the constructive service of an order to show cause on a motion to modify the custody provisions of a divorce decree. Hand v. Hand, 131 M 571, 312 P2d 990 (1957).

Guardianship Terminated: The matter of service of notice of appeal as provided by this section and section 93-8005, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by former Rules 1, 4 through 6, M.R.App.P., now superseded), is jurisdictional. Therefore, where guardianship of a minor had automatically ceased before trial by the minor's becoming of age, carrying with it the employment of the guardian's attorney, service of notice of appeal upon the guardian's attorney not shown to be reemployed by the former ward did not confer jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court to consider the appeal. Faxed Return of Service of Summons Received on Evening of Final Day of Filing Considered Timely — Courts Always Open: White filed a complaint September 8, 1995, and summons was served on Klosterman September 8, 1998. The Sheriff's dispatcher faxed the return of service to the Clerk of Court at 8:23 p.m. the same day. The District Court held that the return of service was late because it was not filed with the Clerk of Court by 5 p.m. on the last day that filing was permitted. However, the Supreme Court found nothing in the plain language of the judicial rules of procedure or any Montana authority that provides those requirements. Rather, former Rule 41(e), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), requires that return of service be filed within 3 years; former Rule 5(e), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), allows filing by facsimile or other electronic means; this section gives faxed documents the same force and effect as an original; former Rule 77(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), requires that District Courts always be open for filing; and 1-1-301 provides that each day ends at midnight. The District Court's decision was reversed on grounds that filing was timely. White v. Klosterman, 1999 MT 316, 297 M 259, 990 P2d 1249, 56 St. Rep. 1265 (1999).

25-3-502. Publication to be once a week.

Case Notes

Number of Publications Required: The requirement for a 30-day notice of a sale by a county of property bought by it at delinquent tax sale, was not satisfied by one publication made 30 days prior to the day of sale in a newspaper published in the county, as this section prescribes that notices be published once a week for the period specified. Snidow v. Mont. Home for the Aged, 88 M 337, 292 P 722 (1930).

25-3-504. Designating unknown persons as defendants.

Compiler's Comments

Code Commissioner Correction: In (1) substituted "Rule 4(o)(1)" for "Rule 4D(5)(a)" to reflect revisions adopted by Supreme Court Order No. AF 07-0157 dated April 26, 2011.

1981 Amendment: In (1) substituted "In the situations listed in Rule 4D(5)(a), M.R.Civ.P." for an enumeration of those situations; in (2)(a) deleted "including choses in action as aforesaid" after "mixed"; in (2)(b) inserted "or devisees" after "heirs" twice; deleted former subsection (2)(c) that read "When persons are made defendant by the style and description of unknown devisees, there shall be added to such designation the name of the deceased person of whom they shall be claimed or supposed to be devisees."

25-3-505. Effect of service by publication upon unknown persons.

Compiler's Comments

Code Commissioner Correction: In introduction substituted "Rule 4(o)(2)" for "Rule 4D(5)(b)" to reflect revisions adopted by Supreme Court Order No. AF 07-0157 dated April 26, 2011.

1981 Amendment: In lead-in to section substituted "the effect prescribed in Rule 4D(5)(b), M.R.Civ.P." for "the same effect in all respects as if such persons had been made parties by their own proper names and had been served by publication and mailing of summons according to the rules of civil procedure"; at beginning of second sentence substituted "such" for "in such action or proceeding"; in (3) substituted "persons with" for "all".

Part 6
Service on Secretary of State — Nonresident Motorists

Part Case Notes

Purpose: In the absence of a provision in this part that it is intended solely for the benefit of resident plaintiffs against nonresident defendants, it may not be so liberally construed; it being clear that the object of the law is to further safety of highway traffic within the state, and afford a practicable remedy for damage arising from negligence, and of providing service where otherwise it would be virtually impossible. State ex rel. Gallagher v. District Court, 112 M 253, 114 P2d 1047 (1941).

Constitutionality: This part is not so ambiguous and uncertain as to render it unconstitutional. Provision for mailing summons by plaintiff does not render it invalid. A failure to provide for delivery of copy of the complaint to defendant is immaterial and it is neither directly nor impliedly repealed by section 93-3007, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed). The fact that it does not apply to operators of all vehicles as well as motor vehicles does not render it class legislation. The part conforms to Art. III, sec. 27, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. II, sec. 17, 1972 Mont. Const.) and federal due process of law clauses. State ex rel. Charette v. District Court, 107 M 489, 86 P2d 750 (1939).

Roads to Which Section Applicable: A haul-road is a public way when it is being used in conjunction with highway construction project. State ex rel. Mohr v. District Court, 138 M 452, 357 P2d 891 (1960).

Operator of Truck as Agent: Owner of truck tractor, not a common carrier, and the driver thereof, were agents of common carrier authorized to transport freight in Canada and Montana, where at time of collision truck tractor was hauling freight accepted by common carrier as a carrier for hire under an arrangement whereby the owner of the truck tractor received a percentage of the freight charges collected by the common carrier. Thomas v. Warren, 162 F. Supp. 101 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

Ownership of Vehicle Immaterial — "Operation" by Agent Sufficient: For the purpose of motion to quash service, the question of ownership of the car is immaterial; if the car at the time of the accident was being "operated", i.e., if the physical act of working its mechanism was being performed by an agent (the driver), the act applies, the burden of proving that the driver was not defendant's agent being upon him. State ex rel. Gallagher v. District Court, 112 M 253, 114 P2d 1047 (1941).

Constitutionality: The prior ruling in State ex rel. Charette v. District Court, 107 M 489, 86 P2d 750, that this section is not unconstitutional as unwarranted class legislation nor in violation of the due process of law clauses of the federal and state constitutions, applies to a resident motorist who prior to suit arising out of a collision leaves the state either permanently or for an indefinite time, since in such a case he becomes in effect a nonresident who cannot with due diligence be found and served within the state. State ex rel. Thompson v. District Court, 108 M 362, 91 P2d 422 (1939).

Persons to Whom Applicable — Application to "Resident" Motorist: In view of the language used in the section and title thereof, it applies to "any person" operating a motor vehicle, whether a "nonresident", or a "resident" of the state at the time of the accident who removed therefrom prior to institution of suit against him and who therefore may not with due diligence be found and personally served within the state. State ex rel. Thompson v. District Court, 108 M 362, 91 P2d 422 (1939).

CHAPTER 4
PLEADINGS, MOTIONS, AND OTHER PAPERS

Chapter Case Notes

District Court Jurisdiction to Decide Constructive Fraud Based on Pleadings and Final Pretrial Order: Plaintiffs filed a claim for misrepresentation and failure to disclose concerning the sale of an irrigation system. Defendants contended that plaintiffs did not notify them by pleadings or evidence at trial that plaintiffs were claiming that a false impression was created regarding the condition of the field at pivot three, arguing that the complaint concerned defects and misrepresentations related to the irrigation system, not to the land, and that the District Court thus lacked jurisdiction to enter judgment on the issue of the land rather than the irrigation system. A District Court does not have jurisdiction to grant relief outside of the issues presented by the pleadings unless the parties stipulate that other questions be considered or the pleadings are amended to conform to the proof. However, in this case, the pleadings and the final pretrial order, which cited misrepresentation of or failure to disclose problems with both the deficient irrigation system and the erosion of the river bank near pivot three, gave defendants sufficient notice of the disputed issues to vest the District Court with issue jurisdiction. H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000).

Primary Physical Custody Not Properly Before Court — No Implied Consent Found for Trial of Issue: Appellant filed a petition for custody of the parties' minor child, asking that she be given custody. Respondent counterpetitioned for split custody until the child was 5 years old, at which time respondent would be granted primary physical custody. During trial, respondent moved for an order granting immediate primary physical custody. Appellant moved for a stay or continuation to respond to the motion. The Supreme Court held that the issue of respondent's primary physical custody was not properly before the District Court because the issue had not been raised in the pleadings. Citing Trust Bank v. Darrah, 152 M 256, 448 P2d 734 (1968), the Supreme Court also held that there was no implied consent by appellant to try the issue raised by respondent's motion as appellant received no notice of the motion prior to trial. The issue was therefore not properly before the District Court. In re Custody of C.J.K., 258 M 525, 855 P2d 90, 50 St. Rep. 645 (1993).

Judgment on Matters Outside Pleadings Void: A judgment or final order adjudging matters outside the issues raised by the pleadings is void as to the matters outside the pleadings. In re Custody of C.S.F., 232 M 204, 755 P2d 578, 45 St. Rep. 992 (1988), following Welch v. All Persons, 78 M 370, 254 P 179 (1927).

No Jurisdiction Over Issues Not Presented in Pleadings: Where the plaintiff church was granted a tax exemption by the Department of Revenue for some but not all of the plaintiff's real property and brought a quiet title action to determine its ownership and the tax-exempt status of that portion of the property for which it had not been granted an exemption, the District Court erred in removing the exemption originally granted by the Department of Revenue. Under the rationale of Heller v. Osburnsen, 162 M 182, 510 P2d 13 (1973), and Nat'l Sur. Corp. v. Kruse, 121 M 202, 192 P2d 317 (1948), the District Court had jurisdiction only over those issues raised in the pleadings, and the exempt status of lots 10 through 16 was not at issue in the case. Consequently, the District Court had no jurisdiction to remove the tax-exempt status for those lots belonging to the plaintiff. Old Fashion Baptist Church v. Dept. of Revenue, 206 M 451, 671 P2d 625, 40 St. Rep. 1774 (1983).

25-4-101. Motions and orders — where made.

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

1981 Amendment: In (1) substituted "unless" for "provided".

Case Notes

Disqualified Judge — Power of Substitute Judge: Where a substitute judge is appointed because of the disqualification of the original judge, the substituted judge is competent to make orders and rule on motions until there is a complete disposition of the case as far as the trial court is concerned. McLeod v. McLeod, 126 M 32, 243 P2d 321 (1952).

Adjoining District Judge — Cases Authorized to Be Heard: This section provides only for the presentation of such motions as the judge may entertain at chambers, and does not authorize a judge of an adjoining district to hear a motion which he could not hear at chambers if he were personally present in the district in which the parties reside. Eustance v. Francis, 52 M 295, 157 P 573 (1916).

Stipulation as to Judge's Power: If a judge is disqualified and another judge has been designated to try and determine the case, it seems to be proper practice for the parties, by stipulation, to submit to him for decision at chambers, in his own district, the issues of law arising therein. It is also proper to stipulate that the judge may make up his findings and decision in a cause, after returning to his own district, and transmit them to the clerk for filing and entry of judgment. Such a stipulation would doubtless estop the parties from questioning the validity of the result. Eustance v. Francis, 52 M 295, 157 P 573 (1916).

Substitute for Disqualified Judge: Where a substitute judge is appointed because of the disqualification of the original judge, the substituted judge is competent to make orders and rule on motions until there is a complete disposition of the case as far as the trial court is concerned. McLeod v. McLeod, 126 M 32, 243 P2d 321 (1952).

Motions Out of Chambers — Adjoining District Judge: This section concerns only the presentation of such motions as the judge may entertain at chambers, and does not authorize a judge of an adjoining district to hear a motion which he could not hear at chambers if he were personally present in the district in which the parties reside. Eustance v. Francis, 52 M 295, 157 P 573 (1916).

Stipulation as to Judge's Power: If a judge is disqualified and another judge has been designated to try and determine the case, it seems to be proper practice for the parties, by stipulation, to submit to him for decision at chambers, in his own district, the issues of law arising therein. It is also to stipulate that the judge may make up his findings and decision in a cause, after returning to his own district, and transmit them to the clerk for filing and entry of judgment. 25-4-103. Vacating or modifying order made without notice.

Case Notes

Correction of Extension of Time Erroneously Made: If court erroneously made order extending the time to prepare, serve, and file bill of exceptions under section 93-5505, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), it had authority to correct such order under the provisions of this section. Barcus v. Portland Cattle Loan Co., 122 M 534, 207 P2d 565 (1949).

Correction of Order to Perpetuate Testimony: Where order of court on application to perpetuate testimony was complained of, the remedy was to apply to the court to vacate or modify the order and not by direct application for certiorari in the Supreme Court. State ex rel. Lichte v. District Court, 121 M 34, 189 P2d 1004 (1948); State ex rel. Woodard v. District Court, 120 M 585, 189 P2d 998 (1948).

25-4-111. Lost papers.

Case Notes

Carbon Copies Authorized: This section authorizes the trial judge to proceed with the trial on substituted carbon copies of the papers and pleadings rather than the original where the original papers and pleadings were missing. Mortenson v. Mortenson, 129 M 290, 285 P2d 834 (1955).

25-4-112. Papers with technical defects.

Case Notes

Application to Guardian's Account: Improperly designating a guardian's account as an administratrix's account did not render it inadmissible, where the account of the administratrix had been closed 2 years prior to rendition of her account as guardian and she certified to it as her guardian's account. McCauley v. Am. Sur. Co. of N.Y., 81 M 161, 263 P 90 (1927).

Application to Attachment Affidavit: If the affidavit for an attachment bears the title of the action and was filed as a part of the record at the time the complaint was filed, it is sufficiently identified as it intelligibly refers to the action or proceeding, within the meaning of this section; if the plaintiff had asked leave in the court below to amend it, the amendment would have been allowed as a matter of course. Union Bank & Trust Co. v. Himmelbauer, 56 M 82, 181 P 332 (1919).

Application to Administrative Appeals: A notice of appeal from a decision of the Montana State Board of Medical Examiners, sufficient in other respects, is effectual, though entitled, "In the matter of the application of (the appellant) for a certificate from the board of medical examiners to practice medicine and surgery". State ex rel. Riddell v. District Court, 27 M 103, 69 P 710 (1902).

2011 Amendment: Chapter 238 in (1) near beginning substituted "a verification by affidavit" for "an affidavit of verification", substituted "verification by affidavit" for "affidavit of verification", and at end of second sentence substituted "verification" for "affidavit"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2011.

Saving Clause: Section 11, Ch. 238, L. 2011, was a saving clause.

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Case Notes

Failure to Verify — Effect: When failure to verify was not raised as an issue until after trial and no claim was made that the failure was prejudicial, there was no error. The proper remedy was a motion to strike. Adams v. Davis, 142 M 587, 386 P2d 574 (1963).

Unverified Complaint Properly Dismissed: Where plaintiffs elected not to amend their unverified complaint, but to stand on it, and moreover there was nothing in the record to indicate that there was any set of circumstances which would admit of their stating a claim upon which relief could be granted under the complaint, the court properly sustained defendant's motion to dismiss the complaint. Rambur v. Diehl Lumber Co., 142 M 175, 382 P2d 552 (1963).

Failure to Verify Complaint as Negligence by Attorney: It is negligence for an attorney to file a complaint in a District Court which is not verified as required by this section. In re Hirst, 140 M 91, 368 P2d 157 (1962).

Amendment of Verification Allowed: Where verification by attorney was not in accordance with this section, court properly denied motion to strike and properly granted leave to file amended verification. Smith v. Armstrong, 118 M 290, 166 P2d 793 (1946).

Defective Verification — Waiver No Effect on Jurisdiction: Verification of pleadings is not necessary to vest jurisdiction in courts; therefore, since entire absence of it does not affect jurisdiction, a mere defect in verification which might have been taken advantage of by timely objection but was not, the objection being thus waived, cannot affect it, and the judgment roll in an action in which the verification to the complaint was defective was not rendered inadmissible in evidence by such defect. Chisholm v. Vocational School for Girls, 103 M 503, 64 P2d 838 (1936); Commercial Bank & Trust Co. v. Jordan, 85 M 375, 278 P 832 (1929).

Not Part of Pleadings: Verifications are not part of the pleadings. Chisholm v. Vocational School for Girls, 103 M 503, 64 P2d 838 (1936); Bryant v. Davis, 22 M 534, 57 P 143 (1903); Johnson v. Puritan Min. Co., 19 M 30, 47 P 337 (1896).

Defective Verification — Waiver: A verification is not part of a pleading, strictly speaking; its absence is such a defect as may be amended, and failure to object waives it. State ex rel. Jensen v. District Court, 103 M 461, 64 P2d 835 (1936).

Several Defendants — One Verification: Under this section, the verification to an answer in an action against several defendants may be made by one of them in behalf of all. State ex rel. Ingersoll v. Clapp, 81 M 200, 263 P 433 (1928).

Admissions in Verified Pleading Offered as Evidence: Admissions in a verified answer may properly be offered in evidence, and the plaintiff in doing so need not embrace in his offer the entire answer, nor is he estopped from denying or disproving statements contained in the pleading. Johnson v. Butte & Superior Copper Co., 41 M 158, 108 P 1057 (1910).

Alternative Defenses — Perjury Not Sanctioned: In permitting a defendant to set forth in his answer as many defenses as he has, it was never intended to sanction perjury. Johnson v. Butte & Superior Copper Co., 41 M 158, 108 P 1057 (1910).

Receivership Application — Unverified Complaint Insufficient: An ex parte order appointing a receiver cannot be based on the complaint alone, unless it satisfies the requirements of an evidential affidavit by a verification on affiant's own personal knowledge. A verification upon "knowledge, information, and belief" is insufficient. Benepe-Owenhouse Co. v. Scheidegger, 32 M 424, 80 P 1024 (1905), explained in Fisk Tire Co. v. Lanstrum, 96 M 279, 30 P2d 84 (1934).

Application to Certiorari Affidavits: No reason is apparent why the rule concerning affidavits in certiorari should be more strict regarding the proper affiant than is required by this section of the plaintiff in an action. An affidavit by the duly authorized agent or attorney of the party beneficially interested, in which the material averments are stated as true to the knowledge of the affiant, is sufficient. State ex rel. Allen v. Napton, 24 M 450, 62 P 686 (1900).

Defective Verification as Basis for Judgment on the Pleadings: Plaintiff is not entitled to judgment on the pleadings merely because the verification of the answer is defective. Bryant v. Davis, 22 M 534, 57 P 143 (1899).

Statements Upon Information and Belief — Corporate and Noncorporate Defendants: Where there are two defendants to an action, and one of them is absent from the county and the other is a corporation, answers verified on the best knowledge, information, and belief of the persons making them are correct. Bryant v. Davis, 22 M 534, 57 P 143 (1899).

25-4-204. Time for amendment or reply after motion on pleading.

Compiler's Comments

1981 Amendment: Substituted "motion concerning a pleading" for "demurrer or motion to any pleading".

Case Notes

Motion for Change of Venue: Where a motion for a change of venue was timely served and filed in the action by defendant's attorney, defendant was not in default. McLeod v. McLeod, 124 M 590, 228 P2d 965 (1951).

Motion to Strike — Reply Required: A motion to strike a negligible portion of the answer in a personal injury action, which motion plaintiff claimed to have been in substance a demurrer to the answer, was insufficient to toll the time for reply to the affirmative defense of contributory negligence. Mihelich v. Butte Elec. Ry., 85 M 604, 281 P 540 (1929).

Notice Not Required — Attorney Present in Court: Where the minutes of the court showed that counsel, who asked the vacation of a default judgment entered upon his failure to answer within a given time after the overruling of a demurrer to the complaint, was present when the demurrer was overruled, notice to him of the decision of the court was not required. Pearce v. Butte Elec. Ry., 40 M 321, 106 P 563 (1910).

25-4-301. Pleading statute of limitations.

Case Notes

Reply to Pleading of Statute — When Required: Where new matter in the answer consists of a pleading of the Statute of Limitations, plaintiff need not reply thereto if matter in avoidance of the plea of the bar of the Statute be found in any of plaintiff's pleadings. Hence, where plaintiff's complaint in a mortgage foreclosure suit showed on its face that the action was barred by the Statute of Limitations, but plaintiff in addition alleged a payment of interest within the 8-year period, he relied in effect on the new promise, and was not required to reply to the limitation plea, nothing new having been brought in by the answer. Matteson v. Ackerson, 104 M 239, 66 P2d 797 (1937).

Facts Supporting Defense — No Allegation Required: In pleading the Statute of Limitations, it is not necessary to state the facts showing the defense, a statement that the cause of action is barred by the provisions of the section of the Code relied upon being sufficient. Bahn v. Estate of Fritz, 92 M 84, 10 P2d 1061 (1932).

Code Section to Be Specified: Where the answer alleges that a cause of action is barred by the Statute of Limitations, it must specifically point out the particular section under which the action is barred. Stewart v. Budd, 7 M 573, 19 P 221 (1888).

Bill of Particulars — Extension of Time for Filing: The trial court may in its discretion permit the filing of a bill of particulars after expiration of the 5-day period. Long v. Byers, 142 M 46, 381 P2d 299 (1963).

Timber Purchase — Allegations of Fact Found Sufficient: An allegation that an indebtedness is owing from defendant to plaintiff for the balance due on "stumpage from timber purchased of and from the plaintiff" which upon demand the defendant has failed and still fails to pay, is sufficient to allege the ultimate facts required by the Code. Ballenger v. Tillman, 133 M 369, 324 P2d 1045 (1958).

Application to Foreclosure of Mechanics' Lien (Now Construction Lien): In an action to foreclose mechanics' lien (now construction lien) and recover a stated sum of money for labor and materials, a complaint which did not contain an itemized statement of the materials and labor furnished was not subject to demurrer; the defendant's remedy was under this section. Cole v. Hunt, 123 M 256, 211 P2d 417 (1949).

Section Not Applicable to Stated Account: The provision of this section regarding the duty to furnish a copy of the account has no application to an action on an account stated. Fowlis v. Heinecke, 87 M 117, 287 P 169 (1930).

Failure to Furnish Bill — Bar to Further Evidence: Failure to furnish a bill of particulars in a cause where a bill may properly be demanded bars the delinquent party from being heard at the trial. Munger v. Nelson, 61 M 104, 201 P 286 (1921).

Justice Court Pleadings — "Account" Distinguished: The term "account" in this section is not used in the same sense as it is in 25-31-504 (now repealed). Moran v. Ebey, 39 M 517, 104 P 522 (1909).

Section Applicable to Open Accounts: This section applies only to actions upon open, unsettled accounts, and not to actions upon accounts stated, and the court may order an additional statement, the penalty for refusal to furnish the same being punishment as for a contempt. Martin v. Heinze, 31 M 68, 77 P 427 (1904), distinguished in Moran v. Ebey, 39 M 517, 104 P 522 (1909). See also Cohen v. Clark, 44 M 151, 119 P 775 (1911).

25-4-311. Damages for personal injury or wrongful death not to be stated.

Case Notes

Plaintiff Allowed to Amend Prayer in Complaint: Under former Rule 15(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the plaintiff is allowed to amend the prayer in her complaint regarding punitive and compensatory damages. Under the provisions of 25-4-311 through 25-4-313, the defendant is entitled to have the amendments to the prayer include the dollar amount of special and general damages sought, including punitive damages, or in lieu of the amounts, a statement of damages under 25-4-312. In any amendment the dollar amount sought may not be open-ended by reference to a proportion of the financial condition or net worth of the defendant. The amendment, in addition to stating the dollar amounts, may include such language as "other and further relief to which the plaintiff may be entitled". State ex rel. Fitzgerald v. District Court, 217 M 106, 703 P2d 148, 42 St. Rep. 1061 (1985).

Complaint Including Prayer for Damages Not to Be Dismissed — Prayer to Be Stricken: Appellant filed a malpractice action and included a prayer for damages in violation of this section. The District Court granted respondent's motion to dismiss after the Statute of Limitations had run, so that appellant could not refile. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, ruling that there is nothing in this section that suggests that a complaint containing a prayer for damages is a nullity. The court held that dismissal of the complaint was an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court and remanded the case to the trial court with directions to reinstate the complaint and order the specific amount of the prayer stricken. Franz v. Bednarek, 208 M 383, 678 P2d 217, 41 St. Rep. 418 (1984).

Effect of Statement of Damages on Amount Recoverable for Federal Jurisdiction Purposes: This case was removed to federal court but remanded to the Montana District Court. While discussing the options a plaintiff has with regard to the specification of damages for purposes of removal to federal court in light of the provisions of 25-4-311, 25-4-313, and 25-4-314, the federal District Court also discussed former Rule 54(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The court said it did not interpret the rule, which provides that the statement of claims is not a limitation on what the plaintiff ultimately may recover, as imposing on a plaintiff's option of avoiding federal jurisdiction by seeking less than the requisite amount for diversity jurisdiction. Rollwitz v. Burlington N., 507 F. Supp. 582, 38 St. Rep. 264 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

25-4-312. Request for statement of damages — response.

Case Notes

Plaintiff Allowed to Amend Prayer in Complaint: Under former Rule 15(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the plaintiff is allowed to amend the prayer in her complaint regarding punitive and compensatory damages. Under the provisions of 25-4-311 through 25-4-313, the defendant is entitled to have the amendments to the prayer include the dollar amount of special and general damages sought, including punitive damages, or in lieu of the amounts, a statement of damages under 25-4-312. In any amendment the dollar amount sought may not be open-ended by reference to a proportion of the financial condition or net worth of the defendant. The amendment, in addition to stating the dollar amounts, may include such language as "other and further relief to which the plaintiff may be entitled". State ex rel. Fitzgerald v. District Court, 217 M 106, 703 P2d 148, 42 St. Rep. 1061 (1985).

25-4-313. Notice to defendant when no request for statement.

Effect of Statement of Damages on Amount Recoverable for Federal Jurisdiction Purposes: This case was removed to federal court but remanded to the Montana District Court. While discussing the options a plaintiff has with regard to the specification of damages for purposes of removal to federal court in light of the provisions of 25-4-311, 25-4-313, and 25-4-314, the federal District Court also discussed former Rule 54(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The court said it did not interpret the rule, which provides that the statement of claims is not a limitation on what the plaintiff ultimately may recover, as imposing on a plaintiff's option of avoiding federal jurisdiction by seeking less than the requisite amount for diversity jurisdiction. Rollwitz v. Burlington N., 507 F. Supp. 582, 38 St. Rep. 264 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Case Notes

Counterclaim Abandoned — Plaintiff Not Entitled to Costs: In a contract action when the defendant abandoned its counterclaim at the close of evidence, no instructions were given to the jury in relation to the counterclaim, the plaintiff made no objection to the lack of jury instructions on that issue, and the jury's verdict made no reference to the allegations in the counterclaim, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the plaintiff's request for court costs. Smith v. Gen. Mills, Inc., 1998 MT 280, 291 M 426, 968 P2d 723, 55 St. Rep. 1151 (1998).

Counterclaim Premised on Malicious Prosecution or Abuse of Process as Suit in Tort — Necessary Elements: A counterclaim alleging damages for breach of fiduciary duty, constructive fraud, creditor overreaching, and wrongful attachment did not meet the conditions of a counterclaim and third-party complaint on an attachment bond as provided in 27-18-204. The counterclaim was then premised upon the common-law notions of malicious prosecution or abuse of process, which is a suit in tort. To recover on such a suit, the elements of malice and want of probable cause must be present and proved. Absent evidence of these elements, the counterclaim was properly dismissed. Montgomery v. Hunt, 227 M 279, 738 P2d 887, 44 St. Rep. 1081 (1987).

Breach of Covenant of Good Faith in Conducting Insurance Claim: In a foreclosure action, the insured, Britton, cross-claimed against Farmers Insurance Group (FIG) for the full amount of coverage provided by FIG's policy and for further compensatory and punitive damages by reason of "bad faith". FIG responded to the foreclosure action by setting up as a cross-claim against Britton its right under its partial assignment of mortgage and requesting foreclosure against Britton. FIG further defended against Britton's cross-claim by alleging that Britton had intentionally set the fire, had been guilty of fraud with respect to his interest in the property, and had not submitted a proper proof of loss. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that prior to filing its answer to Britton's cross-claim, FIG neither rejected Britton's proof of loss nor informed him in writing or otherwise of their contention of arson. Also, FIG's evidence regarding Britton's involvement in setting the fire was circumstantial, and there was no evidence of potential financial gain for Britton from the policy proceeds. The jury decision that FIG breached the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in conducting the claim was upheld. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

Stipulation for Offset: Stipulation entered into between the parties in an action arising out of the drilling of a gas well under a lease, that the amount of a judgment which defendant might obtain on reversal of a judgment against a third person in a companion suit should be allowed as an offset or counterclaim to any judgment awarded the plaintiff, was binding. Nepstad v. E. Chicago Oil Ass'n, 91 M 366, 9 P2d 1074 (1932).

Case Notes

Res Judicata Inapplicable: The Supreme Court dismissed allegations by appellants that respondents should have asserted their cross-claim to property in a federal foreclosure action or be barred by the doctrine of res judicata. It is discretionary with the party whether to assert his claim as a cross-claim or to reserve it for later independent litigation. Whittaker v. Schreiner, 174 M 232, 570 P2d 299 (1977).

Demand for Relief Necessary: Fact that a court of equity, when once it acquires jurisdiction will grant all the relief necessary to the adjustment of the entire subject of the action, is subject to the qualification that when rights between defendants are involved it is not proper to make determination thereof unless demanded in the pleadings. Strack v. Fed. Land Bank, 124 M 19, 218 P2d 1052 (1950).

Equity Basis for Section — Complete Adjudication of Rights: This section is nothing more than a declaration, in statutory form, of the familiar rule that a court of equity, when all the parties to a controversy are before it, will adjust the rights of all and leave nothing open for future litigation, if it can be helped. Meredith v. Roman, 49 M 204, 141 P 643 (1914).

New Matter Not Allowed: This section does not permit the adjustment of defendants' rights in a case in which their claims are wholly independent of, and not in any way connected with, those of plaintiff, nor give the defendants the right to file new or amended pleadings. Meredith v. Roman, 49 M 204, 141 P 643 (1914).

Part 5
Motion to Postpone Trial

Part Case Notes

Appellate Review — Issues Not Raised Below: In suit for damages arising out of railroad accident, issue regarding the admission of evidence of other accidents was not presented to the District Court upon application of one party for a Writ of Supervisory Control and a motion of the other party for a stay of proceedings, and thus the issue would not be addressed by Supreme Court in deciding the application and motion. Henry v. District Court, 198 M 8, 645 P2d 1350, 39 St. Rep. 430 (1982).

25-4-501. Motion to postpone trial for absence of testimony.

Case Notes

General 203
Discretion of Court 205
Affidavit as to Absent Witness 206

GENERAL

No Assurance of Witness's Availability to Testify or Aid Defense — Motion for Continuance Properly Denied: After presenting his case at trial, Toulouse requested a continuance in order to allow his sister, who was sick with cancer, to testify the following day. The trial court granted a 15-minute recess to inquire whether the sister would be able to testify, but Toulouse could give no reasonable assurance that she would, so the continuance motion was denied. Following conviction, Toulouse appealed on grounds that he was denied a fair trial when the motion for continuance was denied, but the Supreme Court affirmed. A defendant moving for a continuance to secure an absent witness must demonstrate that a reasonable expectation or prospect of obtaining the presence of the witness exists, that the witness would testify, and that the witness's testimony would help the defense, and Toulouse did not meet this burden. Additionally, under this section, when a party moves to postpone a trial on the grounds of absence of evidence, such as an absent witness, the motion may be made only upon an affidavit showing the materiality of the evidence expected to be obtained and that due diligence has been used to procure it. Toulouse failed to file an affidavit or to meet the other statutory criteria, so the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion for continuance. St. v. Toulouse, 2005 MT 166, 327 M 467, 115 P3d 197 (2005), following St. v. Fields, 2002 MT 84, 309 M 300, 46 P3d 612 (2002), and distinguished in St. v. Gleed, 2014 MT 151, 375 Mont. 286, 326 P.3d 1095, on the grounds that an affidavit is not required to be attached to a motion for a continuance in a criminal case unless specifically required by the court.

No Error in Failure to Grant Continuance of Parental Rights Trial Absent Affidavits or Showing of Good Cause: The father contended that the District Court erred in failing to grant his motion for a continuance of the trial to terminate his parental rights because he had only 20 days to prepare for trial. Although true that only 20 days elapsed after the father received actual notice of the hearing, he was aware for more than 4 months of the state's intention to terminate his parental rights. Further, he offered no affidavits in support of his motion to continue, offered no evidence of what he would have presented had more time been available, and failed to show any good cause beyond the argument of fundamental unfairness. The District Court noted that this was not a new case and that the father had plenty of time to get witnesses to the hearing. The hearing did not spring upon the father unexpectedly, and denial of his motion to continue was not erroneous. In re R.F., 2001 MT 199, 306 M 270, 32 P3d 1257 (2001), followed in In re O.A.W., 2007 MT 13, 335 M 304, 153 P3d 6 (2007).

No Continuance for Failure to Obtain Counsel: Plaintiffs, who resided out of state, sought a continuance based on their alleged inability to obtain legal counsel. However, they had ample time to secure representation, and absent a showing of good cause, the District Court properly denied the motion for continuance. Fields v. Wells, 239 M 392, 780 P2d 1141, 46 St. Rep. 1775 (1989).

Not Error to Refuse to Grant Continuance to Subpoena Witness — Testimony Inadmissible Hearsay: Even if the motion to compel a subpoena had been made in a timely manner, the District Court did not err in refusing to grant a continuance to call the police chief as witness to testify as to what he reported to the Worker's Compensation Crime Compensation Unit because the police chief was not present during the assault and his testimony about the report would have been inadmissible hearsay. Sloan v. St., 236 M 100, 768 P2d 1365, 46 St. Rep. 214 (1989).

Failure of Petitioner to Appear — No Showing of Good Cause: Petitioner's motion for continuance was properly denied when she knew of the date and purpose of the trial, indicated no good reason for her voluntary absence, and made no showing of either absent material evidence or other grounds for continuance in the furtherance of justice. In re Custody of C.C., K.C., & B.C., 215 M 72, 695 P2d 816, 42 St. Rep. 190 (1985).

Failure of Attorney to Appear — Continuance Denied: A husband and wife and their respective attorneys had extended notice of the date of a property settlement hearing. However, without court approval for his absence, the husband's attorney failed to appear at the hearing. The husband made a motion for a continuance so that he might obtain another attorney to represent him. The District Court denied the motion and proceeded to ask many questions of the husband and wife, allowed the husband to cross-examine, and scrupulously protected the rights of the husband. Following the trial, the District Court waited several months to allow the husband and his attorney an opportunity to present additional evidence or file motions. Since the court found a complete absence of an abuse of discretion, the motion for continuance because of lack of evidence was properly denied. Bolich v. Bolich, 199 M 45, 647 P2d 844, 39 St. Rep. 1197 (1982).

Section Applied to Criminal Case — No Error in Denial of Motion: Court did not commit prejudicial error when it overruled criminal defendant's objection to County Attorney's motion for continuance even though motion was not supported by required affidavit where motion was made just prior to end of trial court's day and trial resumed promptly on the next morning. St. v. Crockett, 148 M 402, 421 P2d 722 (1966).

Mistake, Surprise, or Neglect — Cause for Relief From Judgment: A continuance ought to be granted whenever the facts shown upon the application therefor would authorize the court, under the appropriate provisions of law, to relieve a party from a judgment, order, or other proceeding taken against him through his mistake, surprise, or excusable neglect. Westfall v. Motors Ins. Corp., 136 M 449, 348 P2d 784 (1960); Meredith v. Roman, 49 M 204, 141 P 643 (1914).

Bastardy Case — Diligence Not Shown: Where, in a bastardy case, no affidavit in support of a motion for continuance on the ground of two absent witnesses was presented, showing due diligence exercised to procure the absent evidence, and that should the motion be granted, the evidence could be procured at a subsequent time, and the character of evidence of one of them, still not subpoenaed, and absent in a neighboring state, would naturally make him reluctant to testify, and the other had been subpoenaed but not served, the trial court did not err in denying the motion. St. v. Kuilman, 111 M 459, 110 P2d 969 (1940).

Diligent Effort Required: It is indispensably necessary that the affidavit for a postponement, on the ground that witnesses are absent, contain a showing of diligent effort to secure their presence. Meredith v. Roman, 49 M 204, 141 P 643 (1914).

Section Applied to Criminal Case — Denial of Motion as Error: The denial of a continuance is error where, in a prosecution for murder, the defendant's affidavit for a continuance to secure the testimony of an absent witness, who was present at the killing, showed that: the utmost diligence was used to locate the witness and secure his testimony; he had been located in another state about 18 days before the trial, and a commission was immediately issued to take his testimony, which was not secured in time for the trial; and his evidence was material, and the same facts could not be proved by any other witness. Moreover, the affidavit was corroborated as to the diligence used. St. v. Metcalf, 17 M 417, 43 P 182 (1896), distinguished in Bean v. Missoula Lumber Co., 40 M 31, 104 P 869 (1909).

Costs as a Condition to Continuance: This section, when construed with 25-10-203, confers jurisdiction upon the trial court to impose costs as a condition for a continuance, upon the ground of absence of evidence as well as other grounds. State ex rel. Congdon v. District Court, 10 M 456, 26 P 182 (1891).

DISCRETION OF COURT

Failure to File Affidavit or Show Prejudice From Denied Postponement, Coupled With Ample Chances to Discover: It was not an abuse of discretion to refuse to grant a continuance for discovery purposes when the requesting party failed to file the necessary affidavit in the lower court, did not assert on appeal how she was prejudiced by the failure, and had ample opportunity to pursue discovery of the matter at issue. In re Marriage of Caras, 263 M 377, 868 P2d 615, 51 St. Rep. 98 (1994).

Language Mandatory — Affidavit Required:

There was no abuse of discretion in denial of a motion for continuance where appellant failed to: (1) file an affidavit showing the materiality of a psychological evaluation and showing that he used due diligence in procuring a sexual offender psychological evaluation; and (2) show good cause to support a postponement pursuant to 25-4-503. Any bias as to the treatability of a sexual offender was harmless, and appellant's right to a fair trial was not denied. In re T.M.M., 234 M 273, 762 P2d 866, 45 St. Rep. 1909 (1988).

Defendant alleged error for failure to grant his motion for a continuance for the purpose of challenging the credibility of Paulus, the state's witness. Defendant never filed an affidavit demonstrating materiality or due diligence as required by statute. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in not granting the motion. The language of 25-4-501 is mandatory and must be construed as such. St. v. Harvey, 184 M 423, 603 P2d 661 (1979).

Minimal Diligence of Movant — Motion for Continuance Denied: Section 46-13-202 clearly allows the District Court to exercise discretion in granting or denying a motion for continuance after considering the diligence put forth by the movant. Where a trial date had already been rescheduled twice, the court properly denied a motion for continuance when defendant offered no evidence or argument that he exercised due diligence in pursuing a psychological evaluation and no formal affidavit was submitted as required by this section. St. v. French, 233 M 364, 760 P2d 86, 45 St. Rep. 1557 (1988).

Failure of Attorney to Appear — Continuance Denied: A husband and wife and their respective attorneys had extended notice of the date of a property settlement hearing. However, without court approval for his absence, the husband's attorney failed to appear at the hearing. The husband made a motion for a continuance so that he might obtain another attorney to represent him. The District Court denied the motion and proceeded to ask many questions of the husband and wife, allowed the husband to cross-examine, and scrupulously protected the rights of the husband. Following the trial, the District Court waited several months to allow the husband and his attorney an opportunity to present additional evidence or file motions. Since the court found a complete absence of an abuse of discretion, the motion for continuance because of lack of evidence was properly denied. Bolich v. Bolich, 199 M 45, 647 P2d 844, 39 St. Rep. 1197 (1982).

No Abuse of Discretion: In view of defendant's failure to comply with 25-4-501, it cannot be said that the court abused its discretion in denying a motion for continuance. St. v. Pascgo, 173 M 121, 566 P2d 802 (1977).

Condemnation — No Abuse Shown: Since this is a discretionary statute, denial of state's motion for continuance in condemnation action was not an abuse of discretion where landowner had made a full and complete admission as to testimony state's absent witness would have given. St. Highway Comm'n v. Cooper, 164 M 272, 521 P2d 190 (1974).

Refusal of Continuance as Abuse: Where plaintiff filed an affidavit for a continuance wherein it was shown that the affidavit was made in good faith, that the absent witness was a material witness, that due diligence was used to procure the witness, and that the defendant did not file any affidavits in opposition to the motion, it was an abuse of discretion for the trial court to refuse the continuance. Dean v. Carter, 131 M 304, 309 P2d 1032 (1957).

No Abuse Shown — Particular Facts: In denying a motion for a continuance on the ground of absent witnesses the court did not abuse its discretion where movant did not show that he had used due diligence in procuring the desired evidence, nor set forth that if a continuance were granted he would be able to secure the personal attendance of the witnesses or their evidence at a subsequent time, and his assertion of what he "believed" the witnesses would testify to was fairly met by counteraffidavits. McCarthy v. Anaconda Copper Min. Co., 70 M 309, 225 P 391 (1924).

Order Not Reviewable Without Prejudice to Movant: A motion for a continuance on the ground of the absence of a witness is addressed to the discretion of the trial court, its action not being reviewable on appeal in the absence of an affirmative showing of prejudice to the movant. Hunt v. Van, 61 M 395, 202 P 573 (1921).

Order Not Reviewable Without Prejudice to Complainant: The power to grant or refuse a postponement on any ground is vested in the discretion of the court, and its exercise is not reviewable where no prejudice to the complaining party is shown. Downs v. Cassidy, 47 M 471, 133 P 106 (1913).

AFFIDAVIT AS TO ABSENT WITNESS

Language Mandatory — Affidavit Required:

The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's denial of the husband's request for a continuance. No affidavit was presented showing the materiality of absent evidence and that due diligence had been used to procure it. The record did not disclose any other grounds warranting postponement under 25-4-503. The husband's contentions were unsubstantiated. In re Marriage of Concepcion, 212 M 191, 687 P2d 718, 41 St. Rep. 1675 (1984).

Defendant alleged error for failure to grant his motion for a continuance for the purpose of challenging the credibility of Paulus, the state's witness. Defendant never filed an affidavit demonstrating materiality or due diligence as required by statute. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in not granting the motion. The language of 25-4-501 is mandatory and must be construed as such. St. v. Harvey, 184 M 423, 603 P2d 661 (1979).

Knowledge of Trial Date Affidavit Sufficient: Where a plaintiff's absence was excusable and he did not know that the case was set for trial and plaintiff's counsel did the best he could in setting forth in his affidavit what he believed his client would testify to, the fact that the showing in the affidavit was technically insufficient was not grounds for denying a continuance. Westfall v. Motors Ins. Corp., 136 M 449, 348 P2d 784 (1960).

Due Diligence and Evidence to Be Shown: The affidavit on application for a continuance on the ground of the absence of a necessary witness must show that due diligence was exercised by the applicant to procure the testimony of the witness, set forth the substance thereof, and that the witness if present will testify. Davenport v. Davenport, 69 M 405, 222 P 422 (1924).

Travel Costs — Affidavits Insufficient: Where a continuance was sought in a divorce action on the ground that defendant, a necessary witness, was unable to be present because of her inability to defray the expense of travel, refusal thereof was proper in the absence of a showing that her financial condition would improve in the meantime, and of an excuse for failure to have her deposition taken. Davenport v. Davenport, 69 M 405, 222 P 422 (1924).

Affidavits Insufficient: Affidavits for a continuance not showing when the subpoena for an absent witness was issued, why it was sent to the Sheriff of a county other than that of the residence of the witness, or that there was probability or possibility that his personal attendance or deposition could be procured at a date later than that set for trial, were insufficient, and court did not err in overruling the motion for a postponement. Hunt v. Van, 61 M 395, 202 P 573 (1921).

25-4-502. No postponement when expected evidence admitted.

Case Notes

Offer to Stipulate — Refusal of Postponement Not Abuse of Discretion: Defendant moved that the setting be vacated for the term in a personal injury action because of illness of the driver of his truck preventing the taking of his deposition. The defendant claimed that the driver was a material witness. Plaintiff's counsel offered to dismiss the action against the driver and to stipulate that the driver would testify as moving counsel stated he would. Refusal to grant the motion was not an abuse of discretion under this section, particularly where it appeared that the driver's testimony would have been merely cumulative of that of other defense witnesses. Adams v. Misener, 113 M 559, 131 P2d 472 (1942).

Grounds for Denial Stated: Under this section, the trial court may properly deny an application for a continuance based upon the absence of a material witness, if the adverse party admits that the absent witness, if present, would testify to the matters set forth in the affidavits of movant. Orem v. Hansen Packing Co., 91 M 222, 7 P2d 546 (1932).

Admission by Defendant — Continuance Properly Denied: Where counsel for plaintiff asked for a continuance on the ground that plaintiff was unable to attend because of illness, and counsel for defendant agreed that he would admit that, if present, plaintiff would testify to the matters set forth in her affidavit, the continuance was properly denied. Ward v. Strowd, 76 M 93, 244 P 1007 (1926).

25-4-503. Postponement on other grounds.

Case Notes

Denial of Motion for Continuance Improper — Good Cause Established: The District Court erred by refusing to grant the husband's motion for a continuance in a dissolution proceeding when he experienced an unexpected medical emergency and was unable to attend the final pretrial conference. The husband's medical emergency and the conditions of his incarceration at the Montana State Prison were circumstances beyond his control, and his inability to appear at the dissolution proceedings resulted in prejudice. In re Marriage of Eslick, 2013 MT 53, 369 Mont. 187, 304 P.3d 372.

Failure of Attorney to Inform Trial Court of Potential Conflict — Motion to Postpone Trial Properly Denied: A dissolution and child custody case was set for trial and continued twice. Four days prior to the final trial date, respondent's attorney moved for a continuance because of a federal trial set for the same day. The motion was denied. Neither respondent nor respondent's attorney appeared at the scheduled trial. At trial, the court attempted to reach respondent's attorney, but could not. The court stated that the motion to continue was untimely because it was unlikely that the attorney did not have advance notice of the federal trial and could have informed the court of the potential scheduling conflict at an earlier date. Respondent failed to establish prejudice based on denial of the continuance motion, nor were any due process rights affected because respondent received notice of the trial 2 months in advance and the trial was held as scheduled. In re Marriage of Fishbaugh, 2002 MT 175, 310 M 519, 52 P3d 395 (2002).

No Error in Failure to Grant Continuance of Parental Rights Trial Absent Affidavits or Showing of Good Cause: The father contended that the District Court erred in failing to grant his motion for a continuance of the trial to terminate his parental rights because he had only 20 days to prepare for trial. Although true that only 20 days elapsed after the father received actual notice of the hearing, he was aware for more than 4 months of the state's intention to terminate his parental rights. The District Court noted that this was not a new case and that the father had plenty of time to get witnesses to the hearing. The hearing did not spring upon the father unexpectedly, and denial of his motion to continue was not erroneous. In re R.F., 2001 MT 199, 306 M 270, 32 P3d 1257 (2001).

Motion for Continuance Denied Although Illness Asserted: After granting motions to continue the pretrial conference and trial on several occasions based on illness and hospitalization of defendant, the trial court denied another motion for a 30-day continuance due to defendant's emphysema and hypertension. The Supreme Court affirmed after noting that defendant: (1) was present at trial; (2) testified extensively in his own behalf; (3) was not prevented from presenting his case because of his illness; and (4) had been granted several previous motions for continuance. In re Marriage of Mahaffey, 245 M 424, 801 P2d 1335, 47 St. Rep. 1172 (1990).

No Continuance for Failure to Obtain Counsel: Plaintiffs, who resided out of state, sought a continuance based on their alleged inability to obtain legal counsel. However, they had ample time to secure representation, and absent a showing of good cause, the District Court properly denied the motion for continuance. Fields v. Wells, 239 M 392, 780 P2d 1141, 46 St. Rep. 1775 (1989).

Denial of Postponement: When the noncustodial parent was notified of a District Court hearing in a child custody and support matter 6 weeks prior to the hearing, no due process rights were violated and the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to continue the hearing upon being notified 20 to 30 minutes before the hearing that neither the noncustodial parent nor an attorney representing him would be present. Notice was sufficient, and the hearing constituted an opportunity to be heard, even though he did not avail himself of the opportunity. In re Marriage of Robbins, 219 M 130, 711 P2d 1347, 42 St. Rep. 1897 (1985).

Failure of Petitioner to Appear — No Showing of Good Cause: Petitioner's motion for continuance was properly denied when she knew of the date and purpose of the trial, indicated no good reason for her voluntary absence, and made no showing of either absent material evidence or other grounds for continuance in the furtherance of justice. In re Custody of C.C., K.C., & B.C., 215 M 72, 695 P2d 816, 42 St. Rep. 190 (1985).

Unsubstantiated Contentions — Postponement Not Warranted: The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's denial of the husband's request for a continuance. No affidavit was presented showing the materiality of absent evidence and that due diligence had been used to procure it. The record did not disclose any other grounds warranting postponement under 25-4-503. The husband's contentions were unsubstantiated. In re Marriage of Concepcion, 212 M 191, 687 P2d 718, 41 St. Rep. 1675 (1984).

Failure of Attorney to Appear — Continuance Denied: A husband and wife and their respective attorneys had extended notice of the date of a property settlement hearing. However, without court approval for his absence, the husband's attorney failed to appear at the hearing. The husband made a motion for a continuance so that he might obtain another attorney to represent him. The District Court denied the motion and proceeded to ask many questions of the husband and wife, allowed the husband to cross-examine, and scrupulously protected the rights of the husband. Following the trial, the District Court waited several months to allow the husband and his attorney an opportunity to present additional evidence or file motions. Since the court found a complete absence of an abuse of discretion, the motion for continuance was properly denied. Bolich v. Bolich, 199 M 45, 647 P2d 844, 39 St. Rep. 1197 (1982).

Proceedings in Another Court — Generally: The question of whether proceedings in one court should be stayed pending decision on proceedings in another court should be determined upon the basis of the following considerations: (1) a court has inherent power to stay proceedings in control of its docket, after balancing the competing interests; (2) if there is even a fair possibility that a stay will work damage to someone else, the person seeking a stay must make out a clear case of hardship or inequity in being required to go forward; and (3) a litigant may be required to submit to a delay which is not immoderate in extent and not oppressive in its consequences if the public welfare or convenience will thereby be promoted, especially in cases of extraordinary public moment. Henry v. District Court, 198 M 8, 645 P2d 1350, 39 St. Rep. 430 (1982).

Proceedings in Another Court — Federal Preemption Questions: Railroad sued in railroad crossing accident case moved for a stay of state court proceedings, contending that there was a substantial risk that the state decision would conflict with a federal circuit court decision; that the issue was a federal question of congressional preemption of an interstate commerce matter and thus more appropriately decided by the federal courts; that the risk of conflicting decisions would create a dilemma for the railroad in operating its trains in Montana and other states; and that the interest of justice, judicial economy, and good court administration required a stay. The Supreme Court denied a stay because there was in fact no preemption question and thus no substantial risk of conflicting decisions; the railroad did not sufficiently show that a great hardship would befall it were a stay not granted; the railroad did not satisfy the court that the hardship on it would be less than that on plaintiff; and it was very doubtful that judicial economy would be adversely affected by refusing a stay. Henry v. District Court, 198 M 8, 645 P2d 1350, 39 St. Rep. 430 (1982).

Postponement for Mistake, Surprise, or Neglect: A continuance ought to be granted whenever the facts shown upon the application therefor would authorize the court, under the appropriate provisions of law, to relieve a party from a judgment, order, or other proceeding taken against him through his mistake, surprise, or excusable neglect. Westfall v. Motors Ins. Corp., 136 M 449, 348 P2d 784 (1960); Meredith v. Roman, 49 M 204, 141 P 643 (1914).

Discretion of Court Controlling: The power to grant or refuse a postponement on any ground is vested in the discretion of the court, and its exercise is not reviewable where no prejudice to the complaining party is shown. Downs v. Cassidy, 47 M 471, 133 P 106 (1913), followed in State ex rel. Clark v. Bailey, 99 M 484, 44 P2d 740 (1935). See also Tri-County Plumbing & Heating, Inc. v. Levee Restorations, Inc., 221 M 403, 720 P2d 247, 43 St. Rep. 928 (1986).

Chapter Case Notes

Standing of Person in Zoning District to Bring Action Against Developer of Condominiums in Same District: To establish standing to bring suit, a complaining party must clearly allege past, present, or threatened injury to a property right or a civil right that is distinguishable from an injury to the public generally. Thus, a property owner who lived in the same zoning district as a proposed condominium development and who would be directly affected by a subdivision review or the lack of a subdivision review had standing to challenge the development. Shults v. Liberty Cove, Inc., 2006 MT 247, 334 M 70, 146 P3d 710 (2006), following Fleenor v. Darby School District, 2006 MT 31, 331 M 124, 128 P3d 1048 (2006). Fleenor was overruled in Schoof v. Nesbit, 2014 MT 6, 373 Mont. 226, 316 P.3d 831, to the extent Fleenor requires a plaintiff in a right to know or right to participate case to allege an injury beyond failure to receive notice or to allege a personal stake in a particular governmental decision for purposes of establishing standing to pursue a claim.

No Standing to Recover Damages by Party Not Owner of Property — Fax Not Considered Valid Assignment of Damage Claim: Koelzer owned an inn by a mining and power generation site near Colstrip. Koelzer discovered that mining activity had damaged the inn and filed a complaint in 1994 against the mining and power generation companies, but did not pursue the damage claim. In 1996, Dale and Shawonda Lewis approached Koelzer about purchasing the inn, and the issue of the damages and Koelzer's claim came up. The Lewises inspected the inn and discovered additional damages, which led Koelzer to reassert the damage claim, but the claim was again unresolved. Nevertheless, the Lewises offered to buy the inn, and title was eventually conveyed to Dale's parents, who were able to secure financing. Koelzer notified the companies by fax that the inn had been sold and requested that the companies work with Dale on the structural damage discussed in the past. About 1 year later, Dale received an estimate of $91,000 to repair the damages and filed a complaint seeking compensation from the companies. Dale's parents eventually filed for bankruptcy, and the Lewises finally became the owners of record in 1998. When the companies discovered that the Lewises were not the owners of the inn at the time that the suit was filed, they moved for summary judgment, which was granted by the District Court on grounds that the Lewises had no standing to assert a claim for damages arising before they acquired title. On appeal, the Supreme Court cited the general rule that persons cannot recover for damages to property that they do not own. Further, even though property damage claims have long been recognized as assignable, the fax did not meet the statutory requirements of a valid assignment and was unenforceable. Thus, on the issue of prepurchase damages, no material question of fact existed regarding ownership or assignment, so the Lewises had no standing to bring a claim for damages prior to their ownership of the inn. Summary judgment was affirmed. Lewis v. Puget Sound Power & Light Co., 2001 MT 145, 306 M 37, 29 P3d 1028 (2001).

Chippewa-Cree Tribal Member Without Standing to Challenge Gas Tax — Incidence of Tax Upon Distributor: Carter, an enrolled member of the Chippewa-Cree Tribe, sold gasoline from a convenience store on the Rocky Boy's Reservation. Carter held a business license issued by the tribe and was not licensed by the state. She alleged that the gasoline tax was unconstitutionally applied to sales by tribal members inside the reservation because the tax is preempted by federal law. The District Court granted summary judgment, holding that Carter lacked standing. Citing Okla. Tax Comm'n v. Chickasaw Nation, 515 US 450, 132 L Ed 2d 400, 115 S Ct 2214 (1995), the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the incidence of the tax fell upon the distributor and not upon the retailer and that the distributor is not a member of the tribe. For this reason, Carter was not directly and adversely affected by the tax and had no standing to bring the action. Carter v. Dept. of Transportation, 274 M 39, 905 P2d 1102, 52 St. Rep. 1111 (1995), followed in Fleenor v. Darby School District, 2006 MT 31, 331 M 124, 128 P3d 1048 (2006). Fleenor was overruled in Schoof v. Nesbit, 2014 MT 6, 373 Mont. 226, 316 P.3d 831, to the extent Fleenor requires a plaintiff in a right to know or right to participate case to allege an injury beyond failure to receive notice or to allege a personal stake in a particular governmental decision for purposes of establishing standing to pursue a claim.

Claim Under 42 U.S.C. 1983 Not Barred by Res Judicata — Prior Summary Judgment No Bar to Consideration of Motion to Dismiss — Differing Parties: Plaintiff brought an action against the city of Great Falls to recover damages for violation of 42 U.S.C. 1983 in connection with a discharge from employment. The District Court granted the city's motion for summary judgment. Plaintiff then filed an action against her immediate supervisor, in the supervisor's official and individual capacity, making the same allegations. The supervisor moved the District Court to dismiss on the basis that the section 1983 claim was res judicata by reason of the summary judgment in the former action, and the District Court granted the motion. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that under former Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the District Court's consideration of the first action was limited to consideration of the pleadings. The Supreme Court also stated that because the immediate supervisor was not a party to the first action, neither the plaintiff nor the defendant was able to present all the facts and theories in the first case that are present in the second. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that the second action was not barred. Dagel v. Manzer, 251 M 176, 823 P2d 874, 48 St. Rep. 1166 (1991).

Parents Sued in Capacity of Guardians — Notice Insufficient to Establish Individual Liability: Defendants were sued in their capacity as guardians of their minor son for the expenses incurred in connection with the birth of an illegitimate child fathered by their son. A default judgment was rendered against defendants. The Supreme Court reversed and vacated the default judgment, holding that the guardians' duty to safeguard the rights of their son during the legal proceeding did not subject them to personal liability for their son's allegedly wrongful acts. The Supreme Court also held that because the title of the case, the allegations in the complaint, and all motions at trial addressed the defendants in their capacity as guardians, they had insufficient notice of any likelihood of personal liability. Breuer v. Poe, 245 M 22, 797 P2d 944, 47 St. Rep. 1812 (1990).

Determination of Public's Right to Use Dearborn River — Standing of Coalition of Citizens: In action for determination of the public's right to use the Dearborn River, whether the Montana Coalition for Stream Access, Inc., had standing to bring suit was immaterial because the Department of State Lands (functions now transferred to Department of Natural Resources and Conservation) and the Department of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks were also plaintiffs. Mont. Coalition for Stream Access, Inc. v. Curran, 210 M 38, 682 P2d 163, 41 St. Rep. 906 (1984).

Citizen Taxpayer — Standing: Plaintiff filed a complaint for declaratory judgment in the Supreme Court seeking to determine the validity of several acts of the Legislature allowing the issuance of state revenue bonds. Plaintiff, in his complaint, alleged that he was a citizen, resident, elector, and taxpayer. Prior cases held that in order to establish standing to sue a governmental entity: (1) the issue for review must represent a case or controversy; (2) the complaining party must allege past, present, or threatened injury to a property or civil rights; and (3) the alleged injury must be distinguishable from injury to the public generally, but need not be exclusive to the complaining party. The Supreme Court added a further exception. The court stated that it would recognize the standing of a taxpayer, without more, to question the constitutional validity of a tax or use of tax money where the issue or issues presented directly affect the constitutional validity of the state or its political subdivisions acting to collect the tax, issue bonds, or use the proceeds thereof. The court said it would accept original jurisdiction of such suits when special circumstances, presenting issues of urgent or emergency nature, exist requiring speedy determination. Grossman v. St., 209 M 427, 682 P2d 1319, 41 St. Rep. 804 (1984), followed in Montanans for the Coal Trust v. St., 2000 MT 13, 298 M 69, 996 P2d 856, 57 St. Rep. 73 (2000).

Cross-Jurisdictional Tolling Rule Adopted — No Error in Denial of Motion for Summary Judgment: A jury awarded Stevens $3.2 million in compensatory damages for injuries caused by the drug Zometa, which is manufactured by Novartis Pharmaceuticals Corporation. Novartis argued the District Court erred in denying Norvartis' motion for summary judgment. Novartis argued Stevens' claim was time-barred because even though Stevens knew Novartis manufactured Zometa, she did not name Novartis as a defendant until 3 years and 10 months after the statute of limitations began to run. Stevens argued that Novartis was properly served because fictitious defendants were named or, in the alternative, because the statute of limitations was tolled by a class action suit filed in federal court in Tennessee, even though class certification was ultimately denied. The Supreme Court affirmed. The basis of the claim in Montana and of the class action suit in Tennessee was Novartis' alleged failure to warn of the effects of the Zometa. Novartis received sufficient notice of the nature of the claim in Montana, and although the claims were not identical, the filing of the class action suit in Tennessee tolled the statute of limitations for the filing of the amended complaint in Montana. Stevens v. Novartis Pharmaceuticals Corp., 2010 MT 282, 358 Mont. 474, 247 P.3d 244.

Applicability of Fictitious Name Statute and Misnomer Rule to Similarly Named Defendants — Relation Back of Amended Complaint: Molina was injured on a construction site, and filed a complaint against Panco, Inc., a Washington corporation that he believed to be the general contractor, for failing to supervise the job site and to provide a safe place to work. Molina also named fictitious defendants John Does I-III in the complaint. After the complaint was served but before Panco, Inc., filed a responsive pleading, Molina learned that there were two different corporations in Washington with similar names, so he filed an amended complaint naming the true contractor, Panco Construction, Inc., and retaining the additional fictitious defendants. Panco Construction, Inc., then filed its answer and moved for summary judgment, listing as an affirmative defense that the action was barred by the statute of limitations because the amended complaint was filed 3 months and 3 days after the limitation for negligence claims in 27-2-204. Molina asserted that the statute of limitations did not apply because under this section, a fictitiously named defendant is party to the action from its commencement so the statute of limitations stops running as to the fictitious party on the date that the original complaint is filed. Molina also contended that under former Rule 15(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), an amended complaint relates back to the date of the original complaint when the amended complaint revolves around the same operative facts as the original complaint. Molina then moved to amend the complaint, asking that the District Court rule that the amended complaint sufficed to substitute Panco Construction, Inc., for John Doe I or, alternatively, that Molina be allowed to file a second amended complaint substituting Panco Construction, Inc., for John Doe I. Molina then moved to dismiss Panco, Inc., as a defendant. The District Court subsequently granted the motion of Panco Construction, Inc., for summary judgment without ruling on Molina's motion to amend the complaint. Molina appealed, contending that Panco Construction, Inc., was not a new party to the action, but rather a presently identified, formerly fictitiously named defendant that should be considered a party from the filing of the original complaint. Panco Construction, Inc., argued that: (1) Molina had attempted to entirely replace a mistakenly named defendant with a correctly named defendant without meeting the notice requirements of former Rule 15(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded); (2) it was not a fictitiously named defendant under this section because due diligence on Molina's part would have revealed the true identity of the defendant; and (3) Molina was precluded from arguing the applicability of former Rule 4E(2), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), on appeal because the issue was never raised in District Court. The Supreme Court reversed based on the District Court's incorrect assumption that it orally granted Molina's motion to file an amended complaint and on its failure to rule on the motion to amend the complaint. The case was remanded for consideration of the motion to amend the complaint in conjunction with former Rule 4E(2), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and of the effect that that rule may or may not have on this section, the fictitious name statute, and former Rule 15(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the misnomer rule. Molina v. Panco Constr. Inc., 2002 MT 136, 310 M 185, 49 P3d 570 (2002). On remand, the District Court concluded that Molina was not ignorant of defendant's name because, even though Molina was misinformed by the Washington Secretary of State, he nevertheless knew defendant's true corporate name, so summary judgment was granted to defendant. On appeal, the Supreme Court disagreed and remanded again. Under a liberal interpretation of this section, Molina was allowed to substitute defendant's real name for one of the John Doe defendants in the original complaint because he had no reason to believe that the wrong name had been supplied by the Washington Secretary of State, and even though he knew that the identity of the defendant whom he sought to name from the outset was the general contractor of the job on which he was injured, he relied on the incorrect information and thus was ignorant of the contractor's true legal name at the time that the complaint was filed. Molina v. Panco Constr., Inc., 2004 MT 198, 322 M 268, 95 P3d 687 (2004).

Wrong Defendant Sued — No Substitution: This section does not allow substitution of the proper defendant after discovery that the wrong defendant was named and the Statute of Limitations has run. Keller v. Stembridge Gun Rentals, 221 M 352, 719 P2d 764, 43 St. Rep. 886 (1986), citing LaForest v. Texaco, Inc., 179 M 42, 585 P2d 1318 (1978).

Relation Back of Amendment to Substitute True Name: When a complaint sets forth a cause of action against a defendant designated by a fictitious name under 25-5-103 and his true name is thereafter discovered and substituted by amendment, the fictitiously named defendant is considered a party to the action from its commencement, so that the Statute of Limitations stops running as to the fictitiously named defendant on the date the original complaint is filed. Sooy v. Petrolane Steel Gas, Inc., 218 M 418, 708 P2d 1014, 42 St. Rep. 1702 (1985).

Notice Required to Toll Statute of Limitations Against Fictitious Name Defendant: A plaintiff may utilize the fictitious name statute and may amend a complaint to substitute the true name of the defendant when discovered. If the amendment occurs after the Statute of Limitations has run, however, the real or intended defendant must have either been served or otherwise received notice of the institution of the action under the conditions for relation back provided in former Rule 15(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). It is fundamental that the purpose of the Statute of Limitations is to provide a cutoff point for stale claims. Former Rule 15(c) carries out this policy by requiring notice of the action within the time limitations of the Statute of Limitations before an amendment adding new parties will relate back to the date of the original pleading. Vincent v. Edwards, 184 M 92, 601 P2d 1184 (1979), reversed in Sooy v. Petrolane Steel Gas, Inc., 218 M 418, 708 P2d 1014, 42 St. Rep. 1702 (1985).

Federal Diversity Jurisdiction in "John Doe" Complaint: In action against foreign corporation and its resident employee, who was joined as "John Doe" but was not served with process and did not appear, for injuries sustained by customer who tripped over orange crate in aisle of corporation's store, the test for removal of cause to federal court on diversity of citizenship was whether the employee had any real connection with the controversy. Defendant's designation as "John Doe" is permitted under this section, and the complaint states a joint cause of action of tort. Contention that there is a separable controversy and a fraudulent joinder of the defendant designated as "John Doe" within the meaning of the law, is not well grounded. Jensen v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 24 F. Supp. 585 (D.C. Mont. 1938).

Amendment of Complaint: If plaintiff was ignorant of defendant's true name when the action was commenced, he knew of it after the answer was filed, and should have amended his complaint under the terms of this section. Clark v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 29 M 317, 74 P 734 (1903). See also Ramsey v. Cortland Cattle Co., 6 M 498, 13 P 247 (1887).

Case Notes

Service Upon Limited Liability Company Not Constituting Service Upon Individual Company Members — No Joinder of Member Solely for Executing on Judgment Against Company: Plaintiff obtained a judgment against a limited liability company, but when plaintiff discovered that the company had no assets to levy against, plaintiff moved to levy judgment against defendant personally. The motion was dismissed without prejudice, and plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Although defendant knew of the lawsuit involving the company, defendant was not separately served, and service upon the company did not constitute service upon the individual members of the company. Further, the District Court did not err in refusing to join defendant after judgment was rendered solely for the purpose of executing judgment because doing so would have deprived defendant of the due process right to notice and the opportunity to be heard. Ioerger v. Reiner, 2005 MT 155, 327 M 424, 114 P3d 1028 (2005), following S-W Co. v. Schwenk, 173 M 481, 568 P2d 145 (1977), Hadford v. Credit Bureau of Havre, Inc., 1998 MT 179, 289 M 529, 962 P2d 1198 (1998), Mtn. W. Bank v. Mine & Mill Hydraulics, Inc., 2003 MT

35, 314 M 248, 64 P3d 1048 (2003), and Baltrusch v. Baltrusch, 2003 MT 357, 319 M 23, 83 P3d 256 (2003).

Unincorporated Association Considered Person Subject to Suit: MacPheat filed a libel complaint against Schauf and the insurance company association to which Schauf belonged, claiming that Schauf wrote a libelous letter on the association letterhead to the judge who was presiding over one of MacPheat's criminal proceedings. The association moved to be removed from the action, asserting that it was simply a federally registered service mark and not a person or legal entity subject to service of process. The District Court agreed and dismissed the association from the suit. MacPheat appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. The association made the same service mark argument in Oliver v. Farmers Ins. Group of Cos., 941 P2d 985 (Okla. 1997). In that case, the Oklahoma Supreme Court acknowledged that under traditional common law, a voluntary, unincorporated association could not be sued under its name because it did not have a legal status apart from that of its individual members, but that because of the unjustness of the rule in present day society, the rule has been modified in many jurisdictions. The Oklahoma court dismissed the service mark argument, because whatever else the association did, it clearly had a name under which a number of companies insured against risks for profit. The Montana Supreme Court found that reasoning persuasive. An unincorporated association was defined in Assoc. Press v. Mont. Senate Republican Caucus, 286 M 172, 951 P2d 65 (1997), as a voluntary group of persons, without a charter, formed by mutual consent for the purpose of promoting a common enterprise or prosecuting a common objective. The association in this case was thus considered a person within the definition in former Rule 4A, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and to conclude otherwise and sanction the association's intangible classification would unnecessarily restrict those who can be sued in Montana courts and fly in the face of Montana's constitutional open courts provision. The association name was one under which its affiliates transacted business, so MacPheat could properly serve and bring suit against the association under this section without naming and serving process on the members individually. However, once the association was brought before the court, MacPheat still had the burden of establishing the liability of the association's members, if any, under the applicable substantive law. MacPheat v. Schauf, 2002 MT 23, 308 M 215, 41 P3d 895 (2002).

Section Inapplicable to Sole Proprietorships: This section does not provide authority for the levy and execution against an individual's personal assets to recover on a default judgment against that person's sole proprietorship. Jerry Martin & Associates, Inc. v. Don's Westland Bulk, 267 M 464, 884 P2d 795, 51 St. Rep. 1119 (1994).

Partnerships — Capacity to Sue in Own Name: On certification from the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, the Montana Supreme Court held that a joint venture between two out-of-state corporations had the capacity to bring suit as a plaintiff against a corporation under Montana law. Relying on the Uniform Partnership Act and Montana statutes that allow a partnership to be sued in its own name and to sue in Small Claims Court, the Supreme Court found clear legislative intent to treat partnerships as distinct entities with the power to sue. Decker Coal Co. v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 220 M 251, 714 P2d 155, 43 St. Rep. 337 (1986).

Service on Foreign Associations: Service of notice of a hearing for perpetuation of testimony in action against voluntary association with headquarters in another state, was sufficient on its local district secretary under section 93-3007, R.C.M. 1947 (repealed 1961), and service on one or more associates under this section was not required. State ex rel. Cook v. District Court, 102 M 424, 58 P2d 273 (1936).

Service on Partnership: This section applied to a partnership. Lindsay Great Falls Co. v. McKinney Motor Co., 79 M 136, 255 P 25 (1927); Gardiner v. Eclipse Grocery Co., 72 M 540, 234 P 490 (1925).

President of Association Not to Be Sued: A voluntary association of laborers may be sued in its common name, but in the absence of a statute authorizing it, it cannot be sued in the name of its president. Vance v. McGinley, 39 M 46, 101 P 247 (1909).

Section Not Applicable to Associated Plaintiffs: This section having no application to parties plaintiff does not authorize an action to be brought in a copartnership or firm name. Doll v. Hennessy Mercantile Co., 33 M 80, 81 P 625 (1905).

Capacity to Be a Party — Joinder

25-5-201. Capacity of married person to be a party.

Case Notes

Interspousal Tort Immunity Abolished: The defense of interspousal tort immunity is abolished, overruling previous decisions to the contrary. The historical reasons for retention of immunity, i.e., unity of husband and wife as one person, family harmony, and the possibility of fraud and collusion, are no longer valid. Miller v. Fallon County, 222 M 214, 721 P2d 342, 43 St. Rep. 1185 (1986).

Action Against Husband: The common-law doctrine under which one spouse may not sue the other for a personal tort is in force in Montana, and therefore, the complaint of a wife against her husband for damages resultant from personal injuries sustained by reason of the alleged negligence of defendant's chauffeur while plaintiff was riding in defendant's car, was vulnerable to a demurrer (demurrer abolished by M.R.Civ.P.). Conley v. Conley, 92 M 425, 15 P2d 922 (1932), overruled in Miller v. Fallon County, 222 M 214, 721 P2d 342, 43 St. Rep. 1185 (1986).

Divorce Pending — Employment of Counsel by Wife: Under this section a wife, pending suit for divorce brought by her, had authority to employ counsel on behalf of her husband, in a suit for partition against both of them in which he had failed to appear. "Writ of Possession" Defined: The Writ of Possession is the execution process employed to recover what the judgment says the plaintiff shall have, and its issuance is governed by the general statutes on execution. It may issue at any time within 6 years after entry of the judgment under 25-13-101. It is issued by the clerk of the court as provided by 25-13-301(1). After lapse of 6 years from the entry of the judgment, it may issue by leave of court upon motion under 25-13-102 (now repealed). Dodd v. Simon, 113 M 536, 129 P2d 224 (1942).

Action to Quiet Title — Plaintiff Entitled to Writ of Possession: While a judgment in favor of plaintiff, out of possession, in an action to quiet title, need not direct the issuance of a Writ of Possession, he may have such a Writ whether the judgment so provides or not; therefore defendant may not complain of the inclusion of an order in the judgment directing its issuance. Doggett v. Johnson, 82 M 338, 267 P 292 (1928).

Joinder of Ejectment and Equitable Action: If a third party is in possession, the defendant claiming adversely may be joined as defendant with the party in possession. In that case the appropriate action would assume the aspect of an action at law in ejectment, which might, under some circumstances, be joined with a count for equitable relief. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co. v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 27 M 288, 70 P 1114 (1902).

Case Notes

Appointment of Guardian Ad Litem for Minor's Claims Against Father Upheld — Best Interests of Children to Include Insurance Claims: The father of three minor children was involved in a motor vehicle accident that killed the mother. The father was charged with vehicular homicide while under the influence; however, the charge was eventually dismissed. The father owned a motor vehicle insurance policy, which proposed to pay the policy limits of $300,000 to the children. During this process, an attorney appointed to represent the minor children with respect to the insurance settlement indicated that the children may have additional claims against the father's business insurance policy. Ultimately, over the father's objection, the District Court appointed a guardian ad litem for the children and an attorney to pursue any legal claims in the best interests of the children. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the appointment for the purpose of pursuing insurance claims was appropriate and that it was in the best interests of the children despite being against the father's business insurance policy. In re Conservatorship of J.S., 2015 MT 335, 381 Mont. 462, 362 P.3d 76.

Rescission of Guardian Ad Litem's Appointment — No Effect on Jurisdiction: In an action initiated by a guardian ad litem on behalf of an alleged incompetent person, the District Court did not lack jurisdiction to dismiss the complaint after rescission of the guardian's appointment. Neither former Rule 17(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), nor 25-5-301 provides that a guardian ad litem is a party to a lawsuit; rather, the court held that the guardian ad litem appears in a representative capacity only, and hence his removal has no effect on District Court jurisdiction. State ex rel. Perman v. District Court, 213 M 130, 690 P2d 419, 41 St. Rep. 2002 (1984).

Application for Appointment of Guardian: A guardian ad litem is appointed upon the application of a friend or relative, or of a party to the action. In all cases where the incompetent is plaintiff, the application should be made by a relative or friend. State ex rel. Happel v. District Court, 38 M 166, 99 P 291 (1909).

Part 1
Issues — Mode of Trial

25-7-101. Issue defined, types of issues.

Case Notes

Finding of Fact Based on Issue Raised by Counterclaim: The District Court properly made a finding of fact regarding an issue raised by defendant's counterclaim even though plaintiff contended that there was an agreement that the trial would be conducted in two phases and that the issue in question would be the subject of the second phase. The plaintiff's actions during the course of the trial demonstrated she was fully aware that the court would be resolving the issue. Kis v. Pifer, 179 M 344, 588 P2d 514 (1978).

Affidavits Defining Issues: In action by property owners to enjoin construction and operation of stock car race track as a nuisance, where defendant filed affidavit to set aside temporary injunction granted without notice and demurrer to complaint, trial court improperly ordered permanent injunction, as the cause was not at issue and not ready for trial. State ex rel. Thompson v. District Court, 132 M 53, 313 P2d 1034 (1957), distinguished in Guardian Life Ins. v. Bd. of Equalization, 134 M 526, 335 P2d 310 (1959).

Admissions in Pleadings: Where defendants admit in the cross-complaint that $285 was paid on the sheep at the time the contract was entered into, the payment of that amount by the plaintiff to the defendants is not in issue. However, the right of the plaintiff to recover the $285 is in issue. Gilmore v. Mulvihill, 109 M 601, 98 P2d 335 (1940).

New Trial of Facts: The issue of fact mentioned in 25-11-101, defining a new trial, is that defined by this section as arising upon the pleadings. Beach v. Spokane Ranch & Water Co., 21 M 7, 52 P 560 (1897).

General 216
Admissibility of Evidence 217

GENERAL

Misinterpretation of Testimony Regarding Alleged Relinquishment of Claim — Reversible Error: Kane sued Morgan to recover the costs of two wells that Kane drilled on Morgan's property for which payment was not made. At one point in his testimony, Kane stated that he charged Morgan for the first 150 feet of drilling, but gave Morgan the rest of the 400-foot hole, and then said, "Yeah, I give it to him. I think I'd give it all to him." The District Court interpreted the statement as a relinquishment by Kane for payment of the entire well and compensated Kane only for the cost of the other well. Kane appealed. The Supreme Court applied the test in In re Marriage of Kotecki, 2000 MT 254, 301 M 460, 10 P3d 828 (2000), to determine if the finding was clearly erroneous: (1) whether the finding was supported by substantial evidence in the record; (2) whether the trial court misapprehended the effect of the evidence; and (3) if the first two factors are met, the Supreme Court is still left with a definite and firm conviction that a mistake was made. In this case, it was held that the District Court committed a mistake and misinterpreted Kane's testimony, so the Supreme Court reversed. Neither party interpreted the remark as a gift by Kane of the entire well. The comment was not followed up by either party during direct or cross-examination. Counsel for Morgan continued questioning both Kane and other witnesses as if Kane had not relinquished his claim, nor did Morgan assert relinquishment in the proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law. Kane v. Morgan, 2001 MT 182, 306 M 207, 32 P3d 747 (2001).

Sale of Automobile Franchise — Error in Failure to Resolve Mootness as Threshold Issue Before Underlying Dispute Addressed: Ford Motor Company (Ford) notified franchisee Shamrock Motors (Shamrock) that it intended to terminate Shamrock's automobile dealer franchise because Shamrock had sold 80% of its stock without Ford's knowledge or consent, which violated their franchise agreement. The Motor Vehicle Division of the Department of Justice issued a ruling that Ford had good cause, so Shamrock filed for judicial review in the District Court. Ford then removed to federal court, where the ruling was reversed, so Ford appealed to the Ninth Circuit Court. Shamrock then sold the dealership, and the decision was vacated because of lack of jurisdiction. The case was remanded to state court, where Ford moved to dismiss for mootness. The District Court denied the motion without discussion and ruled for Shamrock, concluding that the franchise could not be terminated as a result of the sale of 80% of the franchise stock. Reversing on appeal, the Supreme Court cited Adkins v. Livingston, 121 M 528, 194 P2d 238 (1948), in holding that mootness is a threshold issue that must be dealt with before the underlying dispute may be addressed. A matter is moot when, because of an event or happening, the issue has ceased to exist and no longer presents an actual controversy. A question is moot when a court cannot grant effective relief. If the parties cannot be restored to their original position, an appeal becomes moot. When Shamrock chose to sell the franchise during the appellate process, the question of whether Ford had good cause to terminate the franchise in the first instance became academic and thus moot. The District Court erred when it did not resolve the issue of mootness before addressing the merits of the claim, not recognizing that once Shamrock sold the dealership and was no longer the franchisee, there was no effective relief that the court could fashion under Title 61, ch. 4, part 2, so the appeal from the Motor Vehicle Division's ruling should have been dismissed as moot. Shamrock Motors, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 1999 MT 21, 293 M 188, 974 P2d 1150, 56 St. Rep. 99 (1999), followed in Shamrock Motors, Inc. v. Chrysler Corp., 1999 MT 39, 293 M 317, 974 P2d 1154, 56 St. Rep. 164 (1999).

Constitution "Other Writing" — Compelling State Interest Analysis — Application of Strict Scrutiny Test — Questions of Law — Harmless Error: In a suit for wrongful discharge from employment, it was harmless error for the District Court to submit to the jury the question of whether the right plaintiff asserted was a constitutionally protected right and, if constitutionally protected, whether it was a fundamental right and, if it was a fundamental right, whether the state provided a compelling interest for infringing upon it. Wadsworth v. St., 275 M 287, 911 P2d 1165, 53 St. Rep. 146 (1996), distinguished in Hafner v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 280 M 95, 929 P2d 233, 53 St. Rep. 1315 (1996).

Attorney as Expert Witness — Not to Advise Jury as to Law of Case: Insurance company argued that the District Court's instructions implying that company's position was frivolous as a matter of law were reinforced by detailed attorney opinion testimony on the law applicable to insurance coverage, in violation of 25-7-102 and Rule 704, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). The Supreme Court, citing Energy Oils, Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 626 F2d 731 (9th Cir. 1980), adopted the finding that admission of opinion testimony as to the legal effect of a contract is erroneous, but in view of the District Court holding that there was insurance coverage as a matter of law, the Supreme Court concluded that counsel's testimony regarding the law of the case did not constitute reversible error under the unique facts of this case. The court found no abuse of discretion in allowing attorneys who appear as expert witnesses to state their opinion on an insurer's duty to evaluate the facts, on what constitutes a reasonable evaluation of the facts, or on how an insurer should have approached the negotiations with the plaintiff; however, as a general rule an attorney cannot advise the jury as to the law of the case. Safeco Ins. Co. v. Ellinghouse, 223 M 239, 725 P2d 217, 43 St. Rep. 1689 (1986), followed in Hart-Anderson v. Hauck, 44 St. Rep. 508 (1987) (opinion reversed and replaced by 230 M 63, 748 P2d 937, 45 St. Rep. 18 (1988)).

Standards for Admissibility of Sound-Recorded Evidence: In order for sound recordings to be admissible into evidence there must be showing of (1) the capability of the recording device; (2) the competency of the operator; (3) the authenticity of the recording; (4) the fact that no changes or deletions have been made; (5) the manner of the preservation of the recording; and (6) the identification of the speakers. St. v. Smith, 164 M 334, 523 P2d 1395 (1974).

Interpretation of Lease as Issue of Law: Interpretation of lease of building was matter for court in dispute between lessor and lessee. Solich v. Hale, 150 M 358, 435 P2d 883 (1967).

Doing Business Within State — Issue of Law: The determination whether an out-of-state publisher who advertised Montana land for sale was doing business in Montana within the purview of section 15-1701, R.C.M. 1947 (repealed 1968), or was carrying on the business of a real estate broker were questions of law under this section. Union Interchange, Inc. v. Parker, 138 M 348, 357 P2d 339 (1960), explained in Minnehoma Fin. Co. v. Van Oosten, 198 F. Supp. 200 (D.C. Mont. 1961).

Judicial Notice of Intoxicating Liquors: Where the court took judicial notice that vodka was an intoxicating liquor, the court was correct in instructing the jury that the drink known as "vodka squirt" and "vodka collins" are intoxicating liquors. St. v. Wild, 130 M 476, 305 P2d 325 (1956).

Judicial Notice — Notice by Jury: The jury as part of the court may take notice of the general geography of Montana and of the boundaries and limits of the various political subdivisions of the state. St. v. Williams, 122 M 279, 202 P2d 245 (1949).

Application to Workers' Compensation — Issue of Due Care: Under section 92-613, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), a question as to exercise of due care with respect to an employee covered by hospital contract is made a question of law for the court. In action against the hospital, the question of due care was submitted to the jury over objection of the defendant, although the objection did not point out the statute itself. The objections were sufficient and the issue of law was not referred to the jury by consent, so it should have been decided by the trial court under this section. Sample v. Murray Hosp., 103 M 195, 62 P2d 241 (1936).

Undisputed Facts — Issues of Law Only: Where the evidence in an action to recover the possession of jewelry claimed as a gift causa mortis was undisputed, as to the fact that such a gift had been made, the case presented in effect one on an agreed statement of facts, the question for decision became one of law for the court, and it was therefore prejudicial error to submit it to the jury. Davidson v. Stagg, 94 M 272, 22 P2d 152 (1933).

ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE

Attorney as Witness — Testimony as to His Legal Opinions on Legal Issues: Defendant claimed on appeal that plaintiffs' former attorney testified as to ultimate legal issues in the case and his legal opinion on the law involved. In view of defendant's limited trial objection that the offer of an opinion may improperly invade the province of the jury in determining the facts in the case and in view of no objection that the attorney was testifying as to legal opinions, the court refused to find error in allowing the testimony. Baird v. Norwest Bank, 255 M 317, 843 P2d 327, 49 St. Rep. 1026 (1992).

Plaintiff's Counsel and Witnesses — Reference During Trial to Defendants' Legal Duty: The trial court granted the defendants' motion to prohibit the plaintiff, witnesses, or counsel from referring to or indicating to the jury that the defendant owed a duty other than not to intentionally inflict emotional distress on the plaintiff. The court further ruled that neither party could refer to a duty of the defendant, of whatever scope or nature, until closing arguments, after the jury instructions had been read to the jury. The Supreme Court held that the order was overbroad. Under 25-7-301, either counsel may briefly state his case and the evidence he expects to introduce to support it, and may refer in opening statements to evidence to be adduced, if those statements are made in good faith and with reasonable grounds to believe the evidence is admissible. State ex rel. Fitzgerald v. District Court, 217 M 106, 703 P2d 148, 42 St. Rep. 1061 (1985).

Dying Declaration — Decision by Court: The question whether a dying declaration is admissible is one for the court's decision after hearing preliminary proof concerning the condition of the declarant and the circumstances surrounding the making of the statement, whereupon, if admitted, the question of its sufficiency and the weight to be given it is for the jury's determination; hence refusal to submit instructions stating the rule governing the admission of such declarations was not error. St. v. Vettere, 76 M 574, 248 P 179 (1926).

Capacity — Determination by Court: The orthodox division of function between judge and jury allots, without question, to the judge the determination of all matters of fact on which the admissibility of evidence depends, and therefore of the facts of a witness' capacity to testify. St. v. Newman, 66 M 180, 213 P 805 (1923).

Admissibility of Confession — Determination by Court: The question of admissibility of a confession, alleged to have been made by defendant while in custody, is to be determined by the court after hearing evidence, in the presence of the jury, relative to the circumstances under which it was made, and its finding thereon will not be disturbed on appeal, unless clearly against the weight of the evidence. St. v. Berberick, 38 M 423, 100 P 209 (1909).

Error to Submit Admissibility to Jury: It is error to submit the question of the admissibility of an admission to the jury, and testimony relative thereto taken before the court sitting without the jury will not be examined on appeal. St. v. Sherman, 35 M 512, 90 P 981 (1907), overruling St. v. Tighe, 27 M 327, 71 P 3 (1903). See also Territory v. McClin, 1 M 394 (1871); Territory v. Underwood, 8 M 131, 19 P 398 (1887).

25-7-103. When issues of fact to be decided by jury.

Case Notes

Questions of Fact to Be Decided by Jury: With limited exceptions, this section provides that all questions of fact are to be decided by the jury. St. v. Ford, 278 M 353, 926 P2d 245, 53 St. Rep. 947 (1996).

Whether Question of Fact Exists Not Question of Fact — No Right to Jury Trial Absent Evidence of Fact Question: Defendants asserted error in the District Court's denial of their request for a trial by jury, claiming that their affirmative defense constituted a breach of contract claim. However, before there was an entitlement to a jury trial, there had to be issues of fact for a jury to decide. Whether or not there is sufficient evidence to raise an issue of fact is a question of law for the court and not an issue of fact. The right of jury trial on any issue of fact presented by the pleadings is provisional, and if the evidence fails to form an issue of fact, the right of jury trial disappears. The Supreme Court cited numerous cases in holding that when, as in this case, insufficient evidence is presented to have the issue raised by an affirmative defense submitted to a jury, denial of a request for a jury trial is not prejudicial. Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Snider, 247 M 508, 808 P2d 475, 48 St. Rep. 285 (1991).

Jury Finding Walkway Unsafe: The defendant appealed a jury verdict on the basis that there was insufficient evidence to support the findings. The Supreme Court noted that while there was conflicting evidence, it was in the province of the jury to determine the credibility and weight to be given evidence. The jury did not err in reaching its decision. Davis v. Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, 244 M 61, 796 P2d 181, 47 St. Rep. 1302 (1990), overruled, as to the distinction between liability based upon natural versus altered accumulations of ice or snow that are open and obvious, in Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748, 54 St. Rep. 1422 (1997). The Richardson standard was retroactively applied in Benson v. Heritage Inn, Inc., 1998 MT 330, 292 M 268, 971 P2d 1227, 55 St. Rep. 1341 (1998).

Substantial Evidence Supporting Personal Injury Award: Plaintiff, who turned down a $20,000 settlement offer and recovered only $7,800 from the jury, moved for a new trial on the basis that the verdict was contrary to the evidence presented at trial. The lower court's finding that substantial evidence existed to support the award (thereby exhausting its discretion to grant a new trial) was affirmed on appeal. Feller v. Fox, 237 M 150, 772 P2d 842, 46 St. Rep. 694 (1989).

Aggravating Circumstances Related to Sentencing — Jury Determination Not Required: Defendant argued that the aggravating circumstances with which the trial court justified the death penalty were equivalent to a finding of malice and that he was therefore entitled to have a jury determine facts constituting the aggravating circumstances. The Supreme Court held that defendant was not entitled to a jury determination because the aggravating circumstances were related to sentencing only and were not elements of the crime charged. Capital sentencing procedures do not require jury participation. St. v. Dawson, 233 M 345, 761 P2d 352, 45 St. Rep. 1542 (1988).

Special Verdict Form Disregarding Conflict of Evidence — Fatally Deficient: A special verdict form that presented the issue of breach of contract in terms that adopted defendants' view of substantial disputed facts rather than leaving the factual determination of the nature of the agreement to the jury was found fatally inadequate and was subject to remand and a new trial. NW. Nat'l Bank of Great Falls v. Weaver-Maxwell, Inc., 224 M 33, 729 P2d 1258, 43 St. Rep. 1995 (1986).

Evidence — When Sufficient to Support Verdict: Plaintiff appealed from jury verdict in favor of defendant, alleging the evidence did not support the verdict. The Supreme Court held that in order to overturn the verdict on the basis of insufficient evidence, it must find plaintiff entitled to judgment as a matter of law, and that there was insufficient evidence to warrant submitting the case to a jury. Here the court found credible evidence supporting a verdict either way and considered itself without power to set aside the decision of the trier of fact as a matter of law. The District Court properly denied plaintiff's motions for directed verdict and judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Gunlock v. W. Equip. Co., 219 M 112, 710 P2d 714, 42 St. Rep. 1882 (1985), followed in Weinberg v. Farmers St. Bank of Worden, 231 M 10, 752 P2d 719, 45 St. Rep. 391 (1988).

Conflicting Evidence Resolved by Jury — Substantial Evidence to Support Verdict: Where the plaintiff brought a negligence action against the defendant for injuries sustained at an outdoor beer party when the defendant allegedly tossed a large rock that struck the plaintiff on the head, the Supreme Court found that there was substantial evidence to support the jury's verdict for the defendant. The evidence was equally supportive of the defendant's theory (that the plaintiff tripped and fell) as it was of the plaintiff's theory. The court held that if there is conflicting evidence in the record, the credibility and weight given to that evidence is the province of the jury and not the Supreme Court. Anderson v. Jacqueth, 205 M 493, 668 P2d 1063, 40 St. Rep. 1451 (1983). See also Wheeler v. Bozeman, 232 M 433, 757 P2d 345, 45 St. Rep. 1173 (1988).

Probable Cause in Malicious Prosecution Action: Lack of probable cause, an essential element of a malicious prosecution action, is a fact question for the jury's determination when the evidence is conflicting and is a question of law for the court only when the evidence is undisputed and allows only one conclusion on the issue; and a directed verdict is error when the evidence, including reasonable inferences, is susceptible to different conclusions by reasonable men when viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the directed verdict. Reece v. Pierce Flooring, 194 M 91, 634 P2d 640, 38 St. Rep. 1655 (1981).

Proof of Crimes Charged — Proof of Ownership of Stolen Money — Disbelief of Portion of Witness' Testimony as Not Requiring Total Disbelief: Defendant, charged with robbery and theft, was convicted of theft but found not guilty of robbery. One ground of his appeal was the assertion that the prosecution's evidence was insufficient to prove theft. Defense counsel argued that the jury must have distrusted the testimony of the truckstop cashier who was held up because they found the defendant not guilty of robbery. Further, since the cashier's testimony was critical to prove a theft was committed, the evidence was insufficient to prove theft if the jury disbelieved the cashier. The Supreme Court dismissed this argument because sufficient disbelief of the cashier's testimony to find the defendant not guilty of robbery would not require the jury to disbelieve all of the cashier's testimony. The jury had received instructions about its right to believe or disbelieve any portion of a witness' testimony. As long as there was substantial evidence to support the verdict, it will not be disturbed on appeal. The Supreme Court found sufficient evidence to convict and sufficient evidence to refute the defendant's argument that the truckstop did not own the stolen money. Here, proof of possession sufficed to prove ownership because the defendant's jury instruction to that effect was accepted by the court. St. v. Dolan, 190 M 195, 620 P2d 355, 37 St. Rep. 1860 (1980).

Evidence Sufficient to Support Verdict — Jury to Weigh Evidence — Presumption of Correctness: In judging whether there is evidence sufficient to support a verdict, the Supreme Court recognizes that the jury is in the best position to weigh the evidence and consider the credibility of witnesses. Thus in examining the sufficiency of the evidence review will be made in a light most favorable to the prevailing party, presuming that the findings of the District Court are correct. Rock Springs Corp. v. Pierre, 189 M 137, 615 P2d 206 (1980).

Evidence Susceptible to Two Conclusions — Jury Upheld: The Supreme Court does not substitute its view of the evidence for that of the jury; thus when the evidence furnishes reasonable grounds for different conclusions, the finding of the jury will not be disturbed. Rock Springs Corp. v. Pierre, 189 M 137, 615 P2d 206 (1980).

Proximate Cause — Jury Question: The trial court properly refused to grant a directed verdict against defendant for failing to keep its brakes from freezing and in failing to display brake lights and keep them free from snow because whether such violations proximately caused the death of plaintiff's husband was a question of fact for the jury to determine. However, the erroneous jury instruction on the sudden emergency doctrine necessitated a new trial on the issue of liability. Kudrna v. Comet Corp., 175 M 29, 572 P2d 183 (1977).

Credibility and Weight of Evidence — Review on Appeal: Under this section the court may not invade the province of the jury when the verdict is supported by substantial evidence. The credibility of witnesses and the weight to be given their testimony are questions for determination by the jury. The verdict in the case at bar being supported by substantial evidence, the Supreme Court is thereby concluded as to the issues of fact. Gilmore v. Mulvihill, 109 M 601, 98 P2d 335 (1940).

Application to Criminal Cases: This section is applicable to civil and criminal cases alike. St. v. Sherman, 35 M 512, 90 P 981 (1907).

25-7-104. Mode of trial of counterclaim.

Case Notes

Order of Presentation of Proof at Discretion of Trial Court: The order at which proof is admitted at trial is within the sound discretion of the trial court. In this case, ordering the trial so that the jury considered whether defendant's counterclaim had been settled before deciding the merits of the counterclaim was a logical sequence for considering the issues and was not an abuse of discretion. Stockman Bank of Mont. v. Potts, 2006 MT 64, 331 M 381, 132 P3d 546 (2006). See also St. v. White, 185 M 213, 605 P2d 191 (1980), and St. v. Snaric, 262 M 62, 862 P2d 1175 (1993).

Breach of Covenant of Good Faith in Conducting Insurance Claim: In a foreclosure action, the insured, Britton, cross-claimed against Farmers Insurance Group (FIG) for the full amount of coverage provided by FIG's policy and for further compensatory and punitive damages by reason of "bad faith". FIG responded to the foreclosure action by setting up as a cross-claim against Britton its right under its partial assignment of mortgage and requesting foreclosure against Britton. FIG further defended against Britton's cross-claim by alleging that Britton had intentionally set the fire, had been guilty of fraud with respect to his interest in the property, and had not submitted a proper proof of loss. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that prior to filing its answer to Britton's cross-claim, FIG neither rejected Britton's proof of loss nor informed him in writing or otherwise of their contention of arson. Also, FIG's evidence regarding Britton's involvement in setting the fire was circumstantial, and there was no evidence of potential financial gain for Britton from the policy proceeds. The jury decision that FIG breached the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in conducting the claim was upheld. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

Remedy in Contract or in Tort — Motion for Separate Trials: An insurer requested a separate trial on the affirmative defenses raised by cross-claim and requested that the trial of the remaining issues raised by the insured be postponed until after the final determination of the affirmative defenses. The Supreme Court noted that the insured, having a choice of two remedies, one in contract and one in tort, elected to pursue his claim in tort. Recovery by him on his claim in tort would have the effect of barring his claim for breach of contract. If the motion for separate trials had been granted, it would have converted insured's claim for tort to one for breach of contract. Insured would then have been precluded from presenting any evidence as to consequential damages for the tort, let alone any evidence relating to punitive damages. His right to trial by jury of his tort claim, guaranteed by the seventh amendment to the U.S. Constitution and Art. II, sec. 26, Mont. Const., would have been prejudiced. Denial of the motion to bifurcate was proper. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

Finding of Fact Based on Issue Raised by Counterclaim: The District Court properly made a finding of fact regarding an issue raised by defendant's counterclaim even though plaintiff contended that there was an agreement that the trial would be conducted in two phases and that the issue in question would be the subject of the second phase. The plaintiff's actions during the course of the trial demonstrated she was fully aware that the court would be resolving the issue. Kis v. Pifer, 179 M 344, 588 P2d 514 (1978).

Manner of Trial of Issues on Counterclaim: Where defendant sets up a counterclaim in his answer and seeks an affirmative judgment thereon against the plaintiff, the issues arising are triable as if they arose in an action brought by the defendant against plaintiff. Cont. Oil Co. v. Bell, 94 M 123, 21 P2d 65 (1933).

Failure to Prove Market Value — Attorney Fees Properly Denied: In a boundary dispute case, the plaintiffs moved for attorney fees under this section, arguing that the final judgment was less favorable to the defendants than the plaintiffs' offer of an agricultural easement and that, therefore, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover attorney fees incurred after the offer was made. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's denial of attorney fees. The plaintiffs failed to demonstrate that the value of the subject property, the easement claimed by the defendants, or both was not more than $50,000. Larsen v. Richardson, 2011 MT 195, 361 Mont. 344, 260 P.3d 103.

1983 Amendment: In first sentence, after "district judge" inserted "or jury commissioner"; after "presence of" substituted "two witnesses" for "the clerk of the court"; before "ballots" deleted "capsules containing"; after "a jury" inserted "for the cause to be tried"; and added last sentence relating to stipulation as to seating of jurors.

Case Notes

Purpose of Insuring Random Selection — Nonwaiver of Multiple Violations: A deputy clerk, prior to the 1983 amendment, removed from a metal box slips of paper which were not in capsules and which had names on them, did not shake the box prior to removing the slips, drew the slips outside the presence of the District Judge, and the names drawn were placed on a list that was not drawn by lot prior to impaneling of the trial jury. This procedure violated the fundamental statutory purpose of insuring random selection of jurors by lot from the entire panel or array. The objecting party did not have to show prejudice, and he was not barred from pressing the objection on appeal by reason of the fact he did not object until after the verdict. A new trial was ordered. Solberg v. Yellowstone County, 203 M 79, 659 P2d 290, 40 St. Rep. 308 (1983); Dvorak v. Huntley Project Irrigation District, 196 M 167, 639 P2d 62, 38 St. Rep. 2176 (1981).

Waiver of Irregularities: Where, in a county having two resident District Judges, the second Judge did not participate in the drawing of the special venire, nor in the drawing of the trial jury in any of several actions, the objection that the jury had been illegally drawn was waived by failure to challenge the panel, with knowledge or means of knowledge at hand of the alleged illegal procedure. Case Notes Substantial Compliance Standard Clarified With Regard to Statutory Process for Forming Jury: The objective statutory procedures established by the Legislature for the random selection of jurors are intended to protect a defendant's fundamental right to a fair and impartial jury and must be substantially complied with. Under Montana case law, the substantial compliance standard is not an absolute rule inasmuch as it permits minor deviations from statutory procedure. These technical deviations do not constitute a substantial failure to comply and therefore do not give rise to a presumption of prejudice. In clarifying the substantial compliance standard, the Supreme Court took guidance from federal case law developed under the federal Jury Selection and Service Act of 1968, 28 U.S.C. 1861, et seq. In order to establish a violation under the federal Act, a defendant must show that the government substantially failed to comply with the methods set forth by statute for jury selection. Substantial failure has been construed as a violation that contravenes one of two basic principles: (1) random selection of jurors; and (2) determination of juror disqualification, excuses, exemptions, and exclusion on the basis of objective criteria. A successful challenge to the jury panel may be founded only on a material departure from the law, a deviation amounting to more than a technical irregularity. Thus, a substantial or material statutory departure that affects the random nature or objectivity of the jury selection process establishes a violation independently of the departure's consequences in an individual case, while a technical or nonmaterial violation constitutes nonprejudicial error under the substantial compliance standard. St. v. Lamere, 2000 MT 45, 298 M 358, 2 P3d 204, 57 St. Rep. 214 (2000), overruling St. v. Robbins, 1998 MT 297, 292 M 23, 971 P2d 359, 55 St. Rep. 1213 (1998).

25-7-221. Challenges to jurors and the jury.

Case Notes

Improper Denial of Challenge of Biased Juror for Cause — Automatic Reversal: The District Court erred in denying a challenge for cause of a juror who expressed more than general animosity or reluctance to serve as a juror, consistently stated that she had made up her mind about the case, indicated that her relationships with plaintiff's co-counsel's law firm would probably influence her, and stated that she was inclined to favor contractors over owners and was unsure if she could set aside her beliefs. The juror's responses provided sufficient unqualified opinion and state of mind evincing bias to justify a challenge for cause, and the court's failure to grant the challenge warranted automatic reversal. Crail Creek Associates, LLC v. Olson, 2008 MT 209, 344 M 321, 187 P3d 667 (2008). See also Reff-Conlin's, Inc. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 2002 MT 60, 309 M 142, 45 P3d 863 (2002).

Improper Denial of Challenge for Cause Based on Debtor-Creditor and Attorney-Client Relationships — Erroneous Ruling on Challenge for Cause Prejudicial as Matter of Law — New Trial Warranted: During voir dire, prospective juror Derrig revealed that he was president of a bank that was represented by plaintiff's trial counsel, that he had worked with plaintiff in the past in his position as bank president, and that the bank was one of plaintiff's creditors. Defendant twice challenged Derrig for cause, based on the debtor-creditor relationship between plaintiff and the bank and because of the potential for bias arising from Derrig's attorney-client relationship with plaintiff's attorney. Both challenges were denied, so defendant ultimately used a peremptory challenge to remove Derrig from the jury panel. Defendant claimed that denial of its challenge for cause was improper. Because defendant was forced to use a peremptory challenge to remove Derrig, and in fact used all its peremptory challenges, defendant maintained that it was denied an equal number of peremptory challenges and was thus entitled to a new trial. The Supreme Court agreed. Pursuant to 25-7-223, there is no substantive difference between the chief executive officer of a creditor who is responsible for the creditor's success and the creditor itself when it comes to impartiality and jury duty. Further, an ongoing attorney-client relationship between a prospective juror and trial counsel represents the strong possibility of bias in favor of the party represented by that attorney. Under the rule in King v. Special Resource Management, Inc., 256 M 367, 846 P2d 1038 (1993), and St. v. Williams, 262 M 530, 866 P2d 1099 (1993), when a District Court erroneously denies a challenge for cause, it is the substantive equivalent of granting more peremptory challenges to one side than to the other, which is prejudicial as a matter of law, warranting reversal and a new trial. Reff-Conlin's, Inc. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 2002 MT 60, 309 M 142, 45 P3d 863 (2002).

Peremptory Challenges to Prospective Jurors — Factors Necessary to Show Purposeful Discrimination in Jury Selection — Waiver of Batson Challenge When Not Timely Raised: Ford contended that the state violated his due process rights by improperly exercising all of its peremptory challenges at trial to exclude women from the jury panel, citing J.E.B. v. Ala. ex rel. T.B., 511 US 127 (1994), as a prohibition against gender discrimination during jury selection. In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court applied a de novo review to the trial court's application of the law, deferring to the trial court's findings of fact unless clearly erroneous. The Supreme Court then reviewed the history of the discriminatory use of peremptory challenges as addressed in Batson v. Ky., 476 US 79 (1986), and its progeny, noting that the rules regarding challenges to jury selection no longer apply exclusively to prosecutors striking members of the venire who are the same race as the defendant, but that any racially motivated reason for striking a prospective juror is prohibited whether the juror shares the racial identity of the defendant or not (see Powers v. Ohio, 499 US 400 (1991)). Further, the challenge is no longer limited to the government in criminal actions but has been extended to prevent a defendant in a criminal action from using peremptory challenges to exclude jurors based on race (see Ga. v. McCollum, 505 US 42 (1992)), has been applied to private litigants in civil cases (see Edmonson v. Leesville Concrete Co., 500 US 614 (1991)), and has been used to prohibit gender discrimination in jury selection, as in J.E.B. In order to establish a prima facie case of purposeful discrimination, a defendant must show that: (1) the defendant is a member of a cognizable racial group; (2) the prosecutor exercised peremptory challenges to remove members of the defendant's race from the venire; and (3) these facts and other relevant circumstances raise an inference that the prosecutor used the peremptory jury selection practice to exclude members of the venire from the petit jury on account of their race. In addition, numerous courts have held that the right to be tried by a jury whose members are selected pursuant to nondiscriminatory criteria must be exercised in a timely manner, and failure to raise a Batson challenge before the jury is sworn and before the venire is dismissed results in waiver of the challenge. In Ford's case, his counsel waited until after the jury was sworn and the venire dismissed before raising the Batson challenge. Because the motion was untimely, and therefore waived, the Supreme Court declined to address the merits of Ford's claim of discriminatory use of peremptory challenges. St. v. Ford, 2001 MT 230, 306 M 517, 39 P3d 108 (2001), followed in Casiano v. Greenway Enterprises, Inc., 2002 MT 93, 309 M 358, 47 P3d 432 (2002), St. v. Parrish, 2005 MT 112, 327 M 88, 111 P3d 671 (2005), and Ford v. St., 2005 MT 151, 327 M 378, 114 P3d 244 (2005).

Voir Dire Discussion of Plaintiff's Disease, Treatment, and Complications and Prior Summary Judgment on Another Issue: During voir dire in a medical malpractice case, it was not improper for the judge to allow plaintiff's attorney to discuss plaintiff's disease, her past successful treatment, defendant doctor's laser surgery for the disease, the fact that defendant had never before used laser surgery for this disease, the complications from the surgery and plaintiff's current life as a result of the complications, and the fact that the judge had granted summary judgment on the issue of consent to remove plaintiff's hemorrhoid tags during the surgery. O'Leyar v. Callender, 255 M 277, 843 P2d 304, 49 St. Rep. 1008 (1992).

Improper Questioning and Excusing of Prospective Jurors by Court Clerk: In depositor's suit against bank, the court's clerks examined the prospective jurors, using questions given the clerks by depositor's counsel, without notice to bank's counsel. The clerks asked if the prospective jurors had business or transactions with the bank and released some prospective jurors based on their answers to the questions, thus excusing them for cause without notice to bank's counsel or a ruling by the court. This occurred before an initial jury panel was called. This action violated the procedure set out in 25-7-221, 25-7-224, and former Rules 47(a) and 47(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded); was outside the type of action permitted by 3-15-313; and constituted reversible error requiring a new trial. Tribby v. NW. Bank of Great Falls, 217 M 196, 704 P2d 409, 42 St. Rep. 1133 (1985).

Limits on Examination: Although the trial judge may set reasonable limits on the examination, he should permit liberal and probing examination calculated to discover possible bias or prejudice, with due regard for the interests of fairness to both parties. Borkowski v. Yost, 182 M 28, 594 P2d 688 (1979).

Purpose of Voir Dire: The purpose of voir dire is to enable counsel to determine the existence of bias and prejudice on the part of prospective jurors and to enable counsel to exercise his peremptory challenges. Borkowski v. Yost, 182 M 28, 594 P2d 688 (1979).

Questions Concerning Insurance in Voir Dire: In appropriate cases an attorney upon voir dire may ask prospective jurors whether they have any business relationship with insurance companies and whether they are policyholders of an insurance company involved in the case. Also, upon a proper showing of possible prejudice, an attorney may ask whether a prospective juror has heard or read anything to indicate that jury verdicts for plaintiffs in personal injury cases result in higher insurance premiums for everyone; if so, whether the belief will interfere with the juror's ability to render a fair and impartial verdict. These rules are subject to a showing that counsel is acting in good faith and is not merely trying to impress on the jury the fact that defendant may be covered by insurance. Borkowski v. Yost, 182 M 28, 594 P2d 688 (1979).

Additional Challenges Allowed — Effect: Judgment will not be reversed for error when trial court allowed one defendant four peremptory challenges and four more peremptory challenges collectively to remaining two defendants because of plaintiff's inability to establish that error caused him material injury or that objectionable jurors sat on the case. Leary v. Kelly Pipe Co., 169 M 511, 549 P2d 813 (1976), overruled in King v. Special Resource Management, Inc., 256 M 367, 846 P2d 1038, 50 St. Rep. 117 (1993).

Opinion as to Merits 228

GENERAL

Jurors' Outlook Toward Defendant and Plaintiff, Acquaintance With Plaintiff's Counsel in Personal Injury Action — Insufficient Grounds to Challenge Jurors for Cause: In a personal injury action against a bus company in relation to a motor vehicle accident, the plaintiff challenged for cause two jurors: one who referred to bus drivers as "saints" and had attended high school with the plaintiff's counsel, and one who stated that without proof of causation he would conclude the plaintiff had no injury. The District Court ruled that the jurors could judge fairly and base their conclusions on the evidence presented and therefore denied the challenges. On appeal, the Supreme Court found no error and affirmed, holding that neither juror's statements demonstrated enmity or bias. Peterson-Tuell v. First Student Transp., LLC, 2014 MT 307, 377 Mont. 113, 339 P.3d 16.

Repetitive Questioning on Single Word in Element of Crime: It was not error for the District Court to require defense counsel to cease his juror-by-juror inquiry in voir dire as to the interpretations of a readily understandable word. The prohibition did not foreclose questioning on possible bias but instead invoked the District Court's great latitude in controlling voir dire and prevented further questioning that was taking on the elements of argument that could have been made during trial. St. v. Grant, 2011 MT 81, 360 Mont. 127, 252 P.3d 193.

Juror's Hesitance Regarding Source of Potential Award Against County Not Sufficient for Dismissal for Cause Absent Showing of Bias: A potential juror expressed concern throughout voir dire regarding the source of any potential large verdict against the county, but the trial court refused to strike the juror for cause. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the juror's hesitance regarding a potential verdict did not lead to the belief that the juror would be biased or would have failed to follow the law and instructions. Eklund v. Wheatland County, 2009 MT 231, 351 M 370, 212 P3d 297 (2009).

No Evidence of Juror Bias — Challenges for Cause Properly Denied: Plaintiff's counsel challenged two jurors for cause based on the jurors' acquaintance, but not working relationship, with members of defense counsel's law firm. The challenges were denied, and on appeal the Supreme Court affirmed. A court abuses its discretion if it fails to excuse a prospective juror whose actual bias is discovered during voir dire, but in this case, the record revealed no actual bias by either juror, so the Supreme Court deferred to the discretion of the trial court in denying the challenges for cause. Harris v. Hanson, 2009 MT 13, 349 M 29, 201 P3d 151 (2009), following St. v. Heath, 2004 MT 58, 320 M 211, 89 P3d 947 (2004).

Improper Denial of Challenge of Biased Juror for Cause — Automatic Reversal: The District Court erred in denying a challenge for cause of a juror who expressed more than general animosity or reluctance to serve as a juror, consistently stated that she had made up her mind about the case, indicated that her relationships with plaintiff's co-counsel's law firm would probably influence her, and stated that she was inclined to favor contractors over owners and was unsure if she could set aside her beliefs. Failure of Counsel to Ensure Impartial Jury During Voir Dire Constituting Ineffective Assistance — Reversible Structural Error: A potential juror disclosed in a juror questionnaire that her daughter was a paralegal at the County Attorney's office. Defense counsel failed to take note of the disclosure, to question the juror regarding any potential bias during voir dire, or to challenge the juror for cause. Defense counsel acknowledged the error on the record. The juror was picked for the panel, and Lamere was convicted. On appeal, the Supreme Court applied the two-pronged Strickland test for ineffective assistance, and because the error was on the record, the court reviewed the ineffective assistance claim de novo on direct appeal. The court concluded that counsel failed to ensure that Lamere received a fair trial by an impartial jury and that counsel's performance fell below the reasonably required level, satisfying the first Strickland prong. In addition, counsel's deficient performance constituted a structural error that undermined the fairness of the entire trial and thus was presumed to be prejudicial, satisfying the second Strickland prong. Lamere did not receive effective assistance during voir dire, the verdict was reversed, and the case was remanded for a new trial. St. v. Lamere, 2005 MT 118, 327 M 115, 112 P3d 1005 (2005). See also St. v. Good, 2002 MT 59, 309 M 113, 43 P3d 948 (2002).

Improper Denial of Challenge for Cause Based on Debtor-Creditor and Attorney-Client Relationships — Erroneous Ruling on Challenge for Cause Prejudicial as Matter of Law — New Trial Warranted: During voir dire, prospective juror Derrig revealed that he was president of a bank that was represented by plaintiff's trial counsel, that he had worked with plaintiff in the past in his position as bank president, and that the bank was one of plaintiff's creditors. The Supreme Court agreed. Pursuant to this section, there is no substantive difference between the chief executive officer of a creditor who is responsible for the creditor's success and the creditor itself when it comes to impartiality and jury duty. Further, an ongoing attorney-client relationship between a prospective juror and trial counsel represents the strong possibility of bias in favor of the party represented by that attorney. Under the rule in King v. Special Resource Management, Inc., 256 M 367, 846 P2d 1038 (1993), and St. v. Williams, 262 M 530, 866 P2d 1099 (1993), when a District Court erroneously denies a challenge for cause, it is the substantive equivalent of granting more peremptory challenges to one side than to the other, which is prejudicial as a matter of law, warranting reversal and a new trial. Reff-Conlin's, Inc. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 2002 MT 60, 309 M 142, 45 P3d 863 (2002).

Strict Liability for Wrongful Death — Plaintiff's Remarriage — Nonreversible Error to Not Allow Certain Questioning: Counsel must be allowed to identify potential jurors who may be acquainted with or related to a wrongful death plaintiff's new spouse, but questioning must be carefully conducted so that no reference is made to the remarriage or to the relationship of the new spouse to plaintiff. It was error for the District Court to not allow defendant to so question prospective jurors, but the error was harmless when defendant failed to show prejudice resulting from the error. Lutz v. Nat'l Crane Corp., 267 M 368, 884 P2d 455, 51 St. Rep. 810 (1994).

Manifest Error in Failing to Remove Jurors for Cause: It was manifest error for the District Court to fail to remove one juror who had a fixed scruple against punitive damages and had followed his scruple in a previous trial, and to remove a second juror who not only stated he preferred the management side but appeared to have difficulty in hearing and speaking. Plaintiff's counsel was therefore forced to waste peremptory challenges to remove the jurors when he might have used the challenges elsewhere on the panel. Mahan v. Farmers Union Cent. Exch., Inc., 235 M 410, 768 P2d 850, 46 St. Rep. 96 (1989).

Attorney-Client Relationship Not Basis for Challenge for Cause: An attorney-client relationship between a prospective jury member and opposing counsel does not necessarily render a juror incompetent, and where there is no current business between them, the District Court Judge did not abuse his discretion in refusing to allow a challenge for cause. Williams v. Rigler, 234 M 161, 761 P2d 833, 45 St. Rep. 1812 (1988).

Brief Questioning of Prospective Juror Regarding Insurance Employment — Not Error: Two brief questions to one prospective juror about his past work of selling insurance and a question as to whether this would bias his decision did not prejudice the defendant because there was no suggestion that the defendant had liability insurance and the questioning was done in good faith to allow counsel to look for bias or prejudice on the part of a prospective juror as set forth in the general rule of Haynes v. County of Missoula, 163 M 270, 517 P2d 370 (1973). Garza v. Peppard, 222 M 244, 722 P2d 610, 43 St. Rep. 1233 (1986).

Abuse of Discretion Warranting New Trial — Forced Use of Preemptive Challenge: It was error amounting to an abuse of discretion meriting the grant of a new trial for the District Court to deny plaintiff's challenge for cause of a potential juror that met two of the grounds for challenge set forth in this section: (1) there was a relationship or interest in the action; and (2) there was bias. The court twice refused to dismiss the juror, instead engaging in its own rehabilitative examination, forcing the plaintiff, to his prejudice, to exercise a preemptive challenge. Tacke v. Vermeer Mfg. Co., 220 M 1, 713 P2d 527, 43 St. Rep. 123 (1986).

General Animosity Toward Defendant in Personal Injury Action — Not Sufficient Grounds for Challenge to Juror for Cause: In a personal injury action against Burlington Northern, Inc. (BN), it was not error for the trial court to refuse to dismiss for cause a juror who testified that he ships grain on BN each year and believes that BN grossly overcharges for shipping when the juror also testified that his feelings toward BN would not prevent him from being fair in this case. Anderson v. Burlington N., Inc., 218 M 456, 709 P2d 641, 42 St. Rep. 1738 (1985).

Improper Questioning and Excusing of Prospective Jurors by Court Clerk: In depositor's suit against bank, the court's clerks examined the prospective jurors, using questions given the clerks by depositor's counsel, without notice to bank's counsel. The clerks asked if the prospective jurors had business or transactions with the bank and released some prospective jurors based on their answers to the questions, thus excusing them for cause without notice to bank's counsel or a ruling by the court. This occurred before an initial jury panel was called. This action violated the procedure set out in 25-7-221, 25-7-224, and former Rules 47(a) and 47(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded); was outside the type of action permitted by 3-15-313; and constituted reversible error requiring a new trial. Tribby v. NW. Bank of Great Falls, 217 M 196, 704 P2d 409, 42 St. Rep. 1133 (1985).

Personal Belief of Juror as Cause — Extensive Questioning by Court Prejudicial: During voir dire in a wrongful death action, a prospective juror stated strong reservations about awarding damages for the death of a family member. After extensive questioning by the court, the prospective juror agreed to lay aside her personal feelings and follow the law. The plaintiff's challenge for cause was denied. The plaintiff then moved for mistrial claiming that the court's questioning of the prospective juror had prejudiced the entire panel. The court's failure to excuse the prospective juror for cause was manifest error. Additionally, considerable questioning by the court should take place outside the presence of the panel. Abernathy v. Eline Oil Field Services, Inc., 200 M 205, 650 P2d 772, 39 St. Rep. 1688 (1982).

Taxpayers' Interest Insufficient as Bias: Where county brought an action for damages to bridge, it was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to deny a motion for a change of venue even though the jury was necessarily made up of taxpayers of that county each of whom had a pecuniary interest averaging $31. Carter County v. Cambrian Corp., 143 M 193, 387 P2d 904 (1963).

School District Taxpayers' Interest Insufficient as Bias: Taxpayers of a school district were qualified jurors in action by school district against fire insurers for loss of school building as they did not have such an interest (without more) as to be subject to challenge for cause. School District v. Globe & Republic Ins. Co. of Am., 142 M 220, 383 P2d 482 (1963).

Breadth of Statute — Constitutional Guaranty of Jury Trial Not Impaired: The constitutional guaranty of an impartial jury will not be destroyed by the fact that the statute, though professing to do so, does not include all of the grounds that clearly render the juror incompetent. Watson v. Bozeman, 117 M 5, 156 P2d 178 (1945).

Determination of Juror Qualifications — Discretion of Trial Court: Where the prospective jurors have been examined as to bias and prejudice and the issue of disqualification has been raised, a determination by the trial court that such jurors are qualified rests in sound judicial discretion and will not be set aside unless there is a manifest abuse of that discretion. Watson v. Bozeman, 117 M 5, 156 P2d 178 (1945).

Previous Jury Service — Prejudice Not Presumed: Prejudice to the defendant cannot be presumed from the fact that plaintiff, as a member of the jury panel, had associated with other members thereof, and had served on four trial juries previous to the trial of plaintiff's case. Watson v. Bozeman, 117 M 5, 156 P2d 178 (1945).

Bias — Civil and Criminal Practice: In civil practice, the Legislature has not changed the rule of the common law which excludes jurors upon the ground of actual bias, although a material change has been made in this respect, in criminal practice, by section 94-7122, R.C.M. 1947 (repealed). For new provisions, see Title 46, ch. 16, part 3 (renumbered 46-16-111, 46-16-112, and 46-16-114 through 46-16-118), 46-16-403, and 46-16-603. Shane v. Butte Elec. Ry., 37 M 599, 97 P 958 (1908).

OPINION AS TO MERITS

Personal Belief of Juror as Cause — Extensive Questioning by Court Prejudicial: During voir dire in a wrongful death action, a prospective juror stated strong reservations about awarding damages for the death of a family member. After extensive questioning by the court, the prospective juror agreed to lay aside her personal feelings and follow the law. The plaintiff's challenge for cause was denied. The plaintiff then moved for mistrial claiming that the court's questioning of the prospective juror had prejudiced the entire panel. The court's failure to excuse the prospective juror for cause was manifest error. Additionally, considerable questioning by the court should take place outside the presence of the panel. Abernathy v. Eline Oil Field Services, Inc., 200 M 205, 650 P2d 772, 39 St. Rep. 1688 (1982).

Previous Testimony Heard: Only a specified challenge within the statute may be relied upon and no other considered upon appeal. The fact that a juror listened to witnesses during previous trial and didn't hear all of them was not, on the facts shown, sufficient to disqualify him under subsection (6) of this section. Simons v. Jennings, 100 M 55, 46 P2d 704 (1935).

Prejudice Against Class: A juror cannot be said to be fair and impartial who has formed an opinion which will take evidence to remove, and who entertains a prejudice against the class to which the defendant belongs, although he states that his opinion is based on newspaper reports or common rumor, and he can fairly try the case according to the evidence. Shane v. Butte Elec. Ry., 37 M 599, 97 P 958 (1908).

Opinion Formed — Testimony Notwithstanding: A juror is not competent who testifies that he has formed an opinion concerning the merits of the case by talking with one of the parties and believing what he said regarding it; that he cannot say that it is an unqualified opinion; that sufficient evidence would change his opinion; that he thinks he can render an impartial verdict; and that his opinion is dependent upon the truth of what he had heard. Ruff v. Rader, 2 M 211 (1875).

Statement of Case as Opinion: A juror who hears and accepts as true the statement of a case by a party or witness forms an "unqualified opinion" of the merits of the case. Ruff v. Rader, 2 M 211 (1875).

25-7-224. Peremptory challenges to jurors.

Compiler's Comments

1981 Amendment: At end of (1) deleted "If no peremptory challenges are taken until the panel is full, they must be taken by the parties alternately, commencing with the plaintiff"; at beginning of (2) changed "Where" to "When"; added the last sentence of (2) relating to peremptory challenges allowed when other than 6 or 12 jurors are to be seated; in (3) substituted "Peremptory challenges shall be taken as provided in Rule 47(b), M.R.Civ.P." for "They shall be exercised by the plaintiff first striking one and the defendant then striking one, and so on until each side has exhausted or waived his rights."

Case Notes

Improper Denial of Challenge for Cause Based on Debtor-Creditor and Attorney-Client Relationships — Erroneous Ruling on Challenge for Cause Prejudicial as Matter of Law — New Trial Warranted: During voir dire, prospective juror Derrig revealed that he was president of a bank that was represented by plaintiff's trial counsel, that he had worked with plaintiff in the past in his position as bank president, and that the bank was one of plaintiff's creditors. Defendant twice challenged Derrig for cause, based on the debtor-creditor relationship between plaintiff and the bank and because of the potential for bias arising from Derrig's attorney-client relationship with plaintiff's attorney. Both challenges were denied, so defendant ultimately used a peremptory challenge to remove Derrig from the jury panel. Defendant claimed that denial of its challenge for cause was improper. Because defendant was forced to use a peremptory challenge to remove Derrig, and in fact used all its peremptory challenges, defendant maintained that it was denied an equal number of peremptory challenges and was thus entitled to a new trial. The Supreme Court agreed. Pursuant to 25-7-223, there is no substantive difference between the chief executive officer of a creditor who is responsible for the creditor's success and the creditor itself when it comes to impartiality and jury duty. Further, an ongoing attorney-client relationship between a prospective juror and trial counsel represents the strong possibility of bias in favor of the party represented by that attorney. Under the rule in King v. Special Resource Management, Inc., 256 M 367, 846 P2d 1038 (1993), and St. v. Williams, 262 M 530, 866 P2d 1099 (1993), when a District Court erroneously denies a challenge for cause, it is the substantive equivalent of granting more peremptory challenges to one side than to the other, which is prejudicial as a matter of law, warranting reversal and a new trial. Reff-Conlin's, Inc. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 2002 MT 60, 309 M 142, 45 P3d 863 (2002).

Peremptory Challenges to Prospective Jurors — Factors Necessary to Show Purposeful Discrimination in Jury Selection — Waiver of Batson Challenge When Not Timely Raised: Ford contended that the state violated his due process rights by improperly exercising all of its peremptory challenges at trial to exclude women from the jury panel, citing J.E.B. v. Ala. ex rel. T.B., 511 US 127 (1994), as a prohibition against gender discrimination during jury selection. In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court applied a de novo review to the trial court's application of the law, deferring to the trial court's findings of fact unless clearly erroneous. The Supreme Court then reviewed the history of the discriminatory use of peremptory challenges as addressed in Batson v. Ky., 476 US 79 (1986), and its progeny, noting that the rules regarding challenges to jury selection no longer apply exclusively to prosecutors striking members of the venire who are the same race as the defendant, but that any racially motivated reason for striking a prospective juror is prohibited whether the juror shares the racial identity of the defendant or not (see Powers v. Ohio, 499 US 400 (1991)). Further, the challenge is no longer limited to the government in criminal actions but has been extended to prevent a defendant in a criminal action from using peremptory challenges to exclude jurors based on race (see Ga. v. McCollum, 505 US 42 (1992)), has been applied to private litigants in civil cases (see Edmonson v. Leesville Concrete Co., 500 US 614 (1991)), and has been used to prohibit gender discrimination in jury selection, as in J.E.B. In order to establish a prima facie case of purposeful discrimination, a defendant must show that: (1) the defendant is a member of a cognizable racial group; (2) the prosecutor exercised peremptory challenges to remove members of the defendant's race from the venire; and (3) these facts and other relevant circumstances raise an inference that the prosecutor used the peremptory jury selection practice to exclude members of the venire from the petit jury on account of their race. In addition, numerous courts have held that the right to be tried by a jury whose members are selected pursuant to nondiscriminatory criteria must be exercised in a timely manner, and failure to raise a Batson challenge before the jury is sworn and before the venire is dismissed results in waiver of the challenge. In Ford's case, his counsel waited until after the jury was sworn and the venire dismissed before raising the Batson challenge. Because the motion was untimely, and therefore waived, the Supreme Court declined to address the merits of Ford's claim of discriminatory use of peremptory challenges. St. v. Ford, 2001 MT 230, 306 M 517, 39 P3d 108 (2001), followed in Casiano v. Greenway Enterprises, Inc., 2002 MT 93, 309 M 358, 47 P3d 432 (2002), St. v. Parrish, 2005 MT 112, 327 M 88, 111 P3d 671 (2005), and Ford v. St., 2005 MT 151, 327 M 378, 114 P3d 244 (2005).

No Extra Peremptories for Two Defendant Doctors Not Blaming Each Other for Patient's Death — Failure to Prove Hostile Interests: In a trial between a surviving spouse and two doctors who treated plaintiff's husband, who died of hantavirus, which was not diagnosed, the doctors did not try to pass the blame off on each other. Each had his own interest to protect, but there was no showing that their interests were hostile to each other. That there was the potential for one to escape liability at the possible expense of the other did not show that their interests were hostile to each other. A defendant's interest in self-protection from an adverse jury verdict does not necessarily indicate hostility toward a codefendant. Both doctors asserted that they were not negligent. Doctor Swift did not plead any affirmative defense or cross-claim against Dr. Anderson, and Dr. Anderson's affirmative defenses did not suggest any hostility toward Dr. Swift. The lower court therefore erred in granting each doctor four peremptory challenges instead of making them share the normal four. A grant of additional peremptory challenges is a tactical advantage that is unmistakable but nearly impossible to prove; therefore, prejudice from an improper grant is presumed as a matter of law. Plaintiff, who failed to prove negligence, is entitled to reversal and a new trial. Bueling v. Swift, 1998 MT 112, 288 M 472, 958 P2d 694, 55 St. Rep. 441 (1998), followed in Armstrong v. Gondeiro, 2000 MT 326, 303 M 37, 15 P3d 386, 57 St. Rep. 1381 (2000).

Additional Peremptory Challenges Granted to Hostile Parties — Rule to Be Applied: King sued the Montana Power Company and two wholly owned subsidiaries for wrongful discharge. At trial, the District Court granted eight peremptory challenges to the three codefendants. Because a requirement for a demonstration of prejudice would invade the internal processes of the jury, the Supreme Court held that no prejudice need be shown in order for additional peremptory challenges to be granted to one side in a lawsuit and expressly overruled Leary v. Kelly Pipe Co., 169 M 511, 549 P2d 813 (1976), which required prejudice. The Supreme Court held that parties seeking additional peremptory challenges must request them prior to trial, the issue should be raised by motion prior to voir dire if no pretrial conference is held, the number of peremptory challenges should be included in the pretrial order, and the trial court should expressly set forth in the record the reasons for its ruling. If peremptory challenges are improperly granted, prejudice is presumed as a matter of law. In the present case, the Supreme Court held that the District Court incorrectly required "diversity of interest" instead of "hostility" and that the facts showed insufficient hostility to require additional peremptory challenges allowed by the District Court. The District Court therefore committed reversible error in granting those additional challenges, and a new trial was ordered. King v. Special Resource Management, Inc., 256 M 367, 846 P2d 1038, 50 St. Rep. 117 (1993).

Manifest Error in Failing to Remove Jurors for Cause: It was manifest error for the District Court to fail to remove one juror who had a fixed scruple against punitive damages and had followed his scruple in a previous trial, and to remove a second juror who not only stated he preferred the management side but appeared to have difficulty in hearing and speaking. Plaintiff's counsel was therefore forced to waste peremptory challenges to remove the jurors when he might have used the challenges elsewhere on the panel. Mahan v. Farmers Union Cent. Exch., Inc., 235 M 410, 768 P2d 850, 46 St. Rep. 96 (1989).

Number of Peremptory Challenges: Under this section, each party may have four peremptory challenges. "Each party" has been interpreted to mean "each side" unless the position of the codefendants is shown to be "hostile". Here the suits were joined involuntarily, and defendants/respondents in this action have indicated they would seek indemnification from other codefendants. Therefore, the codefendants were found to be hostile, and four peremptory challenges each are permitted. Williams v. Rigler, 234 M 161, 761 P2d 833, 45 St. Rep. 1812 (1988).

Jury Passed for Cause — Partiality Issues Waived: Defendant could not successfully argue that the jury was not fair and impartial when defendant passed the jury for cause. Tribby v. NW. Bank of Great Falls, 217 M 196, 704 P2d 409, 42 St. Rep. 1133 (1985).

Substantial Right — Forced Use of Challenge — Abuse of Discretion: Because the trial court improperly denied a challenge for cause, the plaintiff was forced to use a peremptory challenge. Although the right to a peremptory challenge is a substantial right, only where there is an abuse of discretion is there reversible error. Where the court extensively questioned and thereby rehabilitated a prospective juror, an abuse of discretion occurred. Abernathy v. Eline Oil Field Services, Inc., 200 M 205, 650 P2d 772, 39 St. Rep. 1688 (1982), followed in Walden v. St., 250 M 132, 818 P2d 1190, 48 St. Rep. 893 (1991).

No Presumption of Prejudice Where Four Peremptory Challenges Allowed Per Hostile Defendant: Failure of the District Court to follow the procedural guidelines set out in Hunsaker v. Bozeman Deaconess Foundation, 179 M 305, 588 P2d 493, 35 St. Rep. 1647 (1978), for ruling on the question of the number of peremptory challenges allowed does not give rise to a presumption of prejudice when a sufficient record exists to review the propriety of the court's order and when, as here, each codefendant was entitled to four peremptory challenges because they were hostile to one another as to the theory of liability they held in common. Under 25-7-224, which allows each party four peremptory challenges, "each party" means "each side" unless the positions of the codefendants are hostile to each other. Lauman v. Lee, 192 M 84, 626 P2d 830, 38 St. Rep. 499 (1981), followed in Gee v. Egbert, 209 M 1, 679 P2d 1194, 41 St. Rep. 515 (1984). See also Adams v. Cheney, 203 M 187, 661 P2d 434, 40 St. Rep. 383 (1983).

Number of Challenges When Multiple Parties:

Since the record at the time the court entered its ruling is devoid of evidence showing the parties were "hostile", each is entitled to four peremptory challenges. Upon review the court is compelled to take a hindsight approach to the issue and determine from the entire trial record if the appellant was prejudiced. Hunsaker v. Bozeman Deaconess Foundation, 179 M 305, 588 P2d 493 (1978).

The court properly allowed each defendant four peremptory challenges since they had interests and defenses antagonistic in fact. Kudrna v. Comet Corp., 175 M 29, 572 P2d 183 (1977).

Additional Challenges Allowed — Effect: Judgment will not be reversed for error when court allowed one defendant four peremptory challenges and four more peremptory challenges collectively to remaining two defendants because of plaintiff's inability to establish that error caused him material injury or that objectionable jurors sat on the case. Leary v. Kelly Pipe Co., 169 M 511, 549 P2d 813 (1976), overruled in King v. Special Resource Management, Inc., 256 M 367, 846 P2d 1038, 50 St. Rep. 117 (1993).

Consolidation of Cases for Trial — Number of Challenges Allowed: When cases are properly ordered consolidated for trial they become a single action so far as selecting a jury is concerned. Each of the parties plaintiff and the parties defendant, irrespective of the number making up such parties, was entitled collectively to four peremptory challenges, and no more. Ferron v. Intermountain Transp. Co., 115 M 388, 143 P2d 893 (1943), overruled in Leary v. Kelly Pipe Co., 169 M 511, 549 P2d 813 (1976).

Challenges of Codefendants — Conflict of Interests: Though each of two or more codefendants who are hostile to each other is entitled to the number of peremptory challenges of jurors allowed by this section to parties litigant, where neither their joint answer, which asserted defenses common to all, nor the evidence disclosed any conflict of interest, they constituted but one party, and as such were entitled to but four peremptory challenges. Mullery v. Great N. Ry., 50 M 408, 148 P 323 (1915). See also Chenoweth v. Great N. Ry., 50 M 481, 148 P 330 (1915).

Number of Challenges Allowed — "Each Party" Defined: The provision of this section, that "each party" to a civil action shall be entitled to four peremptory challenges, means each side or party litigant, and not each person of whom the respective sides or parties litigant are made up. Mullery v. Great N. Ry., 50 M 408, 148 P 323 (1915). See also Chenoweth v. Great N. Ry., 50 M 481, 148 P 330 (1915).

Waiver of Challenge — Equity Cases: Where a party plaintiff had used two of his four peremptory challenges, and waived his third and fourth, he was not thereafter entitled to challenge the juror placed in the box to fill the vacancy occasioned by the exercise of defendant's fourth challenge, especially in an equity case, where the findings were merely advisory and could be disregarded by the court. O'Malley v. O'Malley, 46 M 549, 129 P 501 (1913).

Right to Peremptory Challenges Absolute: Each party to a civil action may, by a mere objection, peremptorily challenge four jurors, and when these challenges are exercised the court has no discretion in the matter whatever. State ex rel. Anaconda Copper Min. Co. v. Clancy, 30 M 529, 77 P 312 (1904).

Waiver of Challenge as to Particular Juror Only: Where the State waived its fourth peremptory challenge and the defendant exhausted his peremptory challenges, it was not error, on the panel's being filled and passed for cause, to permit the State to peremptorily challenge a juror who was in the box when the State waived its fourth challenge. The State's waiver of its fourth challenge was not a waiver of any subsequent challenge to which it was entitled. St. v. Peel, 23 M 358, 59 P 169 (1899), distinguished in Feeley v. Lacey, 133 M 283, 322 P2d 1104 (1958).

Waiver of Challenges — Limitation on Rule: Where either party fails to challenge in his turn, he is considered to waive the challenge or challenges he might use at that time, but this rule goes no further than is necessary to preserve the alternation required by the statute. St. v. Peel, 23 M 358, 59 P 169 (1899), distinguished in Feeley v. Lacey, 133 M 283, 322 P2d 1104 (1958). See also Chenoweth v. Great N. Ry., 50 M 481, 148 P 330 (1915).

Criminal Prosecution — Alternate Peremptory Challenges: In a prosecution for murder, the accused was properly compelled to exhaust alternately two peremptory challenges to each one taken by the State, where none were taken until the panel was full. St. v. Sloan, 22 M 293, 56 P 364 (1899). See also Chenoweth v. Great N. Ry., 50 M 481, 148 P 330 (1915).

GENERAL

Court Discretion to Allow Witness Testimony Following Close of Case in Chief for Issuance of Preliminary Injunction: At a hearing for a preliminary injunction, plaintiff presented no evidence, stating that it would rely on its verified complaint as an affidavit. Defendant objected to use of the complaint as insufficient evidence in support of the injunction request. Following close of its case in chief, plaintiff requested that a witness be allowed to testify regarding the sufficiency of the verified complaint. The court allowed the testimony and subsequently granted the injunction. On appeal, defendant asserted that by allowing plaintiff to call a witness at that stage of the proceedings, the court erroneously allowed plaintiff an unwarranted second opportunity to present evidence. The Supreme Court noted that a District Court has general discretion to conduct proceedings in an appropriate manner and that the order in which proof is admitted at trial is also within the sound discretion of the trial court. In this case, plaintiff offered witness testimony not to offer new or additional facts but to verify the information in the complaint that defendant had objected to as technically insufficient. The District Court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the witness testimony or by relying on the evidence in determining whether to issue the injunction. The District Court was affirmed. Pinnacle Gas Resources, Inc. v. Diamond Cross Properties, LLC, 2009 MT 12, 349 M 17, 201 P3d 160 (2009). See also DeLaurentis v. Vaino, 169 M 520, 549 P2d 464 (1976), and Maxwell v. Anderson, 181 M 215, 593 P2d 29 (1979).

Order of Presentation of Proof at Discretion of Trial Court: The order at which proof is admitted at trial is within the sound discretion of the trial court. In this case, ordering the trial so that the jury considered whether defendant's counterclaim had been settled before deciding the merits of the counterclaim was a logical sequence for considering the issues and was not an abuse of discretion. Stockman Bank of Mont. v. Potts, 2006 MT 64, 331 M 381, 132 P3d 546 (2006). See also St. v. White, 185 M 213, 605 P2d 191 (1980), and St. v. Snaric, 262 M 62, 862 P2d 1175 (1993).

Argument — Comment on Lack of Testimony When Witness Testimony Barred by Court Order — Harmless Error: In a civil action for damages against Huggins and the Carpet Barn, stemming from criminal acts damaging plaintiffs David and Susan Black's automobiles, defendants made a motion in limine to exclude certain expert witnesses for the plaintiffs from testifying. After the motion was granted, defendants commented to the jury during final arguments that the plaintiffs had failed to produce any expert witnesses on the issue for which those witnesses had been excluded by the District Court's order and also commented on the fact that Susan had not testified, even though her deposition was not admitted by virtue of the District Court's ruling. The Supreme Court held that because the plaintiffs had violated a scheduling order that resulted in the expert witnesses' testimony being excluded, the defendants could properly comment upon the lack of evidence and, although the District Court erred in excluding Susan Black's deposition, that error was harmless error because the deposition was cumulative evidence. Rocky Mtn. Enterprises, Inc. v. Pierce Flooring, 286 M 282, 951 P2d 1326, 54 St. Rep. 1410 (1997).

No Abuse of Discretion in Court Interrupting Argument Unsupported by Evidence: On closing arguments, plaintiffs' attorney began to discuss and demonstrate evidence that was not proved or a matter of record. It was not an abuse of discretion, nor did it prejudice plaintiffs' case, when the trial court interrupted and instructed counsel in chambers, and subsequently the jury, that a party may not during closing arguments discuss or introduce facts not previously proved. Harwood v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 285 M 481, 949 P2d 651, 54 St. Rep. 1257 (1997).

Fair Trial Not Jeopardized by Scheduled Recesses: The Supreme Court held that the trial court had not abused its discretion in scheduling recesses at the pretrial conference. The plaintiffs did not object to the schedule and offered no evidence of outside influences affecting the jury during the recesses. Young v. Horton, 259 M 34, 855 P2d 502, 50 St. Rep. 662 (1993).

Time for Allowing Defendant's Attorney to Examine Him After Plaintiff Examines Him as Adverse Witness: The judge did not err when he precluded examination of defendant by his attorney directly after defendant was examined as an adverse witness by plaintiff's attorney. The judge may use his discretion to rearrange the order of the trial. The defendant was called as a witness the next day and given a full opportunity to provide testimony and evidence to support his case and to counter plaintiff's case. O'Leyar v. Callender, 255 M 277, 843 P2d 304, 49 St. Rep. 1008 (1992).

Disclosure of Rebuttal Witness Not Required: The law does not require the advance disclosure of rebuttal witnesses. Valley Properties Ltd. Partnership v. Steadman's Hardware, Inc., 251 M 242, 824 P2d 250, 49 St. Rep. 13 (1992), citing Massman v. Helena, 237 M 234, 773 P2d 1206 (1989). See also Lutz v. Nat'l Crane Corp., 267 M 368, 884 P2d 455, 51 St. Rep. 810 (1994).

Motion for Mistrial Based on Counsel's Opening Statements Properly Denied: Defendant moved for a mistrial based on alleged prejudice stemming from opening statements made by counsel for a codefendant that implicated defendant but were unsupported by evidence. The judge properly exercised his discretion in denying the motion by instructing the jury that anything said by an attorney and not substantiated by the evidence was to be totally disregarded by the jury. St. v. Graves, 241 M 533, 788 P2d 311, 47 St. Rep. 483 (1990). See also St. v. Kolstad, 166 M 185, 531 P2d 1346 (1975).

No Error for Refusal to Allow Rebuttal Testimony: In a case involving the destruction of a building by fire, the trial court did not err in refusing to allow a retired firefighter to give his expert opinion on behalf of the plaintiffs during rebuttal testimony concerning the alleged negligent firefighting methods employed by the defendant city firefighters. The proposed testimony related to the issue of whether the city negligently fought the fire and was not a new matter raised by the defense; it was one of the main issues raised by the plaintiffs in their complaint. Having failed during their case in chief to meet the burden of proving that the defendant negligently fought the fire, the plaintiffs cannot then assert that the city's alleged negligent firefighting was a new issue first raised by the defense and open to rebuttal testimony. Massman v. Helena, 237 M 234, 773 P2d 1206, 46 St. Rep. 764 (1989).

Plaintiff's Counsel and Witnesses — Reference During Trial to Defendants' Legal Duty: The trial court granted the defendants' motion to prohibit the plaintiff, witnesses, or counsel from referring to or indicating to the jury that the defendant owed a duty other than not to intentionally inflict emotional distress on the plaintiff. The court further ruled that neither party could refer to a duty of the defendant, of whatever scope or nature, until closing arguments, after the jury instructions had been read to the jury. The Supreme Court held that the order was overbroad. Under 25-7-301, either counsel may briefly state his case and the evidence he expects to introduce to support it, and may refer in opening statements to evidence to be adduced, if those statements are made in good faith and with reasonable grounds to believe the evidence is admissible. State ex rel. Fitzgerald v. District Court, 217 M 106, 703 P2d 148, 42 St. Rep. 1061 (1985).

Evidence After Case in Chief — Permissible Uses: Parties are not confined to rebuttal evidence after the close of the case in chief if the court, in the furtherance of justice, permits them for good reasons to offer evidence in their original cause—for example, when it is offered to counter a new matter offered by the other party. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Girton, 215 M 408, 697 P2d 1362, 42 St. Rep. 500 (1985).

Surprise Evidence After Case in Chief — Other Party's Rights: Defendants claimed they were surprised by plaintiff's evidence admitted after plaintiff's case in chief. Defendants requested only 10 minutes to prepare for the witness. It was granted. If they could not prepare they should have requested more time, and it was improper to allege on appeal that inadequate time to prepare was granted. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Girton, 215 M 408, 697 P2d 1362, 42 St. Rep. 500 (1985).

Refusal to Admit Repetitive Testimony Upheld: Where the marriage of the parties was previously dissolved following a hearing in which testimony was introduced showing the effect of the wife's working upon the academic grades of the parties' child, the court did not err, upon hearing a petition for modification of the maintenance award, in refusing to admit testimony on the grades-work relationship that had been heard upon dissolution. The record indicates that the husband was not precluded, in the hearing upon the petition for modification, from introducing evidence concerning change in conditions since the dissolution decree. The District Court had sufficient information to determine if a change in circumstances had occurred, and testimony as to prior events was unnecessary. Tidball v. Tidball, 192 M 1, 625 P2d 1147, 38 St. Rep. 482 (1981).

Attorney's Fees Lien Foreclosure: Attorney's fees are recoverable by the prevailing party in a lien foreclosure action. The fact that evidence of attorney's fees was allowed to be presented upon reopening of plaintiff's case in chief is within the discretion of the trial court, and defendant made no showing that he was injured by the manner in which the evidence was presented. Maxwell v. Anderson, 181 M 215, 593 P2d 29 (1979).

Failure to Properly Instruct: There was a complete failure to instruct the jury on damages and to properly instruct the jury on the issues relating to respondent's counterclaims. Hence, the trial court decision was vacated and remanded for a new trial. Billings Leasing Co. v. Payne, 176 M 217, 577 P2d 386 (1978).

Basis for Approving Instructions: The trial court did not err in refusing certain instructions when repetitious, misleading, or an incorrect statement of the law or in giving instructions which were a correct statement of all relevant rules that have emerged from accepted case authorities. McGee v. Burlington N., Inc., 174 M 466, 571 P2d 784 (1977).

Instructions to Jury — Waiver of Objections: Plaintiff gave implied consent and waived objection by actively participating without objection in proceedings wherein trial court gave oral answer to question asked by the jury and orally confirmed the correctness of other instructions orally stated by counsel. Seder v. Peter Kiewit Sons' Co., 156 M 322, 479 P2d 448 (1971).

Argument — Measure of Damages: In an action by a father for the wrongful death of his infant son it was not reversible error for the trial court to permit the plaintiff's counsel, over objection, in their argument to the jury, to suggest a mathematical basis for fixing damages for loss of love, affection, and companionship on a per diem basis, where the trial judge instructed the jury that any remark of counsel not sustained by the evidence should be disregarded. Wyant v. Dunn, 140 M 181, 368 P2d 917 (1962).

Rebuttal Evidence — Limitations: Rebutting evidence is confined to that which tends to counteract new matter offered by the adverse party. Gustafson v. N. Pac. Ry., 137 M 154, 351 P2d 212 (1960), followed in Miller v. Frasure, 264 M 354, 871 P2d 1302, 51 St. Rep. 233 (1994). Miller was followed in Travelers Indem. Co. v. Andersen, 1999 MT 201, 295 M 438, 983 P2d 999, 56 St. Rep. 782 (1999).

Argument — Opening and Closing — Eminent Domain: In eminent domain proceedings the party upon whom the burden of proof rests is entitled to open and close. St. v. Peterson, 134 M 52, 328 P2d 617 (1958).

Rebuttal Evidence — Discretion of Court: In the matter of order of rebuttal proof the trial court is permitted to exercise a reasonable discretion, subject to review only in case of abuse thereof. Spurgeon v. Imperial Elevator Co., 99 M 432, 43 P2d 891 (1935).

Argument — Opening and Closing — Burden of Proof: Defendant in an action to recover the purchase price of machinery, who sought by his answer to defeat plaintiff's right to recover on the ground that fraud had been practiced upon him in making the sale and who had the affirmative of every issue raised by the pleadings, had the right to open and close. Connelly Co. v. Schlueter Bros., 69 M 65, 220 P 103 (1923).

Rebuttal Evidence Properly Excluded: Where plaintiff did not inject any new matter in rebuttal and defendants did not ask leave to offer evidence in their original case or make any offer of proof, refusal to permit them to introduce testimony in surrebuttal was not an abuse of discretion. First Nat'l Bank of Saco v. Vagg, 65 M 34, 212 P 509 (1922).

Argument — Opening and Closing — Counterclaim: Where, at the close of plaintiff's case, it was stipulated that if plaintiff was entitled to judgment in an action on a contract of lease of sheep, it was to be for a certain amount. The defendant, relying on counterclaims for damages, had the burden of proof and the right to open and close the argument. Power & Bro., Ltd. v. Turner, 37 M 521, 97 P 950 (1908).

JURY INSTRUCTIONS

Failure to Fairly and Fully Instruct Jury on Applicable Law Regarding Timeliness of Claims — Reversible Error: The plaintiff filed claims against the defendant railroad, his longtime employer, under the Federal Employers' Liability Act for cumulative trauma injury. The plaintiff requested a jury instruction that would instruct jurors that his claims were timely if his injury was caused at least in part by the defendant's negligence within the last 3 years. The District Court denied the jury instruction. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court had erred by not fully and fairly instructing the jury on the applicable law regarding the timeliness of the plaintiff's claims and remanded the matter for a new trial based, in part, on this error. Anderson v. BNSF Ry., 2015 MT 240, 380 Mont. 319, 354 P.3d 1248.

No Error in Jury Instruction — Learned Intermediary Doctrine Not Determinative: A jury awarded $3.2 million to Stevens for Novartis' failure to warn of side effects associated with the drug Zometa. Novartis appealed on several grounds, including that the District Court erred by instructing the jury that Novartis had a duty to warn health care professionals other than Stevens' prescribing physician. Novartis argued that pursuant to the "learned intermediary" doctrine, its duty to warn extended only to the prescribing physician. The Supreme Court disagreed, but on different grounds. The instruction allowed the jury to find that the label was inadequate or that the information provided to the prescribing physician was inadequate. Novartis could not prove the jury considered the duty to warn in reaching its verdict and thus could not prove prejudicial error on this basis. The scope of the "learned intermediary" doctrine was not determinative. Stevens v. Novartis Pharmaceuticals Corp., 2010 MT 282, 358 Mont. 474, 247 P.3d 244.

Jury Instructions Reviewed in Their Entirety for Applicable Law of the Case: It was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to give certain jury instructions given the conflicting evidence and the facts of the case. A party assigning error to a District Court's instruction must show prejudice in order to prevail, and prejudice will not be found if the jury instructions in their entirety state the applicable law of the case. DiMarzio v. Crazy Mtn. Constr., Inc., 2010 MT 231, 358 Mont. 119, 243 P.3d 718.

Failure to Define "Reasonably Clear" Liability in Jury Instruction — Reversible Error: The plaintiff, who was injured in a head-on automobile collision, filed a third-party bad faith insurance claim against the defendant insurer under the Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA). The plaintiff claimed that the District Court committed reversible error by failing to adequately instruct the jury on the definition of "reasonably clear" liability under UTPA. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded and held that the error in the instruction affected the jury's ability to determine whether the insurer violated UTPA. The Supreme Court adopted a standard for determining when liability is "reasonably clear" for purposes of UTPA, which is "when a reasonable person, with knowledge of the relevant facts and law, would conclude, for good reason, that the defendant is liable to the plaintiff." The Supreme Court noted that this is an objective test in which the trier of fact must consider the facts and circumstances and the relevant legal principles considered by the insurer when evaluating liability. In addition, following courts in Massachusetts and West Virginia, the Supreme Court held that liability is "reasonably clear" when "it is "clear enough" that reasonable people assessing the claim would agree on the issue of liability, and that the facts, circumstances, and applicable law leave little room for objectively reasonable debate about whether liability exists." Peterson v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 2010 MT 187, 357 Mont. 293, 239 P.3d 904.

Denial of Jury Instructions Based on Decisions From Court of Federal Claims Cases in Construction Contract Dispute — Sufficient Instruction to State Law of Case: In a construction contract case, defendants offered more than 60 jury instructions, including some that relied on cases from the U.S. Court of Federal Claims. The trial court refused to give the instructions based on federal authority, determining that there was no assurance that the federal cases were the law in Montana and that most of the proposed instructions verged on an argument that the jury would ultimately have to decide after deciding what the agreement was between the parties. Defendants appealed. The Supreme Court held that defendants failed to show how the proposed instructions were relevant to the fact issues before the jury, how exclusion of the instructions was prejudicial, or how the federal cases were binding on Montana courts. After reviewing all the jury instructions given by the District Court, the Supreme Court held that those instructions stated the applicable law of the case and that the District Court did not err in refusing the proposed instructions from the federal court. Murphy Homes, Inc. v. Muller, 2007 MT 140, 337 M 411, 162 P3d 106 (2007). See also Williams v. Union Fidelity Life Ins. Co., 2005 MT 273, 329 M 158, 123 P3d 213 (2005).

No Error in Defining Risk as Chance of Pecuniary Loss: The jury found for the plaintiff, Deonier, in a breach of fiduciary duty case against the insurer for which Deonier was a selling agent and awarded Deonier $1 million in punitive damages in addition to compensatory damages. The defendant argued that the lower court erred in defining risk as a chance of pecuniary loss rather than a likely risk that the plaintiff would suffer a pecuniary loss. The Supreme Court found the instruction acceptable on the grounds that Black's Law Dictionary defines risk as a "chance of injury, damage or loss". Deonier & Associates v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 2004 MT 297, 323 M 387, 101 P3d 742 (2004).

No Prejudice in Jury Instructions Explaining General Elements of Legal Malpractice: Plaintiffs contended that general instructions regarding the elements of legal malpractice given to the jury in a legal malpractice case were internally inconsistent, incomplete, and essentially confusing. Defendant attorney asserted that the jury was advised that the attorney had a duty to use the care and skill ordinarily used by lawyers practicing in Montana and that the jury was not confused by an instruction that did not recite every duty discussed by an expert. The Supreme Court agreed with defendant. Although the trial court might have crafted other instructions that may have better assisted the jury in considering the law applicable to the case, when taken as a whole, the instructions, when coupled with extensive expert testimony for both parties, adequately described the attorney's standard of care and did not potentially mislead or confuse the jury, resulting in prejudice to plaintiffs. Byers v. Cummings, 2004 MT 69, 320 M 339, 87 P3d 465 (2004).

Jury Question Concerning Amount of Damages in Injury Case — Use of Special Verdict Form Not Abuse of Discretion: Ele alleged that he was injured in a motor vehicle accident for which Ehnes admitted liability. In the pretrial order, Ehnes agreed that the sole issue of fact at trial was the amount of Ele's accident-related injury and damage claims. The first question on the District Court's verdict form stated that Ehnes had admitted responsibility for the accident and asked if Ele was injured as a result. The jury said no and returned the verdict. Ele contended that the verdict form was inconsistent with instructions on negligence because it did not ask if Ehnes' conduct was the cause of damages. Ele also asserted that the verdict form should not have included the question of whether he was injured because the amount of injury was the only question for trial. The Supreme Court considered whether the District Court abused its discretion and decided that it did not. Causation was in fact the first issue posed in the instruction, and inclusion of that issue did not conflict with the pretrial order. The use of the term "accident-related" in the pretrial order confirmed that the issue remaining for trial was not merely the amount of Ele's damages, but the amount of damages caused by and related to the accident. Ele v. Ehnes, 2003 MT 131, 316 M 69, 68 P3d 835 (2003).

Oil and Gas Habendum Clause Obligating Maintenance of Production — Jury Instructions Allowing Consideration of Causes of Cessation of Production Improper When Evidence Shows Lack of Production of Paying Quantities: Actions to terminate oil and gas leases invoke two distinct inquiries: (1) whether the lease is producing in paying quantities; and (2) if not, whether the cessation in production is permanent or temporary. As an ownership-in-place state, in Montana, the lessee's interest terminates upon the occurrence of a stated event, which, under the habendum clause in effect here, was the cessation of production in paying quantities. Paying quantities is defined as the amount that would pay a small profit over the cost of operation, excluding the initial cost of bringing the well into production. Thus, the finder of fact must necessarily consider income generated from the property and the expenses incurred in its operation. However, in an effort to mitigate the harshness of the automatic termination rule, courts developed the temporary cessation of production rule, which shifts the burden to defendant to prove that cessation is temporary once plaintiff establishes that the lease has halted production. To determine whether a cessation is temporary or permanent, a jurisdiction considers the cause of the cessation, the time reasonably required to restore production, and the diligence exercised by the lessee in restoring production. Ownership-in-place jurisdictions generally limit temporary cessations to mechanical or production breakdowns. If there is a lack of market, if the lease is capable of producing in paying quantities, and if the lessee is using reasonable diligence to market the product, Montana law considers the lease as one that is producing in paying quantities and will not reach the temporary cessation of production question. The District Court in this case allowed jury consideration of oil prices, economic considerations, and defendant's financial condition in determining whether cessation was temporary or permanent. However, plaintiff established that the leases in question failed to produce in paying quantities during the prescribed accounting period. At that point, analysis implicating economic factors concluded. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that allowing jury consideration of defendant's economic factors was an abuse of discretion and was prejudicial to plaintiff, warranting a new trial. Somont Oil Co., Inc. v. A&G Drilling, Inc., 2002 MT 141, 310 M 221, 49 P3d 598 (2002), following Berthelote v. Loy Oil Co., 95 M 434, 28 P2d 187 (1933), and Christian v. A. A. Oil Corp., 161 M 420, 506 P2d 1369 (1973). On remand, defendants bore the burden of proving that cessation of production on all eight leases at issue was temporary, that all cessations in production were caused by sudden involuntary stoppages or mechanical breakdown of the wells, and that defendants engaged in diligent efforts to immediately restore production. However, given a complete lack of evidence from defendants as to why the majority of wells failed to operate and whether repairs were undertaken, there was no basis for submitting the question of temporary cessation to the jury, and plaintiff was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Additionally, the District Court did not err in limiting retrial to the second inquiry articulated in Somont I, id., concerning whether the cessation in production was permanent or temporary or in limiting the timeframe for which evidence could be presented regarding restoration of production to the leases. Somont Oil Co., Inc. v. A&G Drilling, Inc., 2006 MT 90, 332 M 56, 137 P3d 536 (2006).

Following remand pursuant to Somont Oil Co., Inc. v. A&G Drilling, Inc., 2006 MT 90, 332 M 56, 137 P3d 536 (2006) (Somont II), plaintiff filed a renewed motion seeking damages for defendant's plugging the wells on the conceded leases. The District Court held that the damage claim was barred by res judicata. Plaintiff appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The issue of damages was part of the litigation from the beginning in 1998. In the appeal that resulted from Somont II, plaintiff did not argue that it did not have a full opportunity to litigate whether damages were due, and nothing in the record indicated that plaintiff was precluded from litigating for damages. The litigation came to a close upon the decision in Somont II, and plaintiff's further claim for damages was prohibited by res judicata because plaintiff was barred from relitigating a claim that it already had an opportunity to litigate. Somont Oil Co. v. A&G Drilling, Inc., 2008 MT 447, 348 M 12, 199 P3d 241 (2008).

Jury Instructions Regarding Causation and Superseding, Intervening Cause Not Conflicting: Onstad was assaulted on the job and sued the employer, Payless Shoesource (Payless), for failure to provide a safe workplace. Although conceding that the jury instructions were correct statements of the law, Payless nevertheless asserted that the instructions, when read together, were confusing regarding Payless's liability when the case involved a defense of superseding, intervening cause. The Supreme Court found that the instructions were appropriate and not conflicting and that nothing in the record indicated that the jury was confused. The jury sent out no written questions to the court and deliberated less than 2 hours before unanimously agreeing on its answers to six special verdict questions. Onstad v. Payless Shoesource, 2000 MT 230, 301 M 259, 9 P3d 38, 57 St. Rep. 943 (2000).

Agricultural Lease — No Error in Failure to Give Instruction on Implied Contract Covenant to Farm in Workmanlike Manner — Express Lease Terms Stricter Than Requested Instruction on Implied Term: The Schumachers leased property that they owned to Stephens through an agricultural lease. The lease required Stephens to farm with "diligence and care" and to do "all work necessary . . . and to the best interest of lessor, all in such time and manner as shall be to the best advantage and economy". The Schumachers sued Stephens, alleging that Stephens breached the implied contract covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The District Court refused to give the Schumachers' requested instruction on an implied covenant in the lease that would have required Stephens to farm the property in a "competent, skilled, workmanlike and husbandlike fashion". The Supreme Court noted that: (1) the District Court was correct in not giving an instruction on negligence because the Schumachers' complaint and evidence contained no such theory; (2) the District Court did instruct on the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing; (3) the standard of care required of Stephens was expressly stated in the lease itself; and (4) the Schumachers had not shown that they were prejudiced by the failure to give the requested instruction. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that it was not error for the District Court to refuse to give an instruction on an implied covenant to farm in a workmanlike manner. Schumacher v. Stephens, 1998 MT 58, 288 M 115, 956 P2d 76, 55 St. Rep. 247 (1998).

Agricultural Lease — No Error in Failure to Give Plaintiffs' Instruction on Effect of Material Participation Provisions — Instruction on Mutual Cooperation Held Sufficient: The Schumachers leased property that they owned to Stephens through an agricultural lease. Later, when the Schumachers sued Stephens over Stephens' failure to comply with the terms of the lease, Stephens claimed in defense that the Schumachers had breached the material participation agreements in the lease and that therefore he was excused from compliance. The Schumachers requested an instruction stating that if the jury found that Stephens failed to cooperate with the plaintiffs, then Stephens was not entitled to claim that he was excused from liability because of his contention that the Schumachers breached the material participation agreements in the lease. The District Court refused to give the instruction and instead gave an instruction stating that "the failure of a party to fully perform a contract is excused if his performance is prevented or delayed by the conduct of the other party". The Supreme Court noted that the Schumachers had not shown that they were prejudiced in any way by the failure of the District Court to give the requested instruction. Citing Fillinger v. NW. Agency, Inc., of Great Falls, 283 M 71, 938 P2d 1347 (1997), the Supreme Court held that: (1) a party assigning error to a refused instruction must show that the party was prejudiced by the refusal; and (2) the refused instruction must be reviewed in the context of the instructions that were given and the evidence produced at trial. Under these standards, the Supreme Court held that the instruction given by the District Court was sufficient. Schumacher v. Stephens, 1998 MT 58, 288 M 115, 956 P2d 76, 55 St. Rep. 247 (1998).

Evidence to Be Offered on Jury Instruction:

A party is not prejudiced by the refusal of a proposed jury instruction when the subject matter of the instruction is not applicable to the pleadings and facts or is unsupported by evidence introduced at trial. Harwood v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 285 M 481, 949 P2d 651, 54 St. Rep. 1257 (1997), following King v. Zimmerman, 266 M 54, 878 P2d 895 (1994).

Plaintiff contends that it was error to fail to instruct the jury that the Public Service Commission was negligent as a matter of law for failing to act on the petition of the Rosebud County Commissioners requesting installation of warning devices at the railroad crossing where the accident occurred. Such an instruction would have injected an issue upon which neither side offered any evidence at trial. It is not error to refuse an instruction that is not supported by the evidence. Penn v. Burlington N., Inc., 185 M 223, 605 P2d 600 (1980).

Exclusion of Expert Testimony — Insufficient Factual Grounds and Testimony Directed to Question of Law: Plaintiffs contended that they attempted to introduce evidence of the applicability of the National Electrical Code (NEC) and the National Electrical Safety Code (NESC) through testimony of an expert and that it was error for the trial court to deny a jury instruction regarding the NEC and NESC. However, the instruction was properly denied because there were insufficient factual grounds to establish the relevancy of the NEC and NESC and because the expert's testimony was directed to a question of law. Harwood v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 285 M 481, 949 P2d 651, 54 St. Rep. 1257 (1997).

Refusal to Give Proposed Jury Instruction — Substantial Rights Not Affected — No Reversible Error: It is not reversible error for a District Court to refuse an offered instruction unless the refusal affects the substantial rights of the party that proposed the instruction. Barthule v. Karman, 268 M 477, 886 P2d 971, 51 St. Rep. 1423 (1994), following Cottrell v. Burlington N. RR Co., 261 M 296, 863 P2d 381 (1993).

Not Error to Fail to Instruct That Severity of Injury Did Not Mean There Must Be Negligence: A doctor in a medical malpractice case argued on appeal that the judge should have given a "mere fact of injury" instruction because no instruction was given to prevent the jury from believing that because the injuries were so severe, there must have been negligence. There was no error because the given instructions stated in part: (1) that plaintiff had the burden of proving the doctor was negligent, that the plaintiff was injured, and that the doctor's negligence was a proximate cause of plaintiff's injury; (2) that it is the doctor's duty to use the skill and learning ordinarily used in like cases by other doctors practicing in that same specialty and holding the same national board certification and that violation of that duty is negligence; and (3) that the proper test for determining negligence in a doctor's actions is whether the doctor meets the accepted standards of skill and care. O'Leyar v. Callender, 255 M 277, 843 P2d 304, 49 St. Rep. 1008 (1992).

Advice of Counsel as Affirmative Defense — When Jury Instruction Warranted: In order to warrant an instruction on the affirmative defense of advice of counsel, defendant must establish prima facie that he fully and fairly presented to counsel all facts within his knowledge. It is insufficient for defendant to describe the factual allegations underlying the prosecution and then testify generally that all facts were conveyed to the prosecutor. Rather, defendant must specifically testify as to the details of the information conveyed to the prosecutor at that time. Hill v. Burlingame, 244 M 246, 797 P2d 925, 47 St. Rep. 1580 (1990), citing Cornner v. Hamilton, 62 M 239, 204 P 489 (1922).

Jury Instruction on Issue of Retaliation for Participation in Discrimination Action: Acts of retaliation for participating in proceedings before the Human Rights Commission are discrimination actions separate and apart from the claim of discrimination in the original proceedings. Plaintiff is therefore entitled to jury instructions based on his claim of retaliation and is further entitled to comment on the retaliation in oral argument. Mahan v. Farmers Union Cent. Exch., Inc., 235 M 410, 768 P2d 850, 46 St. Rep. 96 (1989).

Instruction Adequate Concerning Shifting of Blame: Instruction adopted by the trial court was adequate in directing the jury that the only parties that could be held liable were those named in the suit at the time of trial. Rollins v. Blair, 235 M 343, 767 P2d 328, 46 St. Rep. 39 (1989).

Instruction in Comparative Negligence, Not Sudden Emergency: A jury instruction, which presented three standards of care expected of motor vehicle drivers and said that failure to meet the standards constituted negligence, was more concrete than the sudden emergency instruction banned in White v. Phillips, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986). Because it spoke to both drivers, it was considered an instruction in comparative negligence, not one in sudden emergency, and was properly given. Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 233 M 515, 761 P2d 401, 45 St. Rep. 1694 (1988).

"Cline Instruction" Improper Statement of Law Regarding DUI: A jury instruction approved by the Supreme Court in St. v. Cline, 135 M 372, 339 P2d 657 (1959), stating that a violation of 61-8-401 occurred if a person drove while impaired by alcohol to the "slightest degree", was held to no longer be a proper statement of the law in light of subsequent legislative amendments which specifically spell out the extent of the influence of intoxicants necessary for conviction. The court held that the instruction must be either revised or abandoned to conform with 61-8-401 and remanded for a new trial. Helena v. Davis, 222 M 492, 723 P2d 224, 43 St. Rep. 1447 (1986).

Jury Instruction Regarding Ambiguities in Product Labeling and Instructions for Use — Issue of Fact: Herbicide manufacturer contended the District Court erred in instructing the jury that ambiguities in the wording on product labels and in application instructions were to be construed against the manufacturers, claiming that this rule of construction was a rule of law for the court to apply and not a proper subject for a jury instruction. Plaintiff argued that the instruction was justified because the manufacturer presented the meaning of the application instructions as a factual issue at trial. The Supreme Court agreed, concluding that the jury instruction was a correct statement of law under the facts of the case. Vandalia Ranch, Inc. v. Farmers Union Oil & Supply Co., 221 M 253, 718 P2d 647, 43 St. Rep. 790 (1986).

Verbatim Reading of Unfair Claim Settlement Practices as Jury Instruction — Harmless Error: An insurer claimed the District Court erred in including in its charge to the jury a verbatim reproduction of the 14 proscribed unfair claim settlement practices contained in 33-18-201, contending that a majority of the practices had no applicability to this case. On appeal, the Supreme Court found there was at least an arguable basis for submission to the jury of 12 of the 14 practices enumerated, and that inclusion of the two inapplicable practices in the jury instruction was harmless and not prejudicial. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

Amending Special Verdict Form Several Hours After Jury Deliberations Began — Error: After several hours of deliberation, the jury returned with questions. In response to those questions, it was error for the court to amend the special verdict forms to include a determination by the jury as to whether a party acted willfully or wantonly. Although the instruction would not have been error if given at the proper time, the late inclusion denied the party the right to argue his case and properly present it before the jury. White v. Phillips, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986).

Sudden Emergency Instruction — No Longer to Be Used: The Supreme Court held that the sudden emergency instruction may no longer be used because the instruction, which provided a test for actions done in the course of a sudden emergency, added nothing to the established law applicable to any negligence case and might only leave an impression in the minds of jurors that a driver is somehow excused from the ordinary standard of care because an emergency existed. White v. Phillips, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986), distinguished in Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 233 M 515, 761 P2d 401, 45 St. Rep. 1694 (1988).

Duty to Warn of Known Danger — Lack of Warning of Known Danger as Defect: In a tort action over injury caused by a hay baler, the Supreme Court held, based on the holding of Brown v. N. Am. Mfg. Co., 176 M 98, 576 P2d 711 (1978), that it was error to instruct the jury that a manufacturer has no duty to warn a person who claims to be entitled to a warning if the person actually knows of the danger. Under the facts of this case, there is a duty to warn of a known danger if the product is unreasonably dangerous and lack of such warning can make an otherwise nondefective product defective. Tacke v. Vermeer Mfg. Co., 220 M 1, 713 P2d 527, 43 St. Rep. 123 (1986). Recognition of a failure to warn claim and the Brown criteria were applied in Riley v. Am. Honda Motor Co., Inc., 259 M 128, 855 P2d 196, 50 St. Rep. 714 (1993). See also Emery v. Federated Foods, Inc., 262 M 83, 863 P2d 426, 50 St. Rep. 1454 (1993), and Patch v. Hillerich & Bradsby Co., 2011 MT 175, 361 Mont. 241, 257 P.3d 383.

Tort Action — Refusal to Instruct on Party's Central Contention — Reversible Error: In a tort action, it was error for the District Court to refuse to instruct on the central contentions of the plaintiff and instead undertake to instruct the jury in an incomplete manner. Taken as a whole, the instructions did not allow the jury to consider plaintiff's central contentions regarding unnecessary hazard rendering the machine defective and unreasonably dangerous. It is reversible error to refuse to instruct on an important part of a party's theory of the case. Tacke v. Vermeer Mfg. Co., 220 M 1, 713 P2d 527, 43 St. Rep. 123 (1986).

Instruction on Duty to Examine Bank Statement That Was Not Sent: Trial court properly refused defendant bank's offered jury instruction on the duty of plaintiff depositor to examine statements and report errors within a reasonable time because the statements were not sent to depositor and there was no question in the case as to his unauthorized signature or as to alterations. Tribby v. NW. Bank of Great Falls, 217 M 196, 704 P2d 409, 42 St. Rep. 1133 (1985).

Instructions Expanding Pleadings — Prejudice Negated by New Trial on Other Grounds: The grant of a new trial negated any prejudice to defendant from unexpected proposed supplemental jury instructions submitted by plaintiff on the last court day before trial began. The defendant argued the additional instructions were in effect amendments to the pleadings and contained new legal theories. Tribby v. NW. Bank of Great Falls, 217 M 196, 704 P2d 409, 42 St. Rep. 1133 (1985).

Instructions on Statutes Preferred: In a wrongful death action arising out of a head-on collision, plaintiff offered instructions quoting federal and state laws which concern the dimming of headlights at night on the highway. The court gave the instruction concerning the federal regulations but refused to give the instruction quoting 61-9-220 and 61-9-221. Plaintiff pointed out that a violation of the federal regulation may be considered by the jury in determining negligence, while a violation of a Montana statute is negligence as a matter of law. The Supreme Court said it would have been preferable for the District Court to instruct on Montana statutes as they pertain to the use of high and low beams of headlights at night. The court also found that the instruction given was consistent with the statutes, so the jury was not misled. Lindberg v. Leatham Bros., Inc., 215 M 11, 693 P2d 1234, 42 St. Rep. 137 (1985).

Evidence Sufficient to Instruct in Tort Action on Driving Under Influence — Statutory Violation and Proximate Cause Instructions: During the course of a tort trial involving an automobile accident, some evidence was produced indicating the driver may have consumed some alcohol prior to the accident, and drug paraphernalia was found in his car. There was sufficient evidence to instruct the jury regarding driving under the influence. It was not error to give a jury instruction stating that a Montana statute makes it unlawful to drive under the influence because the instruction must be read in conjunction with other instructions, one of which provides that although conduct in violation of a statute constitutes negligence as a matter of law, such a violation is of no consequence unless it was the proximate cause of an injury suffered by the plaintiff. Foreman v. Minnie, 211 M 441, 689 P2d 1210, 41 St. Rep. 1478 (1984).

Negligence Instruction Commenting on Evidence — Theory of Instruction Covered by Other Instructions: Defendant's instruction based on the theory that codefendant was 100% negligent was denied because the court believed it commented on the evidence. Other instructions adequately covered the theory that codefendant was 100% negligent, and the jury found the codefendant 100% negligent. The instruction was thus properly denied. Ewing v. Esterholt, 210 M 367, 684 P2d 1053, 41 St. Rep. 1095 (1984).

Review of Jury Instructions — Balancing Required: When considering jury instructions it must be remembered that often a jury is deluged with numerous instructions, many of which attempt to explain complex questions of law. The court on review must therefore balance the possible confusion created by layer upon layer of instructions with the necessity of providing the appropriate legal theories. Goodnough v. St., 199 M 9, 647 P2d 364, 39 St. Rep. 1170 (1982).

"Sudden Emergency" Instruction Not to Be Given in Ordinary Auto Accident Cases:

As defendant passed codefendant driving downhill, codefendant speeded up and defendant cut in front of him while only 20 feet from an oncoming vehicle. Codefendant overturned in the other lane, and the next two oncoming vehicles were involved in a collision with him. Defendant's proposed sudden emergency doctrine instruction was properly refused. The instruction should not be given in an ordinary motor vehicle accident case. It is unnecessary and confusing, and the ordinary rules of negligence are applicable and sufficient. Further, a test for giving the instruction is that the perilous situation was not created by the person confronted by it and whom the instruction favors; in this case, whether defendant was negligent was very much in dispute, and the instruction was a comment on the evidence as it implied no negligence on his part. Ewing v. Esterholt, 210 M 367, 684 P2d 1053, 41 St. Rep. 1095 (1984).

Walter and Claire Eslinger were killed when a truck belonging to defendant collided with their automobile. The road was snow-covered and slick, and the intersection was rutted. When the Eslingers' car hit the rutted area, it began fishtailing. Defendant contended Eslinger lost control of his car and skidded into the truck's lane. Plaintiffs contended that the truck locked its brakes and jackknifed across the road. The trial court allowed a "sudden emergency" instruction, which was relied upon by defendant, and no negligence was found on the part of defendant. The Supreme Court said that the giving of the "sudden emergency" instruction was reversible error. In view of Montana's adoption of comparative negligence, the court admonished trial courts not to give the instruction in ordinary automobile accident cases. This does not create a different standard or diminish the existing standard to be applied in an emergency. The conduct required is still that of a reasonable man under the circumstances as they would appear to one using proper care. The emergency is only one of the circumstances to be considered. Eslinger v. Ringsby Truck Lines, Inc., 195 M 292, 636 P2d 254, 38 St. Rep. 1863 (1981).

"Mere Happening" Instruction — Propriety — No Inference Except Res Ipso Loquitur: Plaintiff, a mail carrier, was attempting to negotiate a left turn. Evidence was unclear as to whether he signaled for the turn. The roadway into which he was attempting to turn was a private driveway, open to public use. While turning he was struck by defendant who was attempting to pass. The road was lined for passing and visibility was clear. The jury was instructed that "[t]he mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone, does not give rise to legal inference that it was caused by negligence or that any party to this action was negligent or otherwise at fault". The Supreme Court said that it can be confusing to a jury to give this instruction and recommended against it, but held that it was not prejudicial error to give the instruction in this case in light of the facts of the case and other instructions given. The Supreme Court affirmed that the "mere happening" instruction is totally incompatible in res ipsa loquitur cases. It is the law in negligence cases that negligence may not be inferred from the happening of an accident, but that res ipsa loquitur is an exception to the rule. Sampson v. Snow, 194 M 392, 632 P2d 1122, 38 St. Rep. 1441 (1981).

Intent Crucial Factor — Evidence Not Overwhelming — "Sandstrom Instruction" Error: The defendant was tried and convicted of theft and burglary. A "Sandstrom type" instruction was given. The defendant appealed, claiming to have had his normal thought processes affected at the time by a drug overdose. The Supreme Court held that, under this set of facts, defendant's intent was a crucial fact question. The instruction was not worded to allow merely a permissive inference of the defendant's intent and could have been interpreted as mandatory. Since evidence of intent was not overwhelming, it was reversible error to give the instruction. St. v. Kyle, 192 M 374, 628 P2d 263, 38 St. Rep. 578Q (1981).

Jury Instruction on Procuring Cause — Real Estate Listing: The defendant contended it was error for the court to give instructions on procuring cause in a case involving payment of a real estate commission. The District Court did not err, as the instructions given were contractual interpretation instructions taken almost verbatim from Montana statutes. A contract is to be construed so as to make it definite, operative, and reasonable; words are to be understood in their usual sense; and technical words are to be interpreted in the sense used in the business to which they relate. In this case, the court did just that. In addition, because the instructions set forth the actual law of Montana for the construction of contracts, they are part of the contract itself. Barrett v. Balland, 191 M 39, 622 P2d 180, 37 St. Rep. 2038 (1980).

Acceptable Jury Instructions — Duty of Counsel to Present When Alleging Improper Instruction: Defendant in a sexual intercourse without consent trial relied on the theory that the victim consented. Since evidence supporting the theory was admitted, defendant argued that the jury should have been instructed regarding that theory. Each of defendant's offered consent instructions was replete with misleading statements and misstatements of Montana law. Failure to present a specific acceptable instruction regarding its own theory precludes the defense from alleging reversible error for lack of proper instruction. St. v. Pecora, 190 M 115, 619 P2d 173, 37 St. Rep. 1742 (1980).

Cautionary Rape Instruction — Factors Requiring: The defendant was convicted of sexual intercourse without consent with his adopted 20-year-old daughter. The defendant offered and the trial court refused the cautionary "Smith instruction" that the charge of rape is easily made and difficult to disprove. This instruction is intended to be given in cases in which private malice, a motive for revenge on the part of the victim, or a lack of corroboration on the issue of consent is indicated. These factors were not present here, so it was not improper to refuse the instruction. St. v. Pecora, 190 M 115, 619 P2d 173, 37 St. Rep. 1742 (1980).

Jury Instructions to Be Based on Law: It was error for the trial court to instruct the jury using the Manual on Uniform Traffic Control Devices. This manual does not have the force of law and is merely advisory. Until the Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) acts with respect to the manual, it does not place a duty on any party. The jury should have been instructed on the statutory duties of the railroad with respect to operating trains over its crossings, its common-law duties with respect to safety in the exercise of ordinary care, and, as a correlative matter, the duties of a motorist, both statutory and common-law, at a railroad crossing. Runkle v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982 (1980).

Instruction Concerning County's Satisfaction of Judgment — Instructions Properly Refused: The District Court instructed the jury that it was not to concern itself with the manner in which Sanders County would pay any judgment rendered against it in this case. The District Court refused plaintiff's instruction on possible sources of payment. This was proper, since further instruction might have led the jury into speculation on issues not properly before it as trier of fact. Wollaston v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 192, 612 P2d 1277 (1980), followed in Eklund v. Wheatland County, 2009 MT 231, 351 M 370, 212 P3d 297 (2009).

Nonprejudicial Cumulative Error on Danger of Crossing: The court admitted part and refused part of the State of Montana's Railroad Crossing Protection Policy on the ground that the hazard rating for the railroad crossing in question was not necessarily connected to its hazard rating at the time of the accident. The District Court also admitted some and refused other evidence relating to traffic counts and hazard indexes. The District Court by instruction defined ordinary care and by further instructions told the jury that public authorities have the duty to exercise ordinary or reasonable care to plan and design the highways to make them reasonably safe for the traveling public. The District Court also instructed that the duty of the county in maintaining the crossing was commensurate with the increased hazard occasioned by any obstructions, so that it was the duty of the county to exercise ordinary care under the circumstances shown. Evidence was presented for the jury to consider in determining whether or not the county exercised ordinary care in failing to provide additional signal devices at the crossing. The claimed errors were therefore not prejudicial to plaintiff, since they were only cumulative on one side or the other of the issue of how hazardous the crossing was. Wollaston v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 192, 612 P2d 1277 (1980).

Assumption of Risk — Evidence Introduced to Support Instruction: Plaintiff contends that it was error to instruct the jury concerning assumption of risk, because the facts of this case do not involve the type of negligent behavior to which assumption of risk applies. Plaintiff contends assumption of risk applies only to a relationship between a plaintiff and a defendant, not between a plaintiff and a third party. The instruction was a correct statement of the law as it existed at the time. Conflicting evidence was admitted at trial as to whether plaintiff assumed the risk of his injuries by riding with an incompetent driver, so the instruction was properly given. Penn v. Burlington N., Inc., 185 M 223, 605 P2d 600 (1980).

Failure to Object to Instruction: Plaintiff argued that the District Court failed to charge the jury properly on the elements of negligent entrustment. He failed, however, to object to the instruction at trial. The contention that an instruction does not state the law cannot be considered on appeal absent a proper objection at trial. Penn v. Burlington N., Inc., 185 M 223, 605 P2d 600 (1980).

Jury Instruction on Negligence as Matter of Law — Effect of Department Manual: Plaintiff contended that it was error to refuse to instruct the jury that the State and Burlington Northern were negligent as a matter of law in failing to place signals on the railroad crossing where the accident occurred, in conformity with the Department of Highways' (now Department of Transportation's) Manual on Traffic Control Devices. The manual, however, does not have equal dignity with statutory law. Before the defendants can be charged with negligence in violating the manual, it must first be determined: (1) that the crossing was extra hazardous; and (2) that failure to install additional warning signals was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries. These were questions of fact for the jury since conflicting evidence was offered at trial, so no error was committed by failing to give the requested instructions. Penn v. Burlington N., Inc., 185 M 223, 605 P2d 600 (1980).

Jury Instruction Reciting Statute: The District Court recited section 11-614, R.C.M. 1947 (now repealed), when instructing the jury. Although this practice sets forth applicable statutes verbatim, it can cause confusion. In cases where multiple problems or circumstances are within the same statute or a statute is badly drawn, it is far better to develop one's own instruction. In a close circumstance it would be error to use the statute if for no other reason than that it has misled the jury. Tobacco River Lumber Co. v. Yoppe, 184 M 357, 602 P2d 1008 (1979).

GENERAL

Motion to Dismiss in Jury Trial — Reviewed as Motion for Directed Verdict: When a motion to dismiss was inadvertently granted in a jury trial, but both parties recognized the error and treated it as a motion for directed verdict, then the Supreme Court utilized rules for granting a motion for directed verdict in its review. In this case the District Court erred since the evidence clearly presents questions of fact and precludes judgment as a matter of law. Sant v. Baril, 173 M 14, 566 P2d 48 (1977).

Motions By Both Parties — Court to Try Facts and Law: Where both plaintiff and defendant move the court for a directed verdict, the trial judge becomes the trier of questions both of law and of fact. Granier v. Chagnon, 122 M 327, 203 P2d 982 (1949).

Failure to Object — No Denial of Right to Jury Trial: Where both parties to an action move for a directed verdict and the unsuccessful one does not request the court to submit any issue to the jury, he cannot complain on appeal that the right of trial by jury was denied him. Moore v. Crittenden, 62 M 309, 204 P 1035 (1922).

Directed Verdict or Discharge of Jury — Difference Not Material: It is not important in cases of failure of proof, whether the trial court directs the jury to render a verdict for either party, or discharges the jury and renders judgment; in either case the result is the decision of the court. Consol. Gold & Sapphire Min. Co. v. Struthers, 41 M 565, 111 P 152 (1910).

Directed Verdicts as to Law — Powers of Court Not Enlarged: This section permits a directed verdict when the case presents only questions of law, but it does not in any way enlarge the powers of the court as applied to the facts. Dunseth v. Butte Elec. Ry., 41 M 14, 108 P 567 (1910).

Judgment on a Directed Verdict as a Judgment on the Merits: A judgment on a directed verdict may or may not be a judgment on the merits, dependent upon the question decided by the court and the scope of the ruling. Dunseth v. Butte Elec. Ry., 41 M 14, 108 P 567 (1910), explained in McCulloch v. Horton, 102 M 135, 56 P2d 1344 (1936).

TEST APPLIED TO EVIDENCE — GENERAL RULE

Standard of Appellate Review: As set out in St. v. Mummey, 264 M 272, 871 P2d 868, 51 St. Rep. 198 (1994), the standard of review for a trial court's refusal to grant a defendant's motion for directed verdict is whether, after reviewing the evidence in a light most favorable to the prosecutor, any rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. St. v. Benson, 266 M 415, 880 P2d 1338, 51 St. Rep. 892 (1994).

In reviewing an order directing a verdict for the defendant, the Supreme Court would consider only the evidence of the plaintiff, excluding a bare scintilla but including every fair inference which might be drawn from the facts proved, as well as any evidence introduced by defendant which tended to support the plaintiff's case, and if the evidence viewed in the most favorable light tended to establish the case made by plaintiff's pleadings, the order would be reversed. McIntosh v. Linder-Kind Lumber Co., 144 M 1, 393 P2d 782 (1964).

Directed Verdict — Standard of Review: The test commonly employed to determine if the evidence is legally sufficient to withdraw cases and issues from the jury is whether reasonable men could draw different conclusions from the evidence. If only one conclusion is reasonably proper, the directed verdict is proper. Davis v. Sheriff, 234 M 126, 762 P2d 221, 45 St. Rep. 1783 (1988), following Semenza v. Leitzke, 232 M 15, 754 P2d 509, 45 St. Rep. 829 (1988). See also Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700, 53 St. Rep. 17 (1996).

Evidence of Jury Issues — No Directed Verdict: An insurer contended District Court Judge erred in not granting its motion for directed verdict so as to relieve it from extracontractual damages and for liability on its implied duty of good faith and fair dealing. A motion for directed verdict is properly granted only in the complete absence of any evidence to warrant submission to the jury. Had the insurer relied on admissible circumstantial evidence and promptly denied the claim, the Supreme Court would have been constrained to hold that the insured was not entitled to extracontractual or punative damages. However, the court found at least eight elements in the handling of the claim that made a jury issue of whether the insurer breached its duty of fair dealing. Noting that the jury had been properly instructed on the issue of good faith, no error was found in denying the motion for directed verdict. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

Directed Verdict Proper Only When Conclusions Must Follow as a Matter of Law: A cause should never be withdrawn from a jury unless the conclusion sought to be drawn from the facts must follow as a matter of law, and recovery cannot be had upon any view that could reasonably be drawn from the facts which the evidence tends to prove. Cremer v. Cremer Rodeo Land & Livestock Co., 181 M 87, 592 P2d 485 (1979).

Evidence Considered in Light Most Favorable to Plaintiff: Upon a motion for a directed verdict by the defendant, the evidence introduced by plaintiff will be considered in the light most favorable to plaintiff and as proving whatever it tends to prove. Cremer v. Cremer Rodeo Land & Livestock Co., 181 M 87, 592 P2d 485 (1979).

Review of Directed Verdict: In reviewing an order directing a verdict for defendant, the reviewing court will only consider the evidence introduced by the plaintiff and if that evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, tends to establish the case made by the plaintiff's pleadings the order will be reversed. Cremer v. Cremer Rodeo Land & Livestock Co., 181 M 87, 592 P2d 485 (1979).

When Directed Verdict Proper — Common Test: The test commonly used to determine if the evidence is legally sufficient to withdraw cases and issues from the jury is whether reasonable men could draw different conclusions from the evidence. If only one conclusion is reasonably proper then the directed verdict is proper. Cremer v. Cremer Rodeo Land & Livestock Co., 181 M 87, 592 P2d 485 (1979).

Differences by Reasonable Men — Jury Question: A jury question is presented only when reasonable men might differ as to the conclusions of fact to be drawn from the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to the party against whom the motion is made. Parini v. Lanch, 148 M 188, 418 P2d 861 (1966).

Insufficiency in Fact and Law: A directed verdict may be granted when the evidence is so insufficient in fact as to be insufficient in law. Parini v. Lanch, 148 M 188, 418 P2d 861 (1966).

Directed Verdict on Questions of Law: Direction to the jury to bring in a verdict for plaintiff is permissible when a case presents only a question of law. Hurley v. Star Transfer Co., 141 M 176, 376 P2d 504 (1962); Kraus v. Newman, 137 M 388, 352 P2d 261 (1960).

Directed Verdict Where Verdict to Be Set Aside: It follows that the court's action in directing a verdict for defendants was correct where the court would have been required to set the verdict aside had the cause of action been submitted to the jury resulting in a verdict for plaintiff. Erie v. Wahl, 116 M 515, 155 P2d 201 (1945).

No Conflict in Evidence: Where there is no conflict in the evidence, the situation is the same as where the facts are stipulated. Under such circumstances the case can present only a matter of law to be decided by the judge. Erie v. Wahl, 116 M 515, 155 P2d 201 (1945).

No Proof on One Side of Case: When one side of a case is without proof, the case is stripped of questions of fact, and presents only a question of law for decision by the court. Moore v. Crittenden, 62 M 309, 204 P 1035 (1922); Consol. Gold & Sapphire Min. Co. v. Struthers, 41 M 565, 111 P 152 (1910).

Uncontradicted Testimony Alone Insufficient: The fact that testimony is uncontradicted is not alone sufficient to warrant a directed verdict, where the inferences to be drawn from all the circumstances are open to different conclusions by reasonable men. First Nat'l Bank v. Wilson, 57 M 384, 188 P 371 (1920), distinguished in Lister v. Donlan, 85 M 571, 281 P 348 (1929).

One Conclusion by Reasonable Men: If a case is being tried to a jury, and the evidence is such that reasonable men can come to but one conclusion thereon, the court may, as the case requires, direct a verdict for the party entitled to it, or withdraw the case from the jury and render judgment. Old Kentucky Distillery v. Stromberg-Mullins Co., 54 M 285, 169 P 734 (1917); Milwaukee Land Co. v. Ruesink, 50 M 489, 148 P 396 (1915).

Question of Substantial Evidence as Question of Law: Whether there is any substantial evidence in the case, made by the party upon whom the burden rests, is always a question of law; if there is not, the court ought to withdraw the case from the jury and direct judgment. Escallier v. Great N. Ry., 46 M 238, 127 P 458 (1912).

Conclusion to Follow as a Matter of Law: No cause should ever be withdrawn from the jury unless the conclusion from the facts necessarily follows, as a matter of law, that no recovery could be had upon any view which could reasonably be drawn from the facts which the evidence tends to establish. Shaw v. New Year Gold Mines Co., 31 M 138, 77 P 515 (1904); McCabe v. Mont. Cent. Ry., 30 M 323, 76 P 701 (1904); Nord v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 30 M 48, 75 P 681 (1904); Michener v. Fransham, 29 M 240, 74 P 448 (1903); Cain v. Gold Mtn. Min. Co., 27 M 529, 71 P 1004 (1903).

Questions of Law Only: A verdict should not be directed unless the case presents only questions of law. Michener v. Fransham, 29 M 240, 74 P 448 (1903).

MOTION NOT TO BE GRANTED
SUFFICIENT CONTRARY EVIDENCE

Factual Issue Regarding Conspiracy Charge for the Jury — Motion for Directed Verdict Properly Denied: In a Youth Court proceeding in which the defendant was charged with conspiracy to commit criminal mischief by common scheme, the District Court appropriately denied the defendant's motion for a directed verdict. The state presented independent evidence tending to connect the defendant with the conspiracy to commit criminal mischief, which was correctly referred to the jury for resolution. In re T.J.B., 2010 MT 116, 356 Mont. 342, 233 P.3d 341.

Evidence of Sex Discrimination Warranting Submission to Jury — Directed Verdict Improper: Allison brought a claim against the town of Clyde Park, alleging disability, sex, and age discrimination in employment. At the close of Allison's case in chief, the court granted the town's motion for a directed verdict on the sex discrimination claim, but declined a similar motion on the age discrimination claim. The court allowed submission of both the age discrimination and disability claims to the jury, which returned a verdict against Allison on both claims. On appeal, Allison argued that the jury should also have been allowed to decide the sex discrimination claim. Motions for directed verdict are properly granted only when there is a complete absence of evidence to warrant submission to the jury when the evidence is considered in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion. Here, Allison produced evidence, although minimal, in support of the sex discrimination claim, so the directed verdict on that issue was incorrectly granted. The case was remanded for trial on the sex discrimination claim. Allison v. Clyde Park, 2000 MT 267, 302 M 55, 11 P3d 544, 57 St. Rep. 1119 (2000), followed in DiMarzio v. Crazy Mtn. Constr., Inc., 2010 MT 231, 358 Mont. 119, 243 P.3d 718.

Time of Discovery of Injury Because of Childhood Sexual Abuse as Jury Question — Motion for Directed Verdict Properly Denied: Substantial conflicts in the evidence existed regarding the time at which plaintiff discovered that her mental disorders were connected to sexual abuse that she experienced as a child. It is within the province of the jury to resolve conflicting evidence; therefore, the District Court properly denied defendant's motion for a directed verdict based on the time bar in 27-2-216. Werre v. David, 275 M 376, 913 P2d 625, 53 St. Rep. 187 (1996).

Disputed Facts — No Error in Failure to Direct Verdict of Negligence Per Se: Chad was hit, while on his bicycle, by a car driven by Matt. Matt testified that he stopped and looked at the intersection but did not see Chad on his bicycle. Chad's counsel requested that the District Court direct the jury to find that Matt was negligent as a matter of law, which the District Court refused to do. Citing Payne v. Sorenson, 183 M 323, 599 P2d 362 (1979), the Supreme Court held that a directed verdict would have been appropriate only if the undisputed facts showed that Matt was negligent. Here, there was a dispute as to whether Chad could have been seen if Matt had looked to see what could be seen. Because of the conflicting evidence, only the jury could resolve the issue. Chambers v. Pierson, 266 M 436, 880 P2d 1350, 51 St. Rep. 921 (1994).

Denial of Directed Verdict Proper — Sufficient Evidence to Create Question of Whether U.C.C. Notice Given: Defendant, Tezak, moved for a directed verdict on the basis that he was told by plaintiff's attorney to ignore the notice that his repossessed trucks were to be sold. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's denial of the motion, stating that there was sufficient evidence to let the jury decide if Tezak's right to ignore the notice was conditional. Mack Financial Corp. v. Tezak, 253 M 492, 834 P2d 396, 49 St. Rep. 556 (1992).

Alteration of Natural Accumulation of Ice and Snow — Directed Verdict Improper: Daily shoveling of a sidewalk resulting in a buildup of ice and snow on both sides of the sidewalk, coupled with the possible careless use of chemical de-icer, could have increased the hazard created by the natural accumulation of ice and snow and created a jury question which rendered a directed verdict improper. Case was reversed and remanded for a new trial. Boehm v. Alanon Club, 222 M 373, 722 P2d 1160, 43 St. Rep. 1341 (1986), citing Cereck v. Albertson's, Inc., 195 M 409, 637 P2d 509 (1981), and Willis v. St. Peter's Hosp., 157 M 417, 486 P2d 593 (1971). Boehm, Cereck, and Willis were overruled, as to the distinction between liability based upon natural versus altered accumulations of ice or snow that are open and obvious, in Richardson v. Corvallis Pub. School District No. 1, 286 M 309, 950 P2d 748, 54 St. Rep. 1422 (1997). Cereck was also overruled in Richardson as to the standard that a property owner is absolved of liability because a dangerous condition upon the premises is open and obvious. The Richardson standard was retroactively applied in Benson v. Heritage Inn, Inc., 1998 MT 330, 292 M 268, 971 P2d 1227, 55 St. Rep. 1341 (1998).

Evidence — When Sufficient to Support Verdict: Plaintiff appealed from jury verdict in favor of defendant, alleging the evidence did not support the verdict. The Supreme Court held that in order to overturn the verdict on the basis of insufficient evidence, it must find plaintiff entitled to judgment as a matter of law, and that there was insufficient evidence to warrant submitting the case to a jury. Here the court found credible evidence supporting a verdict either way and considered itself without power to set aside the decision of the trier of fact as a matter of law. The District Court properly denied plaintiff's motions for directed verdict and judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Gunlock v. W. Equip. Co., 219 M 112, 710 P2d 714, 42 St. Rep. 1882 (1985), followed in Weinberg v. Farmers St. Bank of Worden, 231 M 10, 752 P2d 719, 45 St. Rep. 391 (1988).

Traffic Accident at Uncontrolled Intersection — Factual Dispute on Vehicles Entering Intersection at Same Time: It was error to grant a directed verdict on the issue of liability under 61-8-339 in favor of the driver of a vehicle entering an uncontrolled intersection from the right when there was a factual issue on whether the vehicles entered the intersection at the same time. Thibaudeau v. Uglum, 201 M 260, 653 P2d 855, 39 St. Rep. 2096 (1982).

Directed Verdict Denied — Issues of Fact: The court was correct in refusing to direct a verdict for plaintiff, or any party, when the trial issues involved questions of fact regarding the negligence of defendants and contributory negligence of plaintiff and when a review of the record demonstrated no clear preponderance of evidence on either side justifying a directed verdict. Lawlor v. County of Flathead, 177 M 508, 582 P2d 751 (1978).

Actual and Constructive Fraud: When applying the standard for ruling on a motion for directed verdict, the Supreme Court concluded that the evidence presented was entitled to jury consideration and therefore the directed verdict was properly denied. Harrington v. Holiday Rambler Corp., 176 M 37, 575 P2d 578 (1978).

Proximate Cause — Jury Question: The court properly refused to grant a directed verdict against defendant for failing to keep its brakes from freezing and in failing to display brake lights and keep them free from snow because whether such violations proximately caused the death of plaintiff's husband was a question of fact for the jury to determine. However, the erroneous jury instruction on the sudden emergency doctrine necessitated a new trial on the issue of liability. Kudrna v. Comet Corp., 175 M 29, 572 P2d 183 (1977).

Motion Denied — Sufficiency of Evidence: There was sufficient evidence of an FSAA violation to submit the issue to the jury. McGee v. Burlington N., Inc., 174 M 466, 571 P2d 784 (1977).

Valid Will: Directed verdict upholding contested will was improper where, under the evidence, reasonable and fairminded men might have reached the conclusion that the will was invalid due to fraud, undue influence, or lack of testamentary capacity. Estate of Hall v. Milkovich, 158 M 438, 492 P2d 1388 (1972), distinguished in Estate of Powers, 163 M 67, 515 P2d 368 (1973).

Dull Hand Pick: Evidence in an action by a section hand for personal injuries sustained by reason of a defective pick which had become so dull that instead of breaking a rock it scattered particles thereof causing one of such particles to strike him in the eye, was sufficient to justify a jury in finding that the pick was not in a reasonably safe condition for use, and the court erred in ordering a directed verdict for defendant railway company. Johnson v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 71 M 390, 230 P 52 (1924).

Action on Check: Where in an action by a bank to recover a balance alleged due from defendant on a check given it some 5 years prior to the bringing of the action, defendant contending that the check had been paid but after cancellation had never been returned to him, the evidence, conflicting in character, showing that, though defendant was a large depositor in the bank, the check had never been charged to his account nor a record made of it upon plaintiff's books, the court erred in directing a verdict in favor of plaintiff, the showing made by defendant having been sufficient to sustain a judgment in favor of defendant. Rosebud St. Bank v. Kesl, 68 M 518, 219 P 814 (1923).

Any Substantial Evidence: A verdict cannot be directed for defendant where substantial evidence is introduced prior to the motion for direction which in any way tends to support plaintiff's contention, the weight of such evidence being a question for the jury. Moran v. Ebey, 39 M 517, 104 P 522 (1909); Lehane v. Butte Elec. Ry., 37 M 564, 97 P 1038 (1908); Ball v. Gussenhoven, 29 M 321, 74 P 871 (1904).

MOTION TO BE GRANTED
SUFFICIENT CONTRARY EVIDENCE

Directed Verdict in a Res Ipsa Case: It is proper for a District Court to grant a motion for a directed verdict in a res ipsa case if the inference of negligence is so strong that persons of reasonable minds could not reach differing conclusions as to the negligence of the defendant. Helmke v. Goff, 182 M 494, 597 P2d 1131 (1979).

Directed Verdict in Contested Will Proceedings: When upon trial of an issue by a jury the case presents only questions of law, the judge may direct the jury to return a verdict in favor of the party entitled thereto. Where there is no substantial evidence of incompetency at the time of making the will, it is error to allow the issue to go to the jury. In re Estate of Monaco, Monaco v. Cecconi, 180 M 111, 589 P2d 156 (1979).

Proof of Manufacturer Defect: The trial court did not err in granting defendants' motion for directed verdict when plaintiff failed to prove that the defect that caused an engine fire existed when the vehicle left the hands of the defendants — a necessary element in breach of implied warranty of merchantability, strict liability, and res ipsa loquitur legal theories. St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co. v. Jeep Corp. & Am. Motors Sales, 175 M 69, 572 P2d 204 (1977).

Negligence Per Se — Directed Verdict: The trial court should have granted a directed verdict against defendant truckdriver who carelessly placed himself in a position of not being able to stop behind codefendant's truck and negligently passed to avoid collision but collided instead with an oncoming vehicle in which plaintiff's husband was a passenger. The trial court was in error to instruct the jury on sudden emergency when the driver's negligence created his own emergency. Kudrna v. Comet Corp., 175 M 29, 572 P2d 183 (1977).

Issue of Fact or Law: Where plaintiff was waiting to make a left turn because of an oncoming pickup truck and was struck from the rear by defendant's truck it was reversible error for District Court to deny plaintiff's motion for a direct verdict as her conduct could not have constituted contributory negligence as a matter of law because the law does not contemplate a standard of care so lofty as to require the driver of a preceding vehicle to vacate its lawful location in order to clear the way for an admittedly negligent driver approaching from the rear as one is not required to anticipate the negligence of another. Grabs v. Missoula Cartage Co., 169 M 216, 545 P2d 1079 (1976).

Evidence Not Introduced: In negligence suit, defendant was entitled to directed verdict where only evidence attempting to establish proximate causal connection between breach of duty and plaintiff's injuries and damages was reports of persons not present at trial, which were private documents and not part of a case file of attending physicians. Pickett v. Kyger, 151 M 87, 439 P2d 57 (1968), distinguished in Klaus v. Hillberry, 157 M 277, 485 P2d 54 (1971).

Destroyed Building: Denial of motion for directed verdict by lessor of destroyed building being sued by lessee claiming that premises were repairable was cause for reversal where, viewing evidence most favorable to plaintiff lessee and considering as proven everything which evidence tended to prove, reasonable man could come to no other conclusion but that building was destroyed. Solich v. Hale, 150 M 358, 435 P2d 883 (1967).

Every Reasonable Precaution Taken: Owner of building destroyed by gas explosion was entitled to directed verdict against general contractor who was clearly liable on evidence, but not against gas company who should have been granted its motion for directed verdict on record unequivocally demonstrating that gas company took every reasonable precaution to protect customers as required by law. Bridges v. Moritz, 149 M 273, 425 P2d 721 (1967).

Collision With Horse: Directed verdict on liability of defendant for injuries sustained by plaintiff, when defendant's car struck mare which was being led by rope attached to saddle on gelding upon which plaintiff was riding, was proper where negligence of defendant was shown by evidence that defendant had been drinking; that he was driving the car at 30-35 mph while passengers were hunting gophers beside the road; that defendant was not aware of the mare which he struck until the collision was inevitable; and that he failed to stop after realizing that he had struck horse in violation of 61-7-103. Parini v. Lanch, 148 M 188, 418 P2d 861 (1966).

Failure of Party to Introduce Testimony — Motion Improperly Granted: Where in an action to recover the purchase price of fire-extinguishing apparatus the defendant interposed a counterclaim for $10,000 for breach of the contract, the failure of plaintiff to introduce any testimony did not authorize the trial court to direct a verdict for defendant in that amount for unliquidated damages, the weight to be given to the defendant's testimony and the amount recoverable by him having been within the exclusive province of the jury. Gen. Fire Extinguisher Co. v. NW. Auto Supply Co., 70 M 1, 223 P 504 (1924).

Defense Based on Hearsay: Where the evidence of the plaintiff in support of his claim was clear and satisfactory, and that of the defendant consisted of an affidavit which was hearsay, the court was authorized to direct a verdict in plaintiff's favor. Bean v. Missoula Lumber Co., 40 M 31, 104 P 869 (1909).

Application to Hung Jury — Findings and Conclusions Improper: In an action at law, after the case has been submitted to the jury, which failed to agree upon a verdict, the court cannot make findings of fact and conclusions of law and base a judgment thereon, but should direct that the case be tried again. Murray v. Hauser, 21 M 120, 53 P 99 (1898).

Part 4
Conduct of Jury

25-7-401. View by jury of the premises.

Case Notes

General 248
Discretion of Trial Court 249

GENERAL

No Objection to Jury View — New Trial Not Granted: Plaintiff contended that District Court erred in not granting a new trial when the jury was allowed to view the property prior to the time the plaintiff rested her case and in not giving a cautionary instruction. However, the record showed that plaintiff's counsel made no objection to the jury view and did not request a cautionary instruction. The Supreme Court found no District Court error for a procedure to which plaintiff did not object. Bushnell v. Cook, 221 M 296, 718 P2d 665, 43 St. Rep. 825 (1986).

Visits to Scene — Purpose: In considering a motion to suppress evidence discovered during a search of the defendant's motel room, the trial judge visited the room under circumstances allegedly similar to those on the night of the search. In expressing its disapproval of the trial court's participation in the recreation of the scene, the Supreme Court stated that visits to the scene should be designed for the trier of fact to view the scene, not for the trier of fact to place himself in the shoes of one of the parties. St. v. Wilson, 218 M 359, 708 P2d 270, 42 St. Rep. 1647 (1985).

Time of Viewing — Alterations to Premises: Where alterations to defendant's bowling alley had little relationship to the cause of the accident, it was not an abuse of discretion to allow the jury to view the premises on which the accident occurred after the alterations had been made. Clark v. Worrall, 146 M 374, 406 P2d 822 (1965).

Time of Viewing — Eminent Domain: While the matter of permitting the jury in eminent domain proceedings to view the lands sought to be condemned lies within the sound discretion of the trial court, and though permission to view prior to the reception of the testimony may not be held an abuse of discretion in all cases, the better practice is not to permit a view until the case has sufficiently progressed to the point where it is known what the various items of damages to be considered are. St. v. Bradshaw Land & Livestock Co., 99 M 95, 43 P2d 674 (1935).

Failure to Object to Viewing as Waiver of Review of Viewing Order: By failing to object to an order of the trial court, made in its discretion and at the close of the testimony in a prosecution for murder, permitting the jury to view an automobile in which the shooting occurred, defendant waived his right to secure a review of the propriety of the order urged on the ground that no proper foundation had been laid for the view in that it was not shown that the car was in the same condition as at the time of the killing. St. v. Cates, 97 M 173, 33 P2d 578 (1934).

Presence of Defendant at Viewing — Waiver of Right: Since the only purpose of a view by the jury of the place where a homicide was committed is to enable the jurors better to understand the evidence heard by them at the trial, and since testimony may not there be taken for any purpose, the defendant may waive his right to be present at the viewing, and where he did not make a request for permission to be present at the view of an automobile in and near which the shooting occurred, he waived his right in that behalf. St. v. Cates, 97 M 173, 33 P2d 578 (1934).

Excessive Damages — Jury Award Not Conclusive in Spite of Viewing: Since in ordinary civil actions where the jury has viewed the premises charged by plaintiff to have been damaged, its verdict is not conclusive as to the amount awarded, the same rule prevails in condemnation proceedings, and therefore the trial court in such proceedings may set the verdict aside and grant a new trial if it appears that the verdict is excessive. St. v. Anderson, 92 M 313, 13 P2d 228 (1932).

Purpose of Viewing: The purpose of the view provided for herein is to enable the jury to apply the testimony of the witnesses to the observed conditions about which they have spoken, and also to determine the truth of statements made by them with reference to these conditions. Ferris v. McNally, 45 M 20, 121 P 889 (1912).

Observations to Be Considered by Jury: It is proper for a jury, who has viewed the property which is the subject of litigation, to take into consideration the result of its observations in connection with the evidence in deliberating upon the verdict. Ormund v. Granite Mtn. Min. Co., 11 M 303, 28 P 289 (1891), distinguished in Murray v. Heinze, 17 M 353, 42 P 1057 (1895). See also White v. Barling, 36 M 413, 93 P 348 (1907); St. v. Landry, 29 M 218, 74 P 418 (1903).

DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT

No Error in Denying Jury View of Property Given Practical Implications and Likely Probative Value: After complaining about their neighbor's yard lights, defendants erected a 26-foot-high fence between the properties and covered the fence with two layers of dark material, ostensibly to block the glare from plaintiffs' yard lights. Plaintiffs brought an action asserting that the fence was a nuisance that destroyed the aesthetic beauty of their property, reduced the property's value, destroyed plaintiffs' view, and was an eyesore. Plaintiffs requested that in order for the jury to determine whether the fence was a nuisance, the jury should be allowed to view the property both during the day and at night. Plaintiffs contended that photographs, diagrams, and visual media used at trial were insufficient to establish the true character of the fence or the view it obstructed. Defendants objected to a jury view on grounds that it would be impractical, add to litigation costs, and be unfair because the material conditions of the property had changed significantly since the suit was filed. Near the end of trial, the District Court reviewed the sufficiency of the photographs and other evidence and determined that a jury view was unnecessary. Plaintiffs appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court appropriately weighed the practical implications and the likely probative value of a jury view, and it was within the discretion of the trial court to deny the motion for a jury view. Tarlton v. Kaufman, 2008 MT 462, 348 M 178, 199 P3d 263 (2008).

Viewing Within Discretion of Trial Court: A viewing is within the discretion of the trial court, even where there has been a change in the condition of the scene of the accident or the thing which contributed to the accident. Clark v. Worrall, 146 M 374, 406 P2d 822 (1965), followed in McJunkin v. Kaufman, 229 M 432, 748 P2d 910, 44 St. Rep. 2111 (1987). See also Murphy Homes, Inc. v. Muller, 2007 MT 140, 337 M 411, 162 P3d 106 (2007).

Abuse of Discretion Required: Refusal of trial court to permit jury to view premises will not be reviewed by the Supreme Court in the absence of a showing of an abuse of discretion. Puetz v. Carlson, 139 M 373, 364 P2d 742 (1961).

Refusal to View Mine: Where, in a personal injury suit, drawings of the machinery, the faulty condition of which plaintiff alleged as the cause of his injury, had been presented to the jury for inspection, and upon inquiry by the court, the jurors all stated that they understood the situation, the court acted within its discretion when it refused to direct a view of the machinery itself, at a mine a considerable distance from the place of trial. Stephens v. Elliott, 36 M 92, 92 P 45 (1907).

Clear Error Required: The language of this section leaves the question whether the jury shall be allowed to inspect the premises in the discretion of the trial court, and its refusal to permit the inspection will not be reviewed by the Supreme Court, in the absence of a clear showing of error. Maloney v. King, 30 M 158, 76 P 4 (1904).

25-7-402. Admonition when jury permitted to separate.

Case Notes

Juror's Affidavit of Juror Misconduct — Inadmissible Under Ahmann Exception — No Evidence of External Influence — Right to Fair and Impartial Jury Not Violated: Berg argued that he was entitled to a new trial because of jury misconduct and attached to his motion the affidavit of juror Flinders stating that juror Carroll said at one point during the trial, in regard to witness testimony: "That's it; that's all I need to hear; it's all over." The affidavit also stated that juror Carroll pointed to another juror and said in regard to the juror, "That's one we'll have to convince." The Supreme Court noted that although affidavits are usually used to prove juror misconduct under 25-11-102(2), they may also, under the exception rationale used in Ahmann v. Am. Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 235 M 184, 766 P2d 853 (1988), be used pursuant to 25-11-102(1) when the only two people with knowledge of the infraction are a juror and another person. However, the Supreme Court found that the Ahmann exception did not apply when the communication was between jurors. The Supreme Court also discussed the applicability of Rule 606(b), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), and determined that the comments made by juror Carroll were not an external influence upon the jury and therefore did not fall within the exception to the general prohibition against use of juror affidavits to impeach a jury contained in Rule 606(b). Regarding Berg's final argument that the jury misconduct violated the District Court's instructions and Berg's right to a fair and impartial jury, the Supreme Court reviewed California case law raised by Berg and concluded that it was inapplicable in Montana. State ex rel. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. Berg, 279 M 161, 927 P2d 975, 53 St. Rep. 1098 (1996).

Out-of-Court Discussion Between Interested Witness and Juror About Matter Unrelated to Case — No Prejudice: It was not an error to deny plaintiff in a motor vehicle accident case a mistrial after a female officer for defendant corporation briefly spoke with three female jurors during a recess about a suspected rapist thought to be roaming the town. Plaintiff claimed that the conversation may have tended to establish some rapport between the corporate officer and the jurors because they discussed a matter of common concern to women. The District Court Judge investigated the matter and stated that the conversation was unrelated to the trial and did not prejudice the jurors. Mason v. Ditzel, 255 M 364, 842 P2d 707, 49 St. Rep. 986 (1992).

Mistrial Denied Despite Juror Misconduct — No Error: A juror disregarded trial court instructions by talking with a County Attorney, who assisted in the prosecution, about the propriety of allowing evidence of child abuse in open court. Another juror was seen entering Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) offices after evidence was allowed showing the agency was peripherally involved in the case, and there was evidence the juror discussed the defendant and her children during a conversation at a restaurant. Arguably, the jury misconduct tended to injure the defendant, and therefore prejudice should be presumed; however, the trial judge could determine that there was sufficient evidence to rebut the presumption. Since there was not clear and convincing evidence of error in denying a motion for mistrial, the ruling was affirmed. St. v. Murray, 228 M 125, 741 P2d 759, 44 St. Rep. 1394 (1987).

Case Notes

Improper for Bailiff to Give Jury Dictionaries: A bailiff who gave a jury, upon its request, an ordinary dictionary and a legal dictionary violated this section's provision that a bailiff may not, without the judge's permission, communicate with the jury. Allers v. Riley, 273 M 1, 901 P2d 600, 52 St. Rep. 920 (1995).

Jury's Use of Dictionary Definitions Conflicting With Instructions: The jury used an ordinary dictionary and a legal dictionary, improperly given to the jury by the bailiff at the jury's request, to look up the terms "proximate cause" and "prudent". The definitions relating to causation did not contain the foreseeability element that was contained in an instruction given to the jury. The jury's conduct constituted improper independent research on extraneous material that redefined the critical element of causation by effectively eliminating from the instruction any reference to foreseeability. This was sufficient to demonstrate probable prejudice and potential injury to defendant, against whom the jury returned a verdict in this action. At the very least, there was a reasonable probability that the jury's misconduct influenced its decision, and as a consequence, defendant's substantial rights were compromised, along with his right to a fair trial. The trial judge's denial of a new trial was reversed, and the case was remanded. Allers v. Riley, 273 M 1, 901 P2d 600, 52 St. Rep. 920 (1995).

Standard of Review of Grant or Denial of New Trial — Jury or Bailiff Misconduct: In the two most recent cases in which jury or bailiff misconduct was the basis for granting or denying a new trial, the Supreme Court stated that the standard is that the decision is within the sound discretion of the trial judge, whose decision will not be disturbed absent a showing of manifest abuse of that discretion. The Supreme Court reaffirmed this standard and overruled those cases with a different standard. Allers v. Riley, 273 M 1, 901 P2d 600, 52 St. Rep. 920 (1995).

Bailiff's Misconduct in Communicating With Jury — New Trial Warranted: During deliberations, the jury had a question regarding application of the comparative negligence statute and payment of damages. The jury notified the bailiff that it wanted to ask the question. The bailiff said that he did not know the answer and that all the attorneys and court personnel would have to be called back into court to properly respond, a process that would take about as long as it takes "for hell to freeze over". Other jurors overheard the remark and decided to resolve the issue on their own. The bailiff's communication with the jury rather than conducting the jury into court for resolution of its question was a violation of 25-7-405 and this section that affected the right to a fair trial. Affidavits from eight jurors that they were not influenced by the bailiff's conduct failed as proof of a fair trial when weighed against the bailiff's actions. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial. Henrichs v. Todd, 245 M 286, 800 P2d 710, 47 St. Rep. 2112 (1990).

Alternate Juror — Conversation After Jury Retires: A jury alternate returned to the jury room with the jury after the case had been submitted for decision, which defendant contended was reversible error, since 46-16-503 requires an officer of the court to prevent conversations between the jurors and others after the jury retires. The Supreme Court held that an alternate, although excluded from deliberating and voting, is in every other respect a juror; therefore, an alternate does not fall within the statutory ban against conversations with others. St. v. Grant, 221 M 122, 717 P2d 562, 43 St. Rep. 685 (1986).

Verdict Not Invalid Per Se Because of Jurors' Drinking: An insurer maintained that the jury verdict was invalid per se because of "drinking by a jury after deliberations have begun". The Supreme Court, noting its decision in Wibaux Realty Co. v. N. Pac. Ry. Co., 101 M 126, 54 P2d 1175 (1935), held that unless a party litigant is culpable, the consumption of alcoholic beverages by a juror during deliberations, which consumption is not excessive and which is not shown to have led to a miscarriage of justice, is not grounds for reversal of a jury verdict. While cautioning judges and bailiffs that no persons serving on a jury should be allowed alcoholic beverages during deliberations, particularly at county expense, the court declined to adopt a per se rule invalidating jury verdicts on the record presented here. Britton v. Farmers Ins. Group, 221 M 67, 721 P2d 303, 43 St. Rep. 641 (1986).

Communication in Alternate Juror's Presence: Although an alternate juror was only in the same room as the jury during their deliberations in violation of former Rule 47(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), for a few minutes, the court was not at liberty to make exceptions based on time, actual harm, or the fact that the person was an alternate juror, given the solemnity associated with the jury system and the possibility of a loss of faith in that system. Highway Comm'n v. Dunks, 166 M 239, 531 P2d 1316 (1975), distinguished in St. v. Grant, 221 M 122, 717 P2d 562, 43 St. Rep. 685 (1986).

Denial of New Trial Following Jury Misconduct — Lack of Prejudice: Trial court did not err in denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, on the ground of misconduct of jury during its deliberations, supported by affidavits of four jurors indicating that the irregularity was not on a material matter in dispute, where plaintiff was probably not prejudiced by juror's misconduct in improperly referring to prior litigation in which plaintiff had been involved, the poll of the jury showing an eight to four verdict for the plaintiff. Schmoyer v. Bourdeau, 148 M 340, 420 P2d 316 (1966), followed in Easterday v. Canty, 219 M 420, 712 P2d 1305, 43 St. Rep. 60 (1986) (overruled on other grounds by the adoption of Rule 5, Uniform District Court Rules), and overruled as to standard of review in Allers v. Riley, 273 M 1, 901 P2d 600, 52 St. Rep. 920 (1995). (See official comment.)

Duty of Jury After Retiring: When the jury retires to the jury room it should be concerned only with the evidence and the law; the verdict, thus, is a result of a fair expression of opinion by all the jurors. Schmoyer v. Bourdeau, 148 M 340, 420 P2d 316 (1966).

Two-Thirds Verdict — Constitutionality: The provision that two-thirds of a jury in a civil action may agree upon a verdict, is based upon constitutional authority. Spencer v. Spencer, 31 M 631, 79 P 320 (1905).

Voidance of Special Findings — Opinions of Jurors: Special findings acquiesced in by the required two-thirds of a jury may not be set aside by reason of affidavits made by dissenting jurors that, in their opinion, the conclusion of the majority was reached by giving a wrong construction or too much weight to a part of the evidence. Spencer v. Spencer, 31 M 631, 79 P 320 (1905).

25-7-404. Papers which may be taken into jury room.

Case Notes

Medical Malpractice — Not Error to Permit Highlighted Medical Records and Photographs in Jury Room: In a medical malpractice action in which appellant claimed that negligent medical treatment of his ingrown toenail caused the necessity for amputation of his leg, it was not error for the trial judge to permit the jury to have, during its deliberations, highlighted copies of appellant's medical records and photographs of his leg. Kyriss v. St., 218 M 162, 707 P2d 5, 42 St. Rep. 1487 (1985).

Subsequent Request by Jury: Trial court did not err in permitting State's exhibits, consisting of photographs of scene of accident, to be taken to jury room when asked for by jury about 1 hour after it began deliberation. St. v. Medicine Bull, 152 M 34, 445 P2d 916 (1968).

Pleadings Allowed in Jury Room — Instructions to Jury as Sufficient: While the jury may be permitted to take with them to the jury room any pleadings in the case and if they desire study the issues for themselves, the practice of setting forth in the instructions a clear and concise statement of the nature of the case and the issues to be determined is to be commended. Frederick v. Hale, 42 M 153, 112 P 70 (1910); Rand v. Butte Elec. Ry., 40 M 398, 107 P 87 (1910); Paxton v. Woodward, 31 M 195, 78 P 215 (1904).

Evidence Not Admitted: It was not error in an action against a railroad company for killing cattle on the track, to refuse to allow the jury to take with them a map of the place where the accident occurred, which was not admitted in evidence, but only used by the witnesses while testifying in explaining their testimony. Carman v. Mont. Cent. Ry., 32 M 137, 79 P 690 (1905).

25-7-405. Jury's request for further information.

Case Notes

Refusal of Trial Court to Provide Transcript of Witness Testimony Not Abuse of Discretion: During deliberations, the jury asked the trial judge for a transcript of a witness's testimony, but the request was refused. Defendant argued that the court violated this section when it refused to provide the transcript, but the Supreme Court disagreed. The trial court carefully considered whether to provide the transcript and found that the testimony concerned a minor point, was of questionable relevance, concerned settlement offers, and would unduly emphasize specific testimony. The decision whether to provide a jury with testimony during deliberations lies within the sound discretion of the trial court, and the decision not to provide the testimony in this case was not an abuse of that discretion. Stockman Bank of Mont. v. Potts, 2006 MT 64, 331 M 381, 132 P3d 546 (2006), distinguishing Henrichs v. Todd, 245 M 286, 800 P2d 710 (1990).

Bailiff's Misconduct in Communicating With Jury — New Trial Warranted: During deliberations, the jury had a question regarding application of the comparative negligence statute and payment of damages. The jury notified the bailiff that it wanted to ask the question. The bailiff said that he did not know the answer and that all the attorneys and court personnel would have to be called back into court to properly respond, a process that would take about as long as it takes "for hell to freeze over". Other jurors overheard the remark and decided to resolve the issue on their own. The bailiff's communication with the jury rather than conducting the jury into court for resolution of its question was a violation of 25-7-403 and this section that affected the right to a fair trial. Affidavits from eight jurors that they were not influenced by the bailiff's conduct failed as proof of a fair trial when weighed against the bailiff's actions. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial. Henrichs v. Todd, 245 M 286, 800 P2d 710, 47 St. Rep. 2112 (1990).

No Insertion of New Theory or Defense — Answer Proper: After the jury began deliberating, they presented a question to the court. Counsel for both parties participated in the answer. Plaintiffs later contended they were prejudiced through denial of an opportunity to argue the issue. However, the issue in question was already before the court, and the answer did not present a new theory or defense into the case; therefore, plaintiffs suffered no substantial injustice. Semenza v. Leitzke, 232 M 15, 754 P2d 509, 45 St. Rep. 829 (1988).

Retired Jury's Questions to Judge — No Prejudicial Error Where Bailiff Was Go-Between: When jury in action arising out of contract asked the judge, by and through the bailiff, whether all forms for a verdict had to be filled out, the bailiff was told to tell the jury to use only such form as fitted the verdict. To avoid error, the better practice would have been to conduct the jury into court for the desired information, pursuant to this section. However, because of the innocuous nature of the communication to the jury, the Supreme Court did not find that any substantial right of the defendants was affected and found no prejudicial error. Fordyce v. Hansen, 198 M 344, 646 P2d 519, 39 St. Rep. 1043 (1982).

Oral Instructions to Jury — Waiver of Objection: Plaintiff gave implied consent and waived objection by failure to object and by active participation in proceedings wherein trial court, without the presence of a stenographer, gave oral answer to question asked by the jury and orally confirmed the correctness of other instructions orally requested by counsel. Seder v. Peter Kiewit Sons' Co., 156 M 322, 479 P2d 448 (1971).

Request to Be Brought Into Court Not Mandatory: Although this section provides that the jury may request that it be brought into court, this is not mandatory and the jury may send an inquiry out to the court. State ex rel. St. Highway Comm'n v. Wheeler, 148 M 246, 419 P2d 492 (1966).

Reading of Testimony to Jury: Where retired jury disagrees as to the testimony, the trial judge, in the presence of or after notice to the parties or counsel, should either give such testimony orally from the bench if the judge has a clear recollection thereof, with the stenographer taking down what he says, or should read to the jury the stenographer's transcript of the disputed testimony duly certified as correct, but no testimony should be read merely because the jury desires to have its memory refreshed. Pilgeram v. Haas, 118 M 431, 167 P2d 339 (1946).

Section Not Applicable to Criminal Cases: This section is applicable to civil cases only. St. v. Fisher, 23 M 540, 59 P 919 (1900).

Testimony Reviewed: Where, after having been charged and having retired to consider its verdict, a jury at its own request was brought back into the courtroom and permitted to hear the testimony of two witnesses read from the stenographer's notes, no error had been committed on the basis of secondary evidence since the court had no authority to permit the examination of witnesses at such a time, and the notes taken by an official stenographer on a trial are presumably correct. Freezer v. Sweeney, 8 M 508, 21 P 20 (1886), distinguished in Pilgeram v. Haas, 118 M 431, 167 P2d 339 (1946).

Part 5
Jury's Verdict

Part Case Notes

Lack of Predictability in Jury's Verdict Not Grounds for Reversal — Alteration of Judgment and New Trial Denied: After falling on ice outside her office and breaking her ankle, Seeley sued the owner of the building for negligence for defective design and failing to remove ice and snow from the walkway. The jury found that the owner was negligent, but determined that the negligence did not cause Seeley's fall and injuries. Seeley moved to alter the judgment and for a new trial on damages, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the weight and credibility of the evidence lies with the jury and that although a verdict may be difficult to explain, the lack of predictability in the jury's judgment does not warrant reversal of the verdict. Here, the jury weighed conflicting evidence that defective design caused Seeley's fall against evidence that Seeley's haste and carelessness caused her fall and attributed Seeley's haste and carelessness as the cause. The Supreme Court declined to disturb the verdict absent evidence that the findings were inherently impossible to believe. Denial of Seeley's motion to alter the judgment and for a new trial was affirmed. Seeley v. Kreitzberg Rentals, LLC, 2007 MT 97, 337 M 91, 157 P3d 676 (2007).

Negligence Special Verdict Form — Harmless Error on Strict Liability Instruction: Plaintiff contended that it was error for the trial court to give a particular instruction as he contended it was an incomplete and misleading statement of the law of strict liability. The Supreme Court held that any alleged error was harmless because the plaintiff did not object to a special verdict form that required the jury to decide the case on negligence alone. Kleinsasser v. Superior Derrick Serv., Inc., 218 M 371, 708 P2d 568, 42 St. Rep. 1662 (1985). See also Drilcon, Inc. v. Roil Energy Corp., Inc., 230 M 166, 749 P2d 1058, 45 St. Rep. 114 (1988).

Case Notes

Jury's Failure to Answer Interrogatories in Special Verdict — Verdict Upheld: Although the jury failed to answer all of the interrogatories presented to it in the special verdict, the Supreme Court, relying on Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 Mont. 228, 211 P.2d 420 (1949), concluded the verdict was not defective and a new trial was not warranted. The jury sufficiently manifested its apportionment of liability in the special verdict. In addition, the District Court informed the parties that the jury had proceeded to a single question in completing the special verdict and, despite receiving this notice, the party claiming error did not object or poll the jury, thereby waiving any challenge to the verdict on appeal. United Tool Rental, Inc. v. Riverside Contracting, Inc., 2011 MT 213, 361 Mont. 493, 260 P.3d 156.

Improper Repolling of Jury After Verdict Rendered — Verdict Affirmed: A jury awarded plaintiff $3.9 million in special damages in a personal injury case. At defendant's request, the jury was polled, 11 jurors agreed with the verdict, and the jury was discharged. Some jurors expressed confusion over the poll, and the court reconvened and reassembled the 10 jurors who remained in the courthouse and repolled those jurors, and 6 of the 10 agreed with the verdict.

The following day, the court reconvened to question the two absconding jurors, and one agreed with the verdict, bringing the tally in the second poll to seven in favor and five against. The court then reassembled the entire jury and repolled them a third time. The final poll was nine in favor of the verdict and three against. The court accepted this as a valid final poll, denied defendant's motion for a new trial, and affirmed the verdict. Defendant appealed. Plaintiff had adequately questioned the validity of the process, so the Supreme Court considered whether the trial court had authority to reconvene and repoll the jury after it was discharged. This section presupposes that the jury remains impaneled at all times before it is polled and that polling will precede discharge of the jury. A jury lacks any authority to revisit, alter, or amend its verdict after the jury is discharged and any juror has left the presence, control, and supervision of the court. Thus, the trial court erred as a matter of law by reassembling the jury and conducting a second poll. Nevertheless, the trial court's final poll led to confirmation of the original verdict, so the trial court reached the correct result, even though for the wrong reason, and the verdict was affirmed. Pumphrey v. Empire Lath & Plaster, 2006 MT 99, 332 M 116, 135 P3d 797 (2006).

Refusal to Allow Poll of Jury — New Trial Improperly Granted: Court abused discretion in granting new trial based solely on ground that it had erred in refusing to grant request for poll of jury. Error, if any, was harmless in light of evidence affirmatively showing that verdict was rendered in open court in presence of all counsel, that, in response to question by judge, foreman of jury advised him they had agreed upon verdict and that, following reading of verdict, judge inquired if it was true verdict of at least eight of them and jury answered in affirmative. Martello v. Darlow, 151 M 232, 441 P2d 175 (1968).

Attack on Verdict by Motion for a New Trial: After a case has been submitted to the jury and a verdict returned, accepted, and filed at the direction of the trial court and the jury discharged, the only way to reach the verdict, if insufficient or against the law, is by a timely motion for new trial. Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 M 228, 211 P2d 420 (1949).

Offset for Advanced Wage Benefits Proper Even Though No Apportionment Between General Damages and Wage Loss in Jury Verdict: At the close of trial, Burlington Northern objected to a verdict form that would have itemized the nature of the damages awarded by the jury. The lower court refused to grant the railroad an offset against the judgment for advanced wage benefits paid to the plaintiff. On appeal, plaintiff's attorney argued that the offset should not be granted because the form of the verdict made it impossible to determine what, if any, amounts were awarded by the jury for wage loss. The Supreme Court held that, by logical deduction, some of the award was for wage loss and remanded the case to the lower court for a determination of the amount of offsets to which Burlington Northern was entitled. Cottrell v. Burlington N. RR Co., 261 M 296, 863 P2d 381, 50 St. Rep. 1323 (1993).

Failure to Award Offset — Judgment Improperly Granted: In a breach of contract action in which defendant counterclaimed, the jury, during deliberations, asked if it could determine damages, with the court to hear from counsel as to the amount of offset to be subtracted from the damages awarded. The trial judge consulted both counsel and with their approval told the jury that it should determine damages and the judge would determine any offset. After a damages verdict for defendant, defendant obtained a judgment without waiting for an offset hearing and served notice of the judgment on plaintiff. Plaintiff's motion to amend the judgment as premature in absence of a hearing and decision on offset was denied. The judgment on the verdict was vacated and the case remanded for proceedings and a determination on any offset. Schmidt v. Colonial Terrace Associates, 202 M 46, 656 P2d 807, 39 St. Rep. 2318 (1982).

Amending Damages in Verdict Form: The trial court erred in amending the verdict form, over objection, and submitting to the jury, after instructions were settled, an issue of damages when such damages were not pleaded, were not based on evidence, and were not covered by jury instructions. Agrilease, Inc. v. Gray, 173 M 151, 566 P2d 1114 (1977).

Directed Verdict Improperly Granted: Where in an action to recover the purchase price of fire-extinguishing apparatus the defendant interposed a counterclaim for $10,000 for breach of the contract, the failure of plaintiff to introduce any testimony did not authorize the trial court to direct a verdict for defendant in that amount for unliquidated damages, the weight to be given to the defendant's testimony and the amount recoverable by him having been within the exclusive province of the jury. Gen. Fire Extinguisher Co. v. NW. Auto Supply Co., 70 M 1, 223 P 504 (1924).

Allowance of Interest by Court as Error — Same Allowed by Jury: In entering judgment, it is the duty of the court to follow the verdict, and the allowance of interest in this case was error, the verdict indicating that the jury had followed the instructions and made all allowances, including interest, to which they thought defendants entitled. Butte Elec. Ry. v. Mathews, 34 M 487, 87 P 460 (1907). See also Helena Power Transmission Co. v. Spratt, 40 M 254, 106 P 5 (1910).

Admitted Amount — Form of Verdict: A verdict in favor of plaintiff is sufficient without stating the amount awarded, where the answer admitted the indebtedness and amount thereof, and the only denial was that the debt was not yet due. Josephi v. Mady Clothing Co., 13 M 195, 33 P 1 (1892).

Demand for Return Required — Jurisdiction of Court: In an action to recover possession of personal property where plaintiff has secured temporary possession through the auxiliary remedy of claim and delivery, the court is without jurisdiction to award the successful defendant the return of the property if he fails to claim a return in his answer. Fergus Motor Co. v. Schott, 95 M 249, 26 P2d 365 (1933).

Demand for Return Required: Where defendant in an action in claim and delivery fails in his answer to demand the return of the property or its value, and the jury's verdict is in favor of plaintiff as to a portion thereof only, failure of the trial court to incorporate in the judgment a provision in favor of defendant as to the portion eliminated by the jury is not error. Hayes v. Moffatt, 83 M 185, 271 P 452 (1928).

Jury Award of Value Not Applicable to Agreed Value: The provision that the jury shall find the value of the property does not apply where the value is conceded by both parties to be a certain amount. Dalke v. Pancoast, 63 M 524, 208 P 589 (1922).

Right of Defendant to Recover Damages Recognized: This section and 27-17-401 recognize the right of the defendant in a claim and delivery action, who is awarded a return of the property, to recover damages for the wrongful taking and detention of it. Hammond v. Thompson, 54 M 609, 173 P 229 (1918).

Damages Awarded for Retention of Property Pending Appeal: Following a judgment rendered in District Court against the appellant for damages caused by the unlawful retention of the respondent's property, the appellant retained the property and appealed to the Supreme Court. On appeal the respondent claimed he was entitled to damages for the unlawful retention of the property pending appeal. If the respondent is entitled to further damages, collection of them must be had by a separate action, as the doctrine of law allowing the award of damages, for property retained pending appeal, by an appellant court applies only to judgments of a Justices' Court reviewed de novo by a District Court. Chesnut v. Sales, 49 M 318, 141 P 986 (1914).

Judgment for Property or Value Thereof: In an action of claim and delivery, a judgment that the party entitled to the possession of the property in controversy shall have it or, in case the property itself cannot be recovered, then such party to have its value is proper under this section. Chesnut v. Sales, 49 M 318, 141 P 986 (1914); 44 M 534, 121 P 481 (1912).

Verdict to Dispose of All Issues: The verdict, in an action of claim and delivery, should in terms, dispose of all the issues submitted to the jury. Hickey v. Breen, 40 M 368, 106 P 881 (1910); Woods v. Latta, 35 M 9, 88 P 402 (1907).

Substantial Conformity of Verdict: The verdict, in an action of claim and delivery, conforms substantially with the requirements of this section, where it contains a general finding in favor of the plaintiff, together with a finding of value. Sullivan v. Girson, 39 M 274, 102 P 320 (1909).

Judgment to Be in the Alternative: In a claim and delivery action the verdict of the jury need not be in the alternative, but the judgment must be in the alternative, as provided by 27-17-401. The verdict must support the judgment, and both verdict and judgment must conform to the law. Hynes v. Barnes, 30 M 25, 75 P 523 (1904). See also Hickey v. Breen, 40 M 368, 106 P 881 (1910).

Deficient Verdict — Finding of Facts: Under this section, a failure to find all the facts that should be found by a jury does not invalidate the verdict. Wheeler v. Jones, 16 M 87, 40 P 77 (1895); Miles v. Edsall, 7 M 185, 14 P 701 (1887).

Visits to Scene — Purpose: In considering a motion to suppress evidence discovered during a search of the defendant's motel room, the trial judge visited the room under circumstances allegedly similar to those on the night of the search. In expressing its disapproval of the trial court's participation in the recreation of the scene, the Supreme Court stated that visits to the scene should be designed for the trier of fact to view the scene, not for the trier of fact to place himself in the shoes of one of the parties. St. v. Wilson, 218 M 359, 708 P2d 270, 42 St. Rep. 1647 (1985).

Jury's Failure to Answer Interrogatories in Special Verdict — Verdict Upheld: Although the jury failed to answer all of the interrogatories presented to it in the special verdict, the Supreme Court, relying on Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 Mont. 228, 211 P.2d 420 (1949), concluded the verdict was not defective and a new trial was not warranted. The jury sufficiently manifested its apportionment of liability in the special verdict. In addition, the District Court informed the parties that the jury had proceeded to a single question in completing the special verdict and, despite receiving this notice, the party claiming error did not object or poll the jury, thereby waiving any challenge to the verdict on appeal. United Tool Rental, Inc. v. Riverside Contracting, Inc., 2011 MT 213, 361 Mont. 493, 260 P.3d 156.

Answer Pleading Insufficient Knowledge Creates Factual Dispute Subject to Trial — Disposition of Trial Issues by TRO Prohibited — Verified Complaint Not Basis for Agreed Facts — Denial of Due Process: After a writ of execution was issued against certain property belonging to her husband, Nancy filed a verified complaint against the Sheriff who would execute on the property. She also filed a petition for a temporary restraining order (TRO), claiming to be a tenant by the entirety in the property subject to execution. The District Court issued the TRO and, at a later show cause hearing, discussed the underlying law with counsel but took no testimony. The Sheriff then filed his answer, pleading insufficient knowledge to admit or deny. A creditor was later allowed to intervene. The creditor's answer also pleaded insufficient knowledge, but his brief took a position opposing Nancy's view of the law applicable to ownership of the property. Nancy then responded with a brief in which she asked the District Court to allow oral argument and reiterated her view of the law. The District Court issued findings and conclusions and quashed the writ of execution, relying upon the "undisputed" facts alleged in Nancy's verified complaint. The Supreme Court reversed, noting that under former Rule 8(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the effect of pleading insufficient knowledge is to deny a plaintiff's allegations. The Sheriff's and intervenor's answers pleading insufficient knowledge put into issue the allegations in Nancy's complaint. The only way that those issues of fact could be resolved, short of a trial on the merits, was by a motion for summary judgment or judgment on the pleadings, neither of which was made. The Supreme Court also noted that there was no discovery and no hearing at which facts were determined because there was no testimony taken by the District Court. Citing Porter v. K&S Partnership, 192 M 175, 627 P2d 836 (1981), and Knudson v. McDunn, 271 M 61, 894 P2d 295 (1995), the Supreme Court held that a District Court may not determine, in proceedings on a preliminary injunction or a temporary restraining order, those issues that may arise in a trial on the merits. In this case, the District Court negated Nancy's burden of proof and, without notice, precluded discovery and deprived the Sheriff and the intervenor of the opportunity to disprove Nancy's allegations concerning her right of ownership in the property, thereby depriving the Sheriff and intervenor of their right to procedural due process under the Montana Constitution. For these reasons, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court and remanded for proceedings consistent with the Supreme Court's opinion. Lurie v. Sheriff, 284 M 207, 944 P2d 205, 54 St. Rep. 847 (1997).

Agreed Facts as Court's Findings — Special Verdict — Additional Findings: Where cause was submitted on an agreed statement of facts consisting of an agreement as to the truth of certain allegations of the answer and that the trial court should consider certain documentary evidence, the agreed statement automatically became the court's findings and had the effect of a special verdict as to the facts agreed upon. The court was bound to make its conclusions on the stipulation insofar as the necessary facts were agreed upon, and as to facts not agreed, it could refer to the evidence for their determination. State ex rel. Nelson v. District Court, 107 M 167, 81 P2d 699 (1938).

Agreed Statement Binding Upon Parties and Court: Where a statement of facts has been voluntarily made, agreed to, and submitted to the trial court, it is binding upon the parties and the court. McCarthy v. Employers' Fire Ins. Co., 97 M 540, 37 P2d 579 (1934); Read v. Lewis & Clark County, 55 M 412, 178 P 177 (1919).

Insufficiency of Agreed Facts: On submission of a cause to the trial court on an agreed statement of facts, the statement must show all the facts necessary to a decision, i.e., ultimate facts presenting only questions of law, and not circumstances which may tend to prove such facts. If in the judgment of the trial court the statement is not sufficient to enable it to render judgment, it may disregard it and continue the cause for further proceedings. McCarthy v. Employers' Fire Ins. Co., 97 M 540, 37 P2d 579 (1934).

Contrary Conclusions of Law — Judgment Vitiated: A conclusion of law contradictory of the agreed statement is sufficient to vitiate the judgment. Warren v. Chouteau County, 82 M 115, 265 P 676 (1928); Birney v. Warren, 28 M 64, 72 P 293 (1903).

Review of Decision Made Upon Agreed Facts — Role of Supreme Court: In a cause decided by the District Court upon an agreed statement of facts, the office of the Supreme Court on appeal goes no further than to ascertain and determine whether the trial court drew the correct inference from the facts stipulated and rendered the proper judgment. Warren v. Chouteau County, 82 M 115, 265 P 676 (1928); Read v. Lewis & Clark County, 55 M 412, 178 P 177 (1919).

Purpose of Stipulation: The purpose of a stipulation that a certain thing is a fact is to relieve the parties from the necessity of introducing evidence as to it. If such fact is material, the court is bound by the stipulation as to that fact. It is equivalent to a special finding. Spaulding v. Stone, 46 M 483, 129 P 327 (1912).

Agreed Statement as Finding of Facts: An agreed statement of facts, upon which a case is tried, has the effect of a finding of facts. Hale v. County of Jefferson, 39 M 137, 101 P 973 (1909).

Attorney Fees and Costs for Interpleader Payable From Court Deposit: A stakeholder, disinterested in the result, who interpleads money or property so that the court may decide the true owner, is entitled to costs and reasonable attorney fees, which may be charged against the stake to be distributed. Whether the stake must then be replenished by the losing party is within the discretion of the court. Generally the losing party is under no absolute duty to pay the interpleader's attorney fees and costs if a bona fide conflict existed. Soha v. West, 196 M 95, 637 P2d 1185, 38 St. Rep. 2153 (1981).

Sufficiency of Deposit — Action in Equity: In action to prohibit defendant from canceling an agreement for sale of lands even though the deposit in court might be insufficient as a tender to defendant, plaintiff might be relieved from forfeiture upon a showing of facts sufficient to appeal to the conscience of a court of equity under 28-1-104. Blackfeet Tribe of Blackfeet Indian Reservation v. Klies Livestock Co., 160 F. Supp. 131 (D.C. Mont. 1958).

CHAPTER 9
JUDGMENT

Chapter Case Notes

Defendant Not Allowed to Characterize Damages: Shilhaneks were injured in a vehicle accident, and defendants were ordered to pay more than $3 million in damages, including punitive damages. Defendants requested that the $750,000 tendered to Shilhaneks to date be allocated toward payment of the punitive award and that Shilhaneks be required to file a corresponding satisfaction of judgment with respect to the punitive damages award, in essence asserting that a defendant has the power to specifically designate payment toward a particular award. Defendants cited 25-9-311 for the rule that a satisfaction of judgment must be provided by the party in whose favor judgment is entered and contended that under 28-1-1106 and 28-1-1225, the power lies with the debtor, not the creditor, when it comes to designating to which particular obligation a payment should be credited. The District Court denied the request, noting that Title 28 applies only to contractual obligations and that Title 25 governs obligations arising from judgments. The District Court did not abuse its discretion, given defendants' failure to provide a legal basis that would allow them to dictate how damages owed are characterized, the fact that defendants owed more than double the available insurance coverage and were obligated to pay the policy limits to satisfy the verdict, and that allocating 22% of the available insurance proceeds to the punitive damage award would have harsh tax consequences on Shilhaneks. Shilhanek v. D-2 Trucking, Inc., 2000 MT 16, 298 M 101, 994 P2d 1105, 57 St. Rep. 89 (2000).

Person Not Party to Action May Not Be Party to Judgment: The lower court ruled that a prescriptive easement existed for Dawson even though he was not a party to the lawsuit. The Supreme Court held that a person who is not a party to an action may not be a party to the judgment. Warnack v. Coneen Family Trust, 266 M 203, 879 P2d 715, 51 St. Rep. 739 (1994), followed in Baltrusch v. Baltrusch, 2003 MT 357, 319 M 23, 83 P3d 256 (2003).

Offset of Tort Judgment With Amount Owed on Contract Underlying Tort as Within Equity Power of Court: Defendant fraudulently induced plaintiffs to purchase property by misrepresenting the quality of the road that she intended to build as access to the property. The District Court required her to file an accounting reflecting the principal balance due her from each of the plaintiffs for property purchased under the contracts for deed, and the court then offset and credited the amounts due plaintiffs from the judgment against the balance of the principal owed by plaintiffs under the contracts for deed. Although the contracts themselves were not at issue, the respective obligations of the parties arose from the same transaction and damages were related to the value of the premises and the purchase price, which was the basis of the principal under the contract. It was within the equity power of the court to allow a setoff of debts under these circumstances because that power exists independent of statute when grounds for equitable interposition are shown, such as fraud or insolvency. Dew v. Dower, 258 M 114, 852 P2d 549, 50 St. Rep. 454 (1993). On remand, the District Court found that although one cotenant had quitclaimed all interest in the property to the plaintiff cotenant, the right to personal damages did not pass with the transfer of the property. Clarifying Dew, supra, the Supreme Court noted that the discussion regarding the equity power of the District Court was confined solely to its ability to set off the principal balances on the contracts for deed against the damages plaintiff sustained. As such, the District Court was not invested with the broad equitable power to award plaintiff 100% of the personal damages attributable to fraud when he was not entitled to such an award by law. Because the underlying action was for personal damages, not property damages, the court properly determined that plaintiff was entitled to only 50% of the personal damages arising from defendant's fraud. However, the court miscalculated the amount of accrued interest owing, so the case was remanded for a recalculation of damages. Dew v. Dower, 269 M 286, 888 P2d 421, 51 St. Rep. 1388 (1994). See also S. Surety Co. of N.Y. v. Maney, 121 P2d 295 (Okla. 1941).

Consent Judgment Not to Be Challenged Absent Appeal — Lack of Notice Terms Binding: A consent decree, adopted and filed with the District Court as a settlement agreement, provided for payment through the District Court as escrow agent, and on payment or nonpayment the District Court could release the escrowed documents to the appropriate party "without notice to the other party". On nonpayment, the documents were released, including an order and Writ of Assistance that had been previously consented to at the time the consent decree was adopted. The Supreme Court held that since the consent decree was a final order and had not been appealed, it could not be considered, and that the order and Writ followed the decree exactly and could not be considered. The lack of notice to either party was not a denial of due process because the consent decree expressly so provided. Thus, appellant knowingly and voluntarily waived notice. Sadler v. Hart, 220 M 355, 715 P2d 50, 43 St. Rep. 434 (1986).

Case Notes

Lack of Predictability in Jury's Verdict Not Grounds for Reversal — Alteration of Judgment and New Trial Denied: After falling on ice outside her office and breaking her ankle, Seeley sued the owner of the building for negligence for defective design and failing to remove ice and snow from the walkway. The jury found that the owner was negligent, but determined that the negligence did not cause Seeley's fall and injuries. Seeley moved to alter the judgment and for a new trial on damages, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the weight and credibility of the evidence lies with the jury and that although a verdict may be difficult to explain, the lack of predictability in the jury's judgment does not warrant reversal of the verdict. Here, the jury weighed conflicting evidence that defective design caused Seeley's fall against evidence that Seeley's haste and carelessness caused her fall and attributed Seeley's haste and carelessness as the cause. The Supreme Court declined to disturb the verdict absent evidence that the findings were inherently impossible to believe. Denial of Seeley's motion to alter the judgment and for a new trial was affirmed. Seeley v. Kreitzberg Rentals, LLC, 2007 MT 97, 337 M 91, 157 P3d 676 (2007).

Record on Appeal — Lack of Transcript: Arguments on the sufficiency of the evidence in action on charges of unfair labor practices could not be considered without a transcript of the testimony at the original administrative hearing. The cause was remanded to the trial court for election by the employee either to order and pay for the transcript so the trial court could receive it and enter further judgment or to accept affirmation of the trial court's decision. Klundt v. St., 222 M 172, 720 P2d 1181, 43 St. Rep. 1148 (1986).

Failure to Hear Liability Issue: A complaint for an injunction was filed, and a temporary restraining order was granted. On defendant's appeal of denial of his motion to quash, the order was upheld and the case remanded "with directions to expedite the trial of the cause for damages". Plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment based on the Supreme Court opinion was granted, the court stating that the Supreme Court had affirmed its judgment and directed the District Court to have a hearing on damages following remand. There was in fact never a hearing or trial on the merits of the issue of liability, and it is clear that the District Court misconstrued the language of the Supreme Court opinion, which had not decided the issue of liability but had merely decided it was proper to continue the temporary restraining order and had remanded for an expedited trial. The foreclosure of defendant's opportunity for a hearing denied him due process, and the summary judgment was reversed and the case remanded for a trial on the merits. Boyer v. Kargacin, 202 M 54, 656 P2d 197, 39 St. Rep. 2323 (1982).

Judgment Awarding Nominal Damages as Judgment on Merits: A judgment allowing recovery of only $1 by landowners for interference with water rights, on ground that evidence showed that damages were contributed to or occasioned by fault of landowner's lessee to such a degree as to preclude recovery of substantial damages, was a "judgment on the merits" under statutes so as to be res judicata of landowners' subsequent action for loss of profits from lessee's failure to exercise option to buy land, allegedly resulting from such interference. Dern v. Tanner, 96 F2d 401 (9th Cir. 1938).

Judgment on the Pleadings as Judgment on the Merits: For a judgment on the pleadings to constitute a judgment on the "merits", it must determine the merits of the controversy, as distinguished from the merits of the pleading attacked. Glass v. Basin & Bay St. Min. Co., 35 M 567, 90 P 753 (1907).

Judgment to Show Conclusion: A judgment must show of itself that it concludes the merits of the controversy. Glass v. Basin & Bay St. Min. Co., 34 M 88, 85 P 746 (1906).

No Error for Judgment Not Specifying Specific Dollar Amount When the Appellant Failed to Object to the Prejudgment Order: With respect to the entry of a District Court judgment that did not specify a specific dollar amount but referred to the prejudgment orders, there was no reversible error when the appellant acquiesced and failed to object to the District Court's prejudgment orders confirming the amount of prejudgment interest and attorney fees. Witness Not Party to Judgment and Not Entitled to Prescriptive Easement: A person who is not a party to the action cannot be a party to the judgment. Therefore, in a prescriptive easement action, witnesses who lived in the area of the disputed road and testified as to their use of the road could not be granted a prescriptive easement because they were not parties to the action. Kessinger v. Matulevich, 278 M 450, 925 P2d 864, 53 St. Rep. 1002 (1996), followed in Pearson v. Virginia City Ranches Ass'n, 2000 MT 12, 298 M 52, 993 P2d 688, 57 St. Rep. 65 (2000).

Party Voluntarily Intervening Subject to Adverse Judgment: Double AA Corporation sought specific performance to require Newland & Company, a trust company, to convey land that it held in trust and had entered into a contract to sell to Double AA. Sievers intervened in the case, arguing that specific judgment should not be granted on the basis that he had purchased part of the remainder interest in the trust property and had a first option to purchase the property based on the remainder interest. Sievers sought a ruling from the lower court that he had the first option to purchase the property. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had not abused its discretion in ruling that Sievers did not have a first right of purchase even though not all of the remainder interest holders had intervened in the case to protect their interests. Even though they had not intervened, the remainder interest holders were aligned with the trustee, and any decision that Sievers might have obtained that was adverse to the trustee would also have been adverse to them. Double AA Corp. v. Newland & Co., 273 M 486, 905 P2d 138, 52 St. Rep. 1073 (1995), distinguishing Warnack v. Coneen Fam. Trust, 266 M 203, 879 P2d 715 (1994).

Cross-Complaints — Rights as Between Defendants: The rule that cross-complaint must ask relief modifying or overcoming plaintiff's cause of action applies only in cases where relief sought relates to plaintiff's subject matter or affects the property to which it relates but held not applicable where judgment determines defendants' rights between themselves. Postjudgment Interest From Date of Jury Decision: The plaintiff financed a home through the defendant bank's predecessor. The plaintiff requested a 30-year residential loan and was told by the bank that she received this loan. However, the bank issued an 18-month commercial loan and did not inform the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued alleging fraud. On the first appeal, the Supreme Court found that several sworn affidavits presented by the defendant were false. On remand, a jury awarded $1 million in compensatory damages and $5 million in punitive damages in favor of the plaintiff. In a cross appeal, the plaintiff argued that any interest must be on the verdict and not the decision of the court. The Supreme Court found that 27-1-221 requires postjudgment interest from the date of the jury decision. McCulley v. U.S. Bank of Montana, 2015 MT 100, 378 Mont. 462, 347 P.3d 247.

Comparative Negligence Offset Improper When Some Amount of Award Based Upon Strict Liability — Pro Tanto Award Ordered — Amount of Award Uncertain for Purpose of Interest Pending Determination of Offset by Court: After plaintiffs settled with Anderson's, the installer of a heater that injured plaintiffs, plaintiffs received a jury verdict against Lennox, the manufacturer of the heater, based on both strict liability and negligence. Pursuant to 27-1-703(6)(d), the District Court offset its judgment by the amount of the settlement with Anderson's under the doctrine of comparative negligence and awarded interest pursuant to 27-1-211. The Supreme Court reversed the offset, holding that because the jury form showed that some amount of the damages was awarded on the basis of strict liability, a 30% offset under 27-1-703(6)(d), based upon comparative negligence, was improper but a pro tanto reduction under several previous decisions of the court was proper. The Supreme Court also held that postjudgment interest should have been awarded pursuant to 25-9-204, because the amount of the award could not be made certain until the jury rendered its verdict. The proper offset was calculated by the court and thus was uncertain under 27-1-211. Hulstine v. Lennox, 2010 MT 180, 357 Mont. 228, 237 P.3d 1277.

When Interest Commences — Breach of Contract: In a breach of contract case, the trial court awarded interest from the date of the breach of contract. The appellants argued that interest should have commenced on the date of judgment pursuant to 25-9-204. The Supreme Court held that the trial court erred in applying 27-1-211 to the case. Two of the criteria in that statute were met, as the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages and the right to recover damages vested on the date of the breach. However, the amount of the damages due upon breach was not clearly ascertainable, as required by 27-1-211, until determined by the trial court. The Supreme Court had interpreted the statute to mean that no interest could run until a fixed amount of damages had been arrived at, either by agreement, appraisal, or judgment. Since this was not an action on a negotiable instrument or for the definite unpaid balance of a contract or account, in which the damages would be a sum certain, 27-1-211 was not applicable. Interest from the date of judgment at the legal rate of 10% a year was allowable under 25-9-204 and 25-9-205. Carriger v. Ballenger, 192 M 479, 628 P2d 1106, 38 St. Rep. 864 (1981).

Interest Allowed From Date Verdict Rendered: Where the amount due a father for the wrongful death of his minor son was not ascertained (or ascertainable) until after the jury had returned its verdict, interest was allowable only from the date the verdict was rendered. Wyant v. Dunn, 140 M 181, 368 P2d 917 (1962).

Interest on Judgment: When a debt becomes merged in a judgment, there can be no question of the right to enter the judgment for the amount thereof and accrued interest, the whole to bear interest thereafter at 8% a year. Gallatin Valley Elec. Ry. v. Neible, 57 M 27, 186 P 689 (1919).

Application to Supreme Court Judgments: This section may very well be construed as applying to judgments rendered or ordered by an appellate court. At any rate, it should be so applied as to make it the duty of the clerk below, in the absence of specific directions as to interest, to include in the judgment interest from the date of the order of the Supreme Court to the time of entry of the judgment. State ex rel. Dolenty v. Reece, 43 M 291, 115 P 681 (1911).

Case Notes

Insurance Dispute — Fees, Interest, and Costs Awarded: The plaintiff was injured while working on his vehicle. He had a medical insurance policy and a separate motor vehicle policy with a medical payment provision. The medical insurer paid most of the claim. The plaintiff then sought payment of the entirety of the claim from the motor vehicle insurer, who denied the claim. The plaintiff alleged breach of contract and unfair trade practices. The Supreme Court found that the policy language did not limit the plaintiff from receiving a duplicate payment of medical expenses and that the plaintiff was entitled to attorney fees under the insurance exception to the American Rule, prejudgment and postjudgment interest, and costs. Winter v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2014 MT 168, 375 Mont. 351, 328 P.3d 665. See also Estate of Gleason v. Cent. United Life Ins. Co., 2015 MT 140, 379 Mont. 219, 350 P.3d 349.

Valuation of Estate's Interest in Limited Liability Company Upheld — Award of Interest, Attorney Fees, and Costs Reversed: The District Court properly valued the estate's interest in a limited liability company at the date of trial, rather than at the date of a member's death, because the deceased member's personal representative and the surviving member agreed to continue operating the business instead of dissolving it pursuant to the business's operating agreement. The District Court improperly determined the interest rate pursuant to 25-9-205 because the operating agreement contained a specific provision regarding interest and improperly relied on an indemnification clause contained in the operating agreement in awarding unsupported attorney fees. In addition, the District Court erred in awarding costs to the estate because the estate filed its request for costs 4 months after the deadline passed. Pastimes, LLC v. Clavin, 2012 MT 29, 364 Mont. 109, 274 P.3d 714.

Inclusion of Statutorily Allowed Interest in Dissolution Decree: Under this section, interest is payable on judgments at 10% a year. That rate is appropriate in marriage dissolution cases if the decree is silent as to interest. However, it is within the discretion of the District Court to include the rate of interest in the dissolution decree. In this case, the District Court ordered the husband to pay the wife $32,000 plus 10% interest before September 30, 2001, and an additional $19,500 plus 10% interest over a 3-year period. The court did not abuse its discretion by including the amount of postjudgment interest in the dissolution decree. In re Marriage of Hedges, 2002 MT

204, 311 M 230, 53 P3d 1273 (2002). See also Williams v. Budke, 186 M 71, 606 P2d 515 (1980), Gibson v. Gibson, 206 M 460, 671 P2d 629 (1983), and In re Marriage of Thorner & Davis, 2008 MT 270, 345 M 194, 190 P3d 1063 (2008).

Rate for Prejudgment Interest Same as Rate for Postjudgment Interest: Although the rate of postjudgment interest is statutorily established in this section, there is no comparable statutory provision for the rate of prejudgment interest. The Supreme Court concluded that, in the best interest of parties trying to anticipate their rights or obligations in an effort to avoid litigation and to provide guidance to District Courts for awards of prejudgment interest, the appropriate rate for prejudgment interest when it is awarded should be the same as the rate awarded for postjudgment interest. In re Marriage of DeBuff, 2002 MT 159, 310 M 382, 50 P3d 1070 (2002).

Dissolution Decree Granting Ranch to Husband — Wife Not Entitled to Appreciation or Subject to Liability Accruing on Property — Judgment Interest Owing on Money Judgment: A dissolution decree entered in 1996 granted ranch property to the husband and a liquidated money judgment of $305,855 to the wife. When the remainder of the issues concerning the marital estate was finally addressed in 1999, the wife contended that the subsequent appreciation of the ranch marital assets must be accounted for in determining the final disposition of the 1996 decree. The Supreme Court held that the wife was not entitled either to appreciation or, conversely, to any liability that may have accrued on the property because the ranch was exclusively awarded to the husband. However, the wife was entitled to judgment interest on the money as a statutory right pursuant to this section. On remand, the Supreme Court applied the statutory 10% interest rate to the balance of the wife's money judgment that remained unpaid following entry of the decree, not including interest accruing during the pendency of the appeal. The Supreme Court refigured the dollar amount due the wife after adjusting the figure, which had been incorrectly offset by the District Court because of the wife's alleged receipt of livestock and sales and an interest debt allegedly due to the husband's mother under a "conspiratorial sham" designed to deprive the wife of her interest in the farm property and to directly benefit the husband. In re Marriage of Pospisil, 2000 MT 132, 299 M 527, 1 P3d 364, 57 St. Rep. 547 (2000).

Thirteen Percent Interest Award Not Usurious: Defendants contended that an amount awarded plaintiff in a breach of contract action included a usurious 13% rate of compounded interest. However, the interest award was affirmed because: (1) evidence in the record supported the conclusion that defendants agreed to pay 13% interest in return for waiver of a balloon payment requirement; (2) the question of compounding interest on the taxes and payments was not objected to by defendants at the time relevant documents were introduced at trial; (3) defendants had the opportunity but neglected to argue their position to the jury; and (4) defendants did not ask the court to have the jury break out in the verdict form how it computed the damage award. Keller v. Dooling, 248 M 535, 813 P2d 437, 48 St. Rep. 554 (1991).

Interest Chargeable on Debt Created by Property Settlement Agreement: Following the rationale of In re Marriage of Martens, 196 M 71, 637 P2d 526 (1981), and Williams v. Budke, 186 M 71, 606 P2d 515 (1980), the Supreme Court applied this section in granting interest on a principle obligation created by the parties' property settlement and custody agreement, In re Marriage of Mannix, 242 M 137, 788 P2d 1363, 47 St. Rep. 668 (1990), followed in Tipp v. Skjelset, 1998 MT 263, 291 M 288, 967 P2d 787, 55 St. Rep. 1084 (1998).

Interest Due in Foreclosure Action: The District Court properly ordered payment of interest in a foreclosure action based on the promissory note rate until the date of judgment and at the 10% statutory rate thereafter. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Slack, 232 M 250, 756 P2d 1140, 45 St. Rep. 1028 (1988).

Interest on Judgment Not Compound Interest: In its initial summary judgment order, the District Court awarded a real estate broker the commission due plus interest at 6% on that amount from date of breach to date of judgment, pursuant to 27-1-211. On a second summary judgment dismissing a counterclaim, the court found the broker entitled to judgment at 10% on the initial judgment. The Supreme Court found this award was not compound interest in violation of 25-9-205, but was interest on the judgment, a correct calculation of interest due. Ellingson Agency, Inc. v. Baltrusch, 228 M 360, 742 P2d 1009, 44 St. Rep. 1598 (1987).

Breach in Sale of Restaurant — Measure of Damages and Interest: Where restaurant buyers breached a sales contract, the trial court properly granted sellers the amount expended on outstanding accounts payable incurred by the buyers, such as power service, garbage service, and advertising debts, as well as interest at 10% from the date of judgment. Stevens v. Abbott, 228 M 101, 740 P2d 1136, 44 St. Rep. 1374 (1987).

Contract Interest Rate for Particular Item — Statutory Rate Applied to Other Items: Plaintiff received damages for the value of a lease breached by defendant and for plaintiff's costs in renovating the premises as required by the lease. The lease provided that lessee would indemnify lessor for finance costs of the renovation at an 18% rate. The court properly gave plaintiff interest at the statutory 10% rate instead of the 18% rate. An interest rate in one relatively minor and discrete part of the lease should not be an umbrella over the entire obligation, and it is contrary to the parties' legitimate expectations to allow such an umbrella where the lease is otherwise complete in almost every detail. If the parties intended the 18% rate to apply to all obligations arising from the contract, including breach, they could have easily so provided in the lease. Nicholson v. United Pac. Ins. Co., 219 M 32, 710 P2d 1342, 42 St. Rep. 1822 (1985).

Modification of Incorrect Money Judgment — Interest Due on Retroactively Due Increase: If a judgment is effective from the date of entry and any changes to the judgment relate back to the entry date, it follows that interest is assessed from the date of judgment. Where a child support and maintenance decree was later modified and larger payments granted, with the increase made retroactive to the date of the original decree, interest was due on that retroactive amount, beginning on the date of the original decree. In re Marriage of Wilson, 216 M 392, 701 P2d 1372, 42 St. Rep. 894 (1985).

Interest Due on Lost Profits: Under this statute, a builder who was not in breach and who did not cause the breach of a construction contract was entitled to the full amount of his lost profits but not to 10% interest a year on those lost profits. The trial court improperly awarded 10% interest. The court stated that the builder was entitled to interest as provided by the contract, but the contract contained no such provision. Martin Dev. Co. v. Keeney Constr. Co., 216 M 212, 703 P2d 143, 42 St. Rep. 752 (1985). On a later appeal, the parties were bound by the facts and law established in this prior case. Relitigation of issues was barred by collateral estoppel, and claims of legal malpractice were barred by the statute of limitations. Peschel v. Jones, 232 M 516, 760 P2d 51, 45 St. Rep. 1244 (1988).

Workers' Compensation Court — No Interest on Claimants' Judgments: On remand from the Supreme Court to the Workers' Compensation Court for a determination of reasonable costs and attorney fees, the Workers' Compensation Court determined that claimant was not entitled to interest based on past due compensation and medical benefits awarded by its earlier judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed. The penalties and assessments allowed against an insurer under the Workers' Compensation Act are the exclusive penalties and assessments that can be assessed against an insurer in absence of authorizing legislation. Carlson v. Cain, 216 M 129, 700 P2d 607, 42 St. Rep. 695 (1985).

Interest and Expenses Allowable: Plaintiff entered a buy-sell to purchase defendants' ranch. One of his major considerations was gaining investment tax credits. Defendants refused to perform, and plaintiff filed a breach of contract action. The District Court found for plaintiff and awarded him prejudgment interest at 10% on his state and federal income tax obligation, the earnest money, and his capital expenditures on the ranch. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that interest on the earnest money was all that should be allowed as prejudgment interest under 27-1-211. Prejudgment interest should be 6% under 31-1-106. Interest should then be allowed on the judgment according to 27-1-211 at the amount of 10% under 25-9-205. The expenses that are allowable to a plaintiff are found in 25-10-201, and 25-10-101 outlines when costs are allowed. The cost of depositions not used during trial is not allowed. Various travel expenditures would not have been chargeable to defendants if the contract had been performed. The portion of capital expenditures allowed should be only the loss plaintiff suffered as a result of expenditures from the time of signing the buy-sell to the time of breach. Ehly v. Cady, 212 M 82, 687 P2d 687, 41 St. Rep. 1611 (1984).

Backpay and Interest Formulas Upheld: The Woolworth formula, used to calculate the amount of backpay owed Young, and the Florida Steel formula, used to calculate the amount of interest awarded on backpay, were appropriate for this case. The first formula applied quarterly calculations, and the second formula applied a variable interest in excess of Montana's statutory limit. The statutory provision on interest must not supplant but should complement the legitimate ends of public policy. Great Falls v. Young, 211 M 13, 686 P2d 185, 41 St. Rep. 1174 (1984).

Interest Payable on Cash Award Property Settlement: Where the defendant husband in a divorce proceeding argued unsuccessfully that the parties had orally modified a property settlement agreement requiring a cash award to the wife, the Supreme Court awarded interest on the unpaid cash award from the date it was required to be paid under the dissolution decree until the time of actual payment. Under the rationale of Knudson v. Knudson, 191 M 204, 622 P2d 1025, 38 St. Rep. 154 (1981), once a person is liable for a money judgment resulting from a property settlement and payment is not made, the person entitled to the settlement is further entitled to a fair rate of interest. Gibson v. Gibson, 206 M 460, 671 P2d 629, 40 St. Rep. 1780 (1983). See also Tipp v. Skjelset, 1998 MT 263, 291 M 288, 967 P2d 787, 55 St. Rep. 1084 (1998).

Applicable Only Where Marital Dissolution Decree Silent as to Interest: As this section applies to a judgment arising out of a marital dissolution decree only when that decree is silent as to interest, it was within discretion of the court to set interest at 6% a year when the decree was not silent as to interest. In re the Marriage of Martens v. Martens, 196 M 71, 637 P2d 523, 38 St. Rep. 2135 (1981).

Property Settlement — Liability for Interest Pending Appeal — Burden of Parties: Where, following a decree dissolving the marriage of the parties and awarding a money judgment to the wife, the husband obtained a stay of execution pending appeal, the trial court did not err upon remand in ordering the husband to pay interest upon the previous judgment, calculated from the day the judgment was originally rendered. Under the holding in Resner v. N. Pac. Ry., 161 M 177, 505 P2d 86 (1973), a judgment bears interest from the date of its entry even though it is subject to direct attack. As the husband made no attempt to see what obligations were accruing, the court will not allow the husband to avoid his interest obligations by claiming that his wife did not do enough to secure it. Knudson v. Knudson, 191 M 204, 622 P2d 1025, 38 St. Rep. 154 (1981). Resner was overruled in Woods v. Burlington N. Ry., 2004 MT 384, 325 M 106, 104 P3d 1045 (2004).

Retail Installment Sale — Evidence Supporting — Allowable Interest on Past Due Account: The defendant failed to make payment for materials supplied by plaintiff. The invoices of purchase stated that an interest rate of 1.5% a month would be levied on past due accounts. Plaintiff filed a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) representing the amount due and the service charge of 1.5% a month and sued to foreclose the lien. The defendant filed a confession of judgment for the full amount of purchase, plus interest at a legal rate. Plaintiff rejected the confession of judgment. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff for the amount of purchases plus interest at a rate of 10% a year. Plaintiff appealed, seeking interest at the 1.5% a month rate. The Supreme Court held that the invoices, two of which were signed by both parties, describing the material purchased and stating the amount due and the interest rate to be charged, were sufficient to obligate defendant to pay the 1.5% charge on the unpaid balance. Although the invoices did not meet all the requirements of a retail installment contract, defendant's admission as to their authenticity and confession of judgment more than adequately evidenced that the purchases were retail installment sales. O'Neil Lumber Co. v. Nickelodeon Co., 190 M 25, 617 P2d 1291, 37 St. Rep. 1731 (1980).

Visitation and Obligation to Support — Interest on Unpaid Support: The Supreme Court rejected respondent's contention that he had no obligation to support his child under a divorce decree unless he exercised his right of visitation. The lower court incorrectly applied the rule in this case. Visitation has no bearing whatsoever upon the father's legal and moral obligation to support his child. Similarly, the father could not claim laches to avoid support payments owing over an 8-year period. Furthermore, on the basis of Williams v. Budke, 186 M 71, 606 P2d 515 (1980), appellant is entitled to receive interest on the past-due payments. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 190 M 66, 618 P2d 867, 37 St. Rep. 1350 (1980), followed, with regard to inapplicability of laches and equitable estoppel to recovery of child support arrears, in In re Marriage of Petranek, 255 M 458, 843 P2d 784, 49 St. Rep. 1107 (1992).

Interest on Delinquent Support Payments: When the marital dissolution decree is silent as to interest, interest is automatically collectible by the judgment creditor spouse on past-due payments for support money or maintenance the same as any other money judgment under 25-9-205. Williams v. Budke, 186 M 71, 606 P2d 515 (1980), followed in In re Marriage of Winters, 2004 MT 82, 320 M 459, 87 P3d 1005 (2004), and In re Marriage of Steab, 2013 MT 124, 370 Mont. 125, 300 P.3d 1168.

Conversion and Special Damages: Where, in action for conversion, plaintiff elected to accept value of property at time of conversion and special damages were also allowed, interest on the value of the property would run from time of conversion but interest on the special damages were assessed after verdict. Galbreath v. Armstrong, 121 M 387, 193 P2d 630 (1948).

Probate Proceedings: An order allowing an attorney's fee for services rendered to a special administrator was not a "judgment" within the meaning of this section. In re Bielenberg's Estate, 98 M 546, 40 P2d 49 (1935).

Mechanics' Lien (Now Construction Lien) Proceeding: When claimant considerably overstated the amount of his claim in the lien filed and court was required to decide the amount due, interest, a creature of statute, was allowable only from the date of the decision. Eskestrand v. Wunder, 94 M 57, 20 P2d 622 (1933).

Foreclosure Decree: After decree in a foreclosure suit, the mortgage debt became merged in the judgment, and in a subsequent action, looking to the redemption of the property, interest was properly allowed at 8% per annum. Toole v. Weirick, 39 M 359, 102 P 590 (1909).

Constitutionality: This section is not unconstitutional as affecting a contract right. Stanford v. Coram, 28 M 288, 72 P 655 (1903).

Effect of Amendment: A judgment rendered prior to the date when the amendment to this section went into effect bore interest of 10% until that date and only 8% thereafter. Stanford v. Coram, 28 M 288, 72 P 655 (1903).

Part 3
Entry of Judgment and Satisfaction — Lien

25-9-301. Docketing of judgment — lien — expiration.

Compiler's Comments

2001 Amendment: Chapter 515 in (2) near middle of second sentence after "provided in" substituted "61-6-123" for "subsection (3)" and after "continues for" substituted "10 years" for "6 years". Amendment effective October 1, 2001.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 60 in (3), near middle after "support obligation", inserted "or 10 years from entry of a lump-sum judgment or order for support arrears, whichever is later"; and made minor changes in style.

Severability: Section 18, Ch. 60, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 631 at beginning of second sentence of (2) inserted exception clause; inserted (3) continuing lien for 10 years after termination of the support obligation; and made minor changes in style.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 631, L. 1993, provided: "WHEREAS, it is necessary to draft a composite bill containing unrelated sections in order to present the proposed program improvements in a single, comprehensive bill that promotes the needs of legislative energy, efficiency, and economy by limiting the number of possible bills and by reducing the need for hearings and readings on those bills.

THEREFORE, the Legislature finds it appropriate to enact the following legislation."

Severability: Section 29, Ch. 631, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

Case Notes

Plaintiff Cannot Purchase Judgment Debtor's Tort Action Against County to Satisfy Judgment — Order to Set Aside Levy and Purchase of Action Upheld: The plaintiff was not able to collect on a judgment she received against the defendant. After she conducted a debtor's examination and learned the defendant had filed a personal injury lawsuit against the county, the plaintiff obtained a writ for the sheriff to seize and sell the defendant's action against the county, purchased the defendant's cause of action, and filed a motion to be substituted as the plaintiff in it. The District Court denied her motion as void under state law and ordered that the levying sale and purchase be set aside, and the plaintiff appealed. In affirming the District Court, the Supreme Court noted that Montana is one of several states that do not honor the sale of causes of action involving a tort. Rather, to satisfy the judgment, the plaintiff could petition the District Court to assign the proceeds from the defendant's tort action. Blackmore v. Dunster, 2012 MT 74, 364 Mont. 384, 274 P.3d 748.

Failure to Record Aircraft Conveyance With Federal Agency — Unrecorded Ownership Interest Invalid to Cut Off Right to Levy on Aircraft: Ford signed a promissory note for $28,503.62, plus interest, for products purchased from Lewistown Propane Co. (Lewistown). Lewistown sought to collect on the promissory note, and Ford subsequently filed a confession of judgment with the District Court for the full amount. At this time, Becky was allegedly helping Ford to refinance Ford's debt, and Ford sold three pieces of farm machinery and an airplane to Becky. Section 503(c) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 requires that every aircraft transfer be evidenced by a recorded instrument before the rights of innocent third parties can be affected; however, neither Ford nor Becky recorded the transfer. When Lewistown attempted to collect on its judgment, it inquired with the state Department of Transportation and the Federal Aviation Administration about the ownership of the aircraft and determined that the aircraft was still registered in Ford's name and had no liens or encumbrances attached, and that Ford had paid the annual federal registration fees. Lewistown then seized the aircraft and advised Ford that it intended to sell the aircraft to satisfy the judgment against Ford. Upon learning of the seizure of the aircraft, Becky intervened and sought a stay of execution of judgment, which the District Court granted. Lewistown appealed and the Supreme Court reversed. Lewistown, as judgment creditor, was entitled to rely on the federal records, but because Becky's ownership interest was unrecorded at the time of Lewistown's execution of the levy, Becky's interest was invalid as to Lewistown and could not be used to cut off Lewistown's right to levy on the aircraft. Lewistown Propane Co. v. Ford, 2002 MT 27, 308 M 243, 42 P3d 229 (2002), applying Kovacich v. Norgaard, 221 M 26, 716 P2d 633 (1986).

Deficiency Judgment — Order to Assign Future Proceeds From Separate Cause of Action to Judgment Creditor Not Erroneous: Andersen executed a promissory note in favor of the Alpine Buffalo, Elk and Llama Ranch, Inc. (Alpine), and secured the note with real property. When no payments were made, Alpine received a judgment and foreclosure decree. After Andersen's property was sold, Alpine also received a deficiency judgment in the amount still owing. Andersen neither appealed the judgment nor made payment. Alpine later learned that Andersen was plaintiff in a pending malpractice claim against her former attorney, so Alpine sought and received an assignment of the prospective proceeds from that action. Andersen appealed the assignment order, claiming that Alpine's reliance on former Rule 70, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), was misplaced because that rule is a civil contempt statute that applies only to a contemptuous party. Alpine conceded the inapplicability of the rule, but the Supreme Court pointed out that Rule 70 was not the sole basis for Alpine's motion for assignment, citing Smith v. Foss, 177 M 443, 582 P2d 329 (1978), for the proposition that a District Court possesses jurisdiction to enter any necessary orders to enforce its judgments. The District Court's assignment order did not assign Andersen's legal malpractice cause of action to Alpine, nor did Alpine receive all legal rights and title to that action. Rather, the assignment order merely required Andersen to assign future proceeds from the other litigation to Alpine in an amount limited to the funds necessary to satisfy the deficiency judgment amount. Andersen failed to establish error in the District Court's order requiring Andersen, as judgment debtor, to assign future proceeds from the separate cause of action to Alpine, the judgment creditor. Alpine Buffalo, Elk & Llama Ranch, Inc. v. Andersen, 2001 MT 307, 307 M 509, 38 P3d 815 (2001), distinguishing Coty v. Cogswell, 100 M 496, 50 P2d 249 (1935), and Youngblood v. Am. St. Ins. Co., 262 M 391, 866 P2d 203 (1993). See also Blackmore v. Dunster, 2012 MT 74, 364 Mont. 384, 274 P.3d 748, holding that a cause of action deriving from a tort is not subject to levy and purchase.

Judgment Not Creating Lien Prior to Execution on Personal Property: In settling the assets of a partnership, the District Court stated that its judgment constituted a lien against all personal property of the partnership. The remaining partner contended that based on this section, the court lacked authority to create a lien against personal property and that a judgment cannot become a lien against personal property until there has been an execution to enforce the judgment. Reversing, the Supreme Court agreed that there is no authority for a District Court to summarily convert a judgment to a lien against personal property, noting that a lien does not arise prior to execution on personal property. In re Estate of Bolinger, 1998 MT 303, 292 M 97, 971 P2d 767, 55 St. Rep. 1251 (1998).

Judgment Lien Extinguished by Operation of Law: In a case filed in order to have a series of conveyances declared fraudulent, the District Court erred by failing to determine that the judgment lien was extinguished by operation of law, terminating any rights of the plaintiff to the subject property. A judgment may be enforced for a period of 10 years from docketing; a writ of execution may be issued to enforce a judgment for a period of 6 years, which may be extended by the court for up to an additional 4 years; a judgment lien continues for 6 years following docketing of the judgment and then expires by operation of law (see 2001 amendment); a judgment may be extended past its 10-year duration only by filing a separate action to obtain a new judgment on the existing judgment. Jones v. Arnold, 272 M 317, 900 P2d 917, 52 St. Rep. 779 (1995).

Lien Not Extinguished by Passage of Six Years — Diligent Defense: Pursuant to a court decision in 1982, the plaintiff Stoddard was granted specific performance of a contract to convey real property to him from the Gookins. The decision also remanded the case for a determination of damages due the Gookins. As ordered by the Supreme Court, the Gookins deeded the property to Stoddard in 1982. Stoddard in turn transferred a one-third interest in the property to his attorney. In 1986, the lower court determined that the Gookins were entitled to $104,000 in damages. To satisfy the judgment, the Gookins levied against Stoddard's two-thirds interest in the property and sold it for $88,000. The Gookins then sought to levy against the one-third interest in the property held by Huntley, Stoddard's attorney. The Supreme Court held that Huntley had notice that the 1982 decision created a lien on all real property of the judgment debtor, Stoddard. The Supreme Court ruled that the lien created by this section did not expire 6 years after the 1982 case because that case had been remanded to determine damages and the action to sell Huntley's interest in the property had been brought within 6 years of the 1986 decision (see 2001 amendment). The Gookins had diligently defended and pursued their rights and interest in the property. Laches did not apply. Gookin v. Huntley, 254 M 302, 837 P2d 412, 49 St. Rep. 807 (1992).

State Probate Jurisdiction of Federal Claim — Homestead Exemption — Priority of Liens: Creditor obtained a default judgment in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York against an Alaska resident and attempted to execute on property in Montana that had subsequently come under Montana's exclusive probate jurisdiction. While the federal court retained jurisdiction over claims impacting the estate, the court could not seize and control property in the possession of the state probate court. It was within the jurisdiction of the state court to determine that the real property was subject to family protection allowances and exempt from execution. Although the lien was attached prior to debtor's death, the lien was extinguished upon the exercise of the family protection allowances, and the homestead allowance was exempt from and had priority over all other claims against the estate. In re Estate of Wilhelm, 233 M 255, 760 P2d 718, 45 St. Rep. 1468 (1988).

Equitable Ownership Interest Adequate for Lien Purposes: In order to determine whether the holder of an equitable title was an owner of real property for purposes of establishing a lien under this section, the Supreme Court decided an equitable ownership interest was sufficient. The intent of 25-13-501 is clearly to make a judgment lien operative against all real property interests. Hannah v. Martinson, 232 M 469, 758 P2d 276, 45 St. Rep. 1203 (1988).

When Judgment Lien Attaches: A judgment lien can only attach to the actual interest of the judgment debtor. It cannot attach to an interest that does not exist, nor can it claim superiority as against a valid prior interest. A judgment lien can only bind an interest in real property when the debtor himself, during the existence of the judgment lien, could voluntarily transfer or alienate the interest. Hannah v. Martinson, 232 M 469, 758 P2d 276, 45 St. Rep. 1203 (1988), followed in Disler v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 2000 MT 304, 302 M 391, 15 P3d 864, 57 St. Rep. 1288 (2000).

Survival of Judgment Lien in Bankruptcy — When: Appellants entered a confession of judgment in favor of respondent bank, creating judgment liens on property on which respondent held a secured interest and on other property. In a subsequent bankruptcy proceeding, the bankruptcy court voided the judgment liens as preferential transfers under 11 U.S.C. 547, while preserving "liens and encumbrances" on the property in which respondent held a secured interest. In an action by respondent to execute its lien on secured property, appellant maintained the lien had been voided by bankruptcy court. The Supreme Court looked beyond the record and determined there was no preferential transfer as to the secured property and that the judgment lien on that property survived the bankruptcy court order. Citizens Bank of Mont. v. Brown, 218 M 151, 706 P2d 831, 42 St. Rep. 1477 (1985).

Effect of Discharge in Bankruptcy on Judicial Lien Created by Docketing Judgment: In September 1980, respondent obtained and docketed a judgment against appellants. In May 1981, appellants filed a joint declaration of homestead covering their residence. In August 1981, appellants filed a joint Chapter 7 bankruptcy petition. In December 1981, appellants obtained a personal discharge in bankruptcy. In January 1982, respondent obtained a Writ of Execution and notice of sale and levy upon appellants' residence. Appellants then filed suit against respondent, alleging that respondent's judgment had been voided by the discharge in bankruptcy. The Supreme Court ruled that docketing of the judgment under 25-9-301 had created a judicial lien, that because the appellants had not sought avoidance of respondent's lien in the bankruptcy proceedings, the lien survived the discharge in bankruptcy, and that the lien can be enforced under 70-32-203. Reichert v. Koch, 202 M 167, 655 P2d 993, 40 St. Rep. 8 (1983).

Lien Not Applicable to Personal Property: The lien created by this section is not applicable in the case of a bequest of personal property to a legatee. Hustad v. Reed, 133 M 211, 321 P2d 1083 (1958).

Automatic Attachment to Inherited Real Estate: A docketed judgment is a lien on real estate subsequently acquired by debtor as heir through distribution of his father's estate, even though there was nothing in the records of the County Clerk and Recorder showing the heir's interest. Title vests on death, subject to preexisting obligations. Gaines v. Van Demark, 106 M 1, 74 P2d 454 (1937).

Sale by Judgment Debtor: Where at the time real property was conveyed it was burdened with a judgment lien, the vendee took it subject to such lien, and when thereafter the property was sold on execution to satisfy the lien, the purchaser acquired all the rights the judgment debtor had in the property at the time the judgment became a lien upon it; hence the deed made by the debtor to his vendee did not give a title superior to that of the execution purchaser. Commercial Bank & Trust Co. v. Jordan, 85 M 375, 278 P 832 (1929).

No Application to Undisclosed Interest: Construing the provisions of this section with those of 25-13-501, an interest in real estate not disclosed of record is not subject to the lien of a docketed judgment. Piccolo v. Tanaka, 78 M 445, 253 P 890 (1927), distinguished in Gaines v. Van Demark, 106 M 1, 74 P2d 454 (1937).

After-Acquired Property — Automatic Attachment: A grantee under a deed absolute on its face but in fact a mortgage reconveyed the property by deed to the grantors and presented it for record 5 minutes before a second grantee of the same grantors presented his, also given as security for a loan. Immediately upon the filing for record of the first deed, the grantors were reinvested with the legal title and the judgment lien of a creditor at once attached to the interest of the wife therein and was therefore prior and superior to the claim of the second grantee under decree of foreclosure of his mortgage deed. Isom v. Larson, 78 M 395, 255 P 1049 (1927), distinguished in Gaines v. Van Demark, 106 M 1, 74 P2d 454 (1937).

Application to Undisclosed Common Interest: While the judgment lien provided for by this section attaches to property held by a tenant in common, it does not attach while the debtor's title is undisclosed of record. Isom v. Larson, 78 M 395, 255 P 1049 (1927), distinguished in Gaines v. Van Demark, 106 M 1, 74 P2d 454 (1937).

Expiration of Lien — Time Required for Execution: In order to preserve the priority obtained by a judgment lien on real property, a sale under execution must be made during the life of such lien, 6 years from the date of judgment (this section), or execution must have been issued and proceedings on judicial sale begun before the lien becomes barred, and to avoid operation of such bar, the sale must be proceeded with without any delay greater than is permitted by 25-13-404, the mere issuance of execution being of no avail. Marlowe v. Missoula Gas Co., 68 M 372, 219 P 1111 (1923).

Variance in Names of Vendor and Judgment Debtor — Actual Notice Required: The record of a money judgment against Mrs. C. J. E. cannot be held to have imparted constructive notice to a purchaser of real property from Anna E., the record title holder, that the property was impressed with a lien of judgment, unless the purchaser had actual knowledge that Mrs. C. J. E. and Anna E. were the same person. Poulos v. Lyman Bros. Co., 63 M 561, 208 P 598 (1922).

Time When Judgment Becomes Lien: A judgment is not a lien upon the real estate of the judgment debtor until it is entered on the judgment docket. McMillan v. Davenport, 44 M 23, 118 P 756 (1911); Sklower v. Abbott, 19 M 228, 47 P 901 (1897).

Presumption of Compliance With Statute: In the absence of anything to the contrary, it will be presumed that the Clerk of the District Court performed his official duty as prescribed in this section. Britannia Min. Co. v. USF&G Co., 43 M 93, 115 P 46 (1911).

Application to Federal Court Judgments: This section, by force of the federal statute, applies to the judgments of federal courts within the state. Great Falls Nat'l Bank v. McClure, 176 F 208 (9th Cir. 1910).

Merger of Attachment Lien in Judgment: The lien of an attachment is merged in that of the judgment recovered in the main action; and the judgment continues and may be enforced by execution and levy against any of the real property of the defendant, whether covered by the attachment or not, at any time within 6 years, but not afterward. (See 2001 amendment.) Great Falls Nat'l Bank v. McClure, 176 F 208 (9th Cir. 1910).

Deficiency Judgment Following Execution Sale: Under this section and sections 1571 through 1574, R.C.M. 1921 (since repealed), where real estate is sold under execution and bid in by the judgment creditor for less than the amount of his judgment, the judgment debtor may transfer the interest remaining in him, during the period of redemption, to a third person, who, upon redemption within the statutory time, acquires the legal title free from the lien of a deficiency judgment theretofore entered. McQueeney v. Toomey, 36 M 282, 92 P 561 (1907).

Execution of Judgment — Right of Redemption: An execution sale transfers the legal title to the purchaser, leaving in the judgment debtor simply the right to redeem. McQueeney v. Toomey, 36 M 282, 92 P 561 (1907).

Granting of Judgment Not to Create Lien: The mere rendition of a judgment creates no lien. Wyman v. Jensen, 26 M 227, 67 P 114 (1902).

Setting Aside Fraudulent Conveyance — Necessity to Allege Docketing of Judgment: A complaint by a judgment creditor to set aside his debtor's conveyance of realty as fraudulent, which does not allege the docketing of the creditor's judgment, is insufficient. Wyman v. Jensen, 26 M 227, 67 P 114 (1902).

Attachment to Mining Claim: An unpatented mining claim being real estate, a judgment lien attaches to it under this section. Butte Hardware Co. v. Frank, 25 M 344, 65 P 1 (1901).

Lien Subject to Title in Other Persons: The lien given by this section is not a specific lien or a lien in rem. It affects or charges only the actual interest of the debtor in the land, the subject of the ownership, and does not create a preference over but is subject to all prior legal or equitable titles in other persons. Rockefeller v. Dellinger, 22 M 418, 56 P 822 (1899). See also Stockmen's Nat'l Bank v. Hofeldt, 54 M 205, 169 P 48 (1917).

Judgment Lien Subject to Prior Liens: A judgment lien is not a specific lien upon the real estate of the judgment debtor, so as to constitute a property in the land itself to the exclusion of a prior equitable title in a third person, but is a general lien, securing a right to levy or a preference over interests subsequently acquired and is subject to all prior liens, whether legal or equitable. Vaughn v. Schmalsle, 10 M 186, 25 P 102 (1890), followed in Hannah v. Martinson, 232 M 469, 758 P2d 276, 45 St. Rep. 1203 (1988).

County Attorney Not Authorized to Compromise Support Order on Behalf of Obligee: A County Attorney, in carrying out his responsibility under URESA to represent obligees, may not enter into an agreement with an obligor or his agent to compromise a support order or to allow the sale of property on which a support order is a lien, since under 40-4-208 a support order may only be modified by a court. Further, 40-4-208 provides that a modification of a court support decree may affect only amounts that accrue subsequent to the motion for modification. 41 A.G. Op. 7 (1985).

2003 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapter 45 in (1) in last sentence in exception clause substituted "61-6-123" for "subsection (2)" and increased duration of lien from "6 years" to "10 years from the date of the entry of the judgment". Amendment effective February 26, 2003.

Chapter 510 in (1) in last sentence increased lien time from 6 years to 10 years. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 60 in (2), near middle after "support obligation", inserted "or 10 years from entry of a lump-sum judgment or order for support arrears, whichever is later"; and made minor changes in style.

Severability: Section 18, Ch. 60, L. 1995, was a severability clause.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 631 at beginning of second sentence of (1) inserted exception clause; inserted (2) continuing lien for 10 years after termination of the support obligation; and made minor changes in style.

Attachment in Second County — Transcript Not Required: Where an attachment issued by the court in one county was levied on real estate in another, it was not essential to the establishment of a lien to file a transcript of the judgment in the other county, as provided by this section. Andrews v. Smithson, 114 M 360, 136 P2d 531 (1943); A. M. Holter Hardware Co. v. Ontario Min. Co., 24 M 184, 61 P 3 (1900).

Oil and Gas Lease as After-Acquired Property: Treating a royalty interest in an oil and gas lease as an interest in land, a judgment lien will, under this section, attach though title thereto was not acquired until after the filing of the docket, provided the debtor's title was then disclosed of record. Johannes v. Dwire, 94 M 590, 23 P2d 971 (1933), distinguished in Gaines v. Van Demark, 106 M 1, 74 P2d 454 (1937).

Effect of Filing in Second County: The effect of filing in a county other than that in which a money judgment was rendered a certified transcript of the docket is to impress a lien upon all real property owned by the judgment debtor in the county of its filing, not exempt from execution, or acquired by him thereafter and prior to the expiration of the lien or the satisfaction of the judgment, the lien, however, not attaching to any specific piece of property. Poulos v. Lyman Bros. Co., 63 M 561, 208 P 598 (1922).

Filing Abstracts of Judgment in Another County: An abstract of a Justice's Court judgment may be filed in the office of the Clerk of any District Court. Alternatively, the abstract may be filed and docketed in the county in which the judgment was rendered and may then be issued and filed with the District Court Clerk of another county pursuant to 25-9-302. Under either procedure, the Justice's Court judgment then becomes a lien on any real property owned by the judgment debtor in the county in which the abstract is filed. 37 A.G. Op. 24 (1977).

Registration of Foreign Judgment — No New Judgment Created: Plaintiffs and a Wyoming bank entered into a consent judgment, which was subsequently registered in a Montana federal District Court. The bank then filed a transcript of the judgment in state District Court, and plaintiffs moved to quash the writ of execution, which was subsequently denied by the court. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed and applied the analysis of Juneau Spruce Corp. v. Int'l Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, 128 F. Supp. 697 (D.C. Hawaii 1955), ruling that registration under 28 U.S.C. 1963 constituted a purely ministerial act and that the 6-year period during which a writ of execution can be issued commences on the date on which the judgment was docketed in the original forum when the judgment was filed in Montana federal District Court. Defendant Not Allowed to Characterize Damages: Shilhaneks were injured in a vehicle accident, and defendants were ordered to pay more than $3 million in damages, including punitive damages. Defendants requested that the $750,000 tendered to Shilhaneks to date be allocated toward payment of the punitive award and that Shilhaneks be required to file a corresponding satisfaction of judgment with respect to the punitive damages award, in essence asserting that a defendant has the power to specifically designate payment toward a particular award. Defendants cited this section for the rule that a satisfaction of judgment must be provided by the party in whose favor judgment is entered and contended that under 28-1-1106 and 28-1-1225, the power lies with the debtor, not the creditor, when it comes to designating to which particular obligation a payment should be credited. The District Court denied the request, noting that Title 28 applies only to contractual obligations and that Title 25 governs obligations arising from judgments. The District Court did not abuse its discretion, given defendants' failure to provide a legal basis that would allow them to dictate how damages owed are characterized, the fact that defendants owed more than double the available insurance coverage and were obligated to pay the policy limits to satisfy the verdict, and that allocating 22% of the available insurance proceeds to the punitive damage award would have harsh tax consequences on Shilhaneks. Findings and Conclusions of Federal Bankruptcy Court Binding Upon State District Court — Forum Selection Clause in Bankruptcy Settlement Agreement Binding: After a federal Bankruptcy Court in Missouri issued a judgment against Lurie, Lurie and the liquidating trustee, Blackwell, held settlement negotiations resulting in three settlement agreements. The agreements were signed by Blackwell but not by Lurie. The Bankruptcy Court gave Lurie an extended period of time in which to close the agreements. Later, after the Bankruptcy Court issued findings and conclusions and an order finding that Lurie could not, as a matter of law, comply with the agreements and that certain release language in the agreements was therefore unenforceable, Lurie filed "releases" in a Montana District Court and moved the District Court to order the release of the judgment of the Bankruptcy Court, which had been filed against Lurie as a foreign judgment. The Supreme Court held that the District Court had properly concluded that the findings and conclusions and the order of the Missouri Bankruptcy Court were binding upon the District Court under 26-3-201. The Supreme Court further held that whether the three settlement agreements, unsigned but "released" by Lurie, satisfied the judgment against Lurie under this section was not a matter for the District Court to decide because the settlement agreements contained forum selection clauses designating the federal Bankruptcy Court in Missouri as the only court in which issues relating to the enforcement of the agreements could be litigated. Blackwell v. Lurie, 284 M 351, 943 P2d 1318, 54 St. Rep. 916 (1997). See also Lurie v. Blackwell, 285 M 404, 948 P2d 1161, 54 St. Rep. 1215 (1997), and Lurie v. Judgment — Setoff Based on Stipulation: Plaintiff received a judgment against defendant. Defendant appealed, and the appeal was dismissed with prejudice when defendant advised the court that defendant did not wish to proceed with it. Defendant then filed a motion for a set off of an amount that plaintiff and defendant were both liable to pay to a third party. Defendant's attorney and plaintiff's attorney had entered into a stipulation that plaintiff was primarily liable and defendant secondarily liable for that amount and that if defendant paid it, the payment would be set off against any judgment granted plaintiff against defendant. The lower court properly set off that amount as partial satisfaction of the judgment. Although the motion was not made within the time required by the rules, it was properly considered because the Clerk of Court did not give defendant notice of entry of the judgment against defendant; therefore, the time for filing the motion had not commenced to run, since the motion was to be made within a certain time from the notice of entry of judgment. AAR Constr., Inc. v. Fergus Elec. Co-op., Inc., 215 M 102, 695 P2d 819, 42 St. Rep. 214 (1985).

Compelling Acknowledgment of Satisfaction: Until a judgment is in fact satisfied, the court has no authority to compel an acknowledgment of satisfaction or endorsement on the face of the judgment or on the margin of the record of judgment. Galbreath v. Armstrong, 121 M 387, 193 P2d 630 (1948).

Tender of Satisfaction Insufficient: "Satisfaction in fact" means payment of the judgment without the entry of record of such payment, and a tender of satisfaction is not the same as satisfaction. Galbreath v. Armstrong, 121 M 387, 193 P2d 630 (1948).

Tender of Satisfaction Refused: Where tender of satisfaction of judgment is refused, there can be no "satisfaction in fact" of the judgment by the payment of the money into court, but the debt must be extinguished under the provisions of 28-1-1225. Galbreath v. Armstrong, 121 M 387, 193 P2d 630 (1948).

Injunction Against Sale on Execution — Adequate Remedy at Law: A judgment debtor whose property was about to be sold under execution, after the judgment had been otherwise satisfied, had a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law, and therefore injunction did not lie to restrain the sale. Donovan v. McDevitt, 36 M 61, 92 P 49 (1907).

Duplication of Judgments — Satisfaction of All: Where a judgment once entered upon a verdict is again entered nunc pro tunc and is affirmed on appeal, the appellant cannot complain that two judgments stand against him upon the same cause of action and verdict, as under this section, upon satisfaction of said judgment, entry of satisfaction must be made, showing a cancellation of all judgments entered upon said verdict. Work v. N. Pac. R.R., 11 M 513, 29 P 280 (1891).

Case Notes

No Error in Montana Court's Refusal to Accord Full Faith and Credit to Competing Rulings Issued by Courts of Another State: While a Montana case concerning insurance policy stacking issues was pending, defendant North Dakota insurance company raised the same issues in North Dakota courts, received a favorable declaratory judgment against stacking in the North Dakota Supreme Court, and then argued that the full faith and credit clause of Art. IV, sec. 1, of the U.S. Constitution required the Montana District Court to give preclusive effect to the North Dakota rulings. The Montana Court refused to give full faith and credit to the North Dakota rulings, and defendant appealed. The Montana Supreme Court noted that under Carr v. Bett, 1998 MT 266, 291 M 326, 970 P2d 1017 (1998), a final judgment rendered by a state court is entitled to full faith and credit in the courts of its sister states, that full faith and credit generally requires every state to give to a judgment at least the res judicata effect that the judgment would be accorded in the state that rendered the judgment, and that there is no public policy exception for the full faith and credit due judgments from another state. In this case, the basic elements of res judicata seemed to be satisfied by the North Dakota rulings. However, full faith and credit due to the judgment from a sister state is not automatic. The clause leaves some scope for state control within its borders of affairs that are particularly its own and does not compel a state to substitute the statutes of another state for its own statutes "dealing with a subject matter concerning which it is competent to legislate". The court cited the rationale in Restatement (Second) of Conflicts of Laws 103 that a judgment rendered in one state need not be recognized or enforced in a sister state if that recognition and enforcement are not required by the national policy of full faith and credit because it would involve an improper interference with important interests of the sister state. Here, the North Dakota declaratory judgment action was begun in an attempt to apply North Dakota law through the back door to avoid a potentially adverse result in Montana. The court declined to be bound by a North Dakota declaratory judgment aimed at exerting control over ongoing litigation in Montana. According to the Restatement, it would defeat the purpose of forging national unity to use full faith and credit to needlessly expand a single cause of action into multistate litigation and would interfere with ongoing Montana litigation. Thus, in the narrow context of this case, the Montana court did not err in refusing to give full faith and credit to the North Dakota rulings. Wamsley v. Nodak Mut. Ins. Co., 2008 MT 56, 341 M 467, 178 P3d 102 (2008).

Effect Given to Final Judgment of Oregon Workers' Compensation Board Under Full Faith and Credit Clause: Martin worked for an Oregon trucking company and was injured in a fall at a Montana truck stop. Martin received workers' compensation payments from SAIF Corporation, the Oregon workers' compensation insurer, and also filed and settled a third-party tort claim against the owners of the Montana truck stop, and SAIF sought to subrogate the claim under Oregon law. The Oregon Workers' Compensation Board issued a final decision in SAIF's favor and directed Martin to distribute a portion of the third-party settlement to SAIF. Martin appealed the decision to the Oregon Court of Appeals but voluntarily dismissed the appeal. Martin filed for declaratory judgment in Montana, requesting that the District Court determine that Montana law applied to the distribution of proceeds from the third-party tort action, but the District Court granted summary judgment to SAIF in the declaratory judgment action, and Martin appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Although Montana policy dictates against subrogation claims until after a worker is made whole, no public policy exception exists to the full faith and credit accorded to final judgments. The Oregon Workers' Compensation Board's judgment was final, and the full faith and credit clause of the U.S. Constitution obligated the District Court to give effect to the Oregon judgment, so summary judgment for SAIF was proper. Martin v. SAIF Corp., 2007 MT 234, 339 M 167, 167 P3d 916 (2007), following Carr v. Bett, 1998 MT 266, 291 M 326, 970 P2d 1017 (1998), and distinguishing Oberson v. Federated Mut. Ins. Co., 2005 MT 329, 330 M 1, 126 P3d 459 (2005).

Erroneous Denial of Motion to Quash Writ of Execution: A federal District Court allowed a default judgment against Clark in favor of plaintiffs. In order to execute the judgment on Clark's Montana assets, plaintiffs docketed the judgment in federal District Court in Montana, and about the same time, plaintiffs brought an action in Montana state court, asserting that Clark fraudulently transferred real property in order to avoid reimbursing plaintiffs. Following denial of the fraudulent transfer claim in Gulf Ins. Co. v. Clark, 2001 MT 45, 304 M 264, 20 P3d 780 (2001), plaintiffs docketed the federal judgment in Lake County District Court, requesting and receiving a writ of execution, and a levying officer than executed on Clark's accounts. Upon notice of the levy on the accounts, Clark moved to quash the writ of execution, asserting that the federal judgment was invalid, that the writ was void because the federal District Court never obtained proper personal jurisdiction, and that service by publication was inadequate because the federal order required personal service. The state District Court concluded that Clark cited no authority allowing a state court to invalidate a federal District Court's judgment when the federal transcription of judgment is filed for execution in state court, so Clark's motion to quash was denied, and Clark appealed. As set out in Carr v. Bett, 1998 MT 266, 291 M 326, 970 P2d 1017 (1998), a party seeking to vacate a foreign judgment filed in Montana state courts may do so only upon defenses that make the underlying judgment invalid or unenforceable, which include a lack of personal or subject matter jurisdiction of the rendering court, fraud in the procurement of the judgment, lack of due process, or satisfaction. However, if a foreign judgment is valid, it should have the same credit, validity, and effect in every other court of the United States that it had in the court in which it was pronounced. Thus, the state District Court erred in concluding that it had no authority to review whether the federal court had personal jurisdiction over Clark. The Supreme Court then went on to consider whether Clark was properly subject to the federal court's jurisdiction in order to determine if the federal default judgment was valid. Service by publication did not provide the federal court with jurisdiction to enter the default judgment because that service was not properly completed and was thus ineffective. In its order granting service by publication, the federal court concluded that service could not be accomplished other than by publication, effectively determining, based on plaintiffs' representations, that personal service had not been accomplished. Therefore, the state District Court committed reversible error when it failed to hold that service by publication was not properly accomplished pursuant to the federal court order. Gulf Ins. Co. v. Clark, 2003 MT 87, 315 M 121, 68 P3d 673 (2003).

Defenses Must Be Directed at Validity of Foreign Judgment: Citing Durfee v. Duke, 375 US 106 (1963), which held that full faith and credit generally requires each state to give to a judgment of a sister state at least the res judicata effect that the judgment would be accorded the state that rendered it, the Montana Supreme Court held that the only defenses that may be raised to destroy the full faith and credit obligation owed to a final judgment are those directed at the validity of the judgment, such as lack of personal or subject matter jurisdiction, fraud, lack of due process, satisfaction, or other grounds that make the foreign judgment invalid or unenforceable. Carr v. Bett, 1998 MT 266, 291 M 326, 970 P2d 1017, 55 St. Rep. 1098 (1998).

Full Faith and Credit Afforded Out-of-State Renewable Child Support Judgment — Res Judicata Applicable: Article IV, sec. 1, U.S. Const., provides that full faith and credit be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state. As restated in Baker v. Gen. Motors Corp., 522 US 222, 139 L Ed 2d 580, 118 S Ct 657 (1998), a final judgment in one state, if rendered by a court with adjudicatory authority over the subject matter and persons governed by the judgment, qualifies for recognition throughout the land. When issues of jurisdiction have been determined by one court, the doctrine of res judicata precludes a second court from considering jurisdiction as long as the first court fully and fairly considered the issue, and that judgment, as to jurisdiction, is entitled to full faith and credit in the second court. In the present case, a Utah renewable child support judgment, in which the Utah court established jurisdiction of the parties, was entitled to full faith and credit in Montana, despite contentions by the husband that he no longer had minimum contacts with Utah after moving to Montana. The jurisdiction arguments raised before the Montana Supreme Court were identical to the arguments that were previously raised, fairly considered, and finally decided in Utah, precluding relitigation by the Montana court under res judicata. In re Child Support of Mason, 1998 MT 192, 290 M 253, 964 P2d 743, 55 St. Rep. 803 (1998), followed with regard to full faith and credit of a judgment by an out-of-state court following full and fair consideration of jurisdiction in Genuine Parts Co. v. Rascal's Auto Parts, Inc., 2008 MT 313, 346 M 56, 192 P3d 1153 (2008).

No State Jurisdiction to Enforce Tribal Court Judgment on Reservation Via Uniform Foreign Money-Judgments Recognition Act: Two non-Indian plaintiffs obtained judgments in the Fort Peck Tribal Court against Anderson, an enrolled tribal member living within the boundaries of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, for Anderson's purchase of cattle feed supplement and for work performed on the reservation in developing water sources in Anderson's pastures. Plaintiffs then filed suit in District Court against Anderson under the Uniform Foreign Money-Judgments Recognition Act (Recognition Act), requesting that the court recognize the tribal court judgments and give full faith and credit to the judgments, with rights of full enforcement pursuant to Montana law. The District Court ruled that the tribal court judgments must be recognized under the Recognition Act because the Fort Peck Tribes fall within the definition of "foreign state". The court also concluded that even though the Recognition Act does not apply to tribal court judgments, the judgments must be recognized under the doctrine of comity. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, ruling that the District Court erred in determining that the tribal court judgments could be enforced within the exterior boundaries of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation by the provisions of the Recognition Act. If the judgment debtor is a tribal member living within the exterior boundaries of the reservation, the tribal court has exclusive jurisdiction to enforce a tribal court judgment against assets owned by the member and located within the boundaries of the reservation. Under the Recognition Act, Montana courts have no jurisdiction to enforce a judgment within the jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment. Anderson v. Engelke, 1998 MT 24, 287 M 283, 954 P2d 1106, 55 St. Rep. 86 (1998).

Tribal Support Order Entitled to Full Faith and Credit: The lower court held that the state could seek to enforce a tribal court's child support order only by initiating an action in District Court rather than pursuing administrative enforcement. The Supreme Court held that under the Child Support Enforcement Act, the tribal support order was entitled to full faith and credit and therefore could be enforced by the simplified registration procedures of the Act and that, additionally, income could be withheld without court action under the Montana Child Support Enforcement Act. In re Support Obligation of Day v. St., 272 M 170, 900 P2d 296, 52 St. Rep. 680 (1995), distinguishing Wippert v. Blackfeet Tribe, 201 M 299, 654 P2d 512 (1982). However, see Anderson v. Engelke, 1998 MT 24, 287 M 283, 954 P2d 1106, 55 St. Rep. 86 (1998), ruling that a tribal court judgment cannot be enforced via the Uniform Foreign Money-Judgments Recognition Act against assets owned by a tribal member and located within the boundaries of a reservation.

Authentication of Foreign Judgment: A foreign judgment filed under the Uniform Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act must be authenticated in accordance with the provisions of former Rule 44(a)(1), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). 44 A.G. Op. 38 (1992).

Fees Collectible Upon Filing of Foreign Judgment: Once a foreign judgment has been properly filed pursuant to this section, the Clerk of Court is required to treat the foreign judgment as a domestic judgment. The $60 fee paid at the time of filing replaces the filing fee paid at the commencement of an action or appearance of a defendant under 25-1-201(1)(a), the fee collected on the entry of judgment from the prevailing party under 25-1-201(1)(c), and the fee for filing and docketing a transcript of judgment or abstract of judgment from another court under 25-1-201(1)(h). The Clerk should therefore collect the $60 fee required in 25-9-506, the $5 fee for issuing an execution or order of sale on a foreclosure of a lien under 25-1-201(1)(i), and any other fees for services requested by the judgment creditor in the enforcement of the judgment. 44 A.G. Tribal Court Judgment Not to Be Filed as Foreign Judgment — Exception: A judgment, decree, or order of an Indian tribal court may not be filed as a foreign judgment under the Uniform Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act unless the judgment, decree, or order concerns an Indian child custody proceeding. 44 A.G. Op. 15 (1991).

Case Notes

Dismissal for Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction — Barton Doctrine Followed — Substantive Defenses Irrelevant: Lurie filed a complaint in state court alleging abuse of process against Blackwell, individually and in his capacity as liquidating trustee. Blackwell removed the case to federal District Court, which dismissed the complaint and remanded to state court. The state District Court granted Blackwell's motion to dismiss based on the Barton doctrine that provides that leave of the appointing forum must be obtained by any party wishing to institute an action in a nonappointing forum against a trustee for acts done in the trustee's official capacity and with the trustee's authority. The Supreme Court upheld the dismissal and refused to rule on Blackwell's substantive defenses, once it determined that it had no subject matter jurisdiction. Lurie v. Blackwell, 285 M 404, 948 P2d 1161, 54 St. Rep. 1215 (1997).

Capacity of Plaintiff Not Stated in Notice of Filing of Foreign Judgment — Foreign Judgment Not Defective: After a foreign judgment of a Missouri Bankruptcy Court was filed against him, Lurie argued that the judgment was defective because the notice of filing failed to disclose that the plaintiff, a liquidating bankruptcy trustee, acted in his capacity as trustee. The Supreme Court held that there is nothing in this section that requires the capacity of the plaintiff to be stated. The Supreme Court also noted that under former Rule 17(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), Blackwell, the bankruptcy trustee, was allowed to bring suit in his own name and also pointed out that the judgment of the Bankruptcy Court clearly identified Blackwell as the liquidating trustee and that because of the prior bankruptcy proceedings in which Lurie participated, Lurie must have known or should have known that Blackwell was bringing the action in his capacity as liquidating trustee and not in his individual capacity. Blackwell v. Lurie, 284 M 351, 943 P2d 1318, 54 St. Rep. 916 (1997).

Findings and Conclusions of Federal Bankruptcy Court Binding Upon State District Court — Forum Selection Clause in Bankruptcy Settlement Agreement Binding: After a federal Bankruptcy Court in Missouri issued a judgment against Lurie, Lurie and the liquidating trustee, Blackwell, held settlement negotiations resulting in three settlement agreements. The agreements were signed by Blackwell but not by Lurie. The Bankruptcy Court gave Lurie an extended period of time in which to close the agreements. Later, after the Bankruptcy Court issued findings and conclusions and an order finding that Lurie could not, as a matter of law, comply with the agreements and that certain release language in the agreements was therefore unenforceable, Lurie filed "releases" in a Montana District Court and moved the District Court to order the release of the judgment of the Bankruptcy Court, which had been filed against Lurie as a foreign judgment. The Supreme Court held that the District Court had properly concluded that the findings and conclusions and the order of the Missouri Bankruptcy Court were binding upon the District Court under 26-3-201. The Supreme Court further held that whether the three settlement agreements, unsigned but "released" by Lurie, satisfied the judgment against Lurie under 25-9-311 was not a matter for the District Court to decide because the settlement agreements contained forum selection clauses designating the federal Bankruptcy Court in Missouri as the only court in which issues relating to the enforcement of the agreements could be litigated. Blackwell v. Lurie, 284 M 351, 943 P2d 1318, 54 St. Rep. 916 (1997). See also Lurie v. Blackwell, 285 M 404, 948 P2d 1161, 54 St. Rep. 1215 (1997), and Lurie v. 2005 Amendment: Chapter 163 deleted former (2) that read: "(2) A person filing a judgment against a customer of a foreign capital depository, as defined in 32-8-103, shall pay to the clerk of court a fee of $2,500"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2005.

2001 Amendment: Chapter 585 inserted (4) requiring fees to be forwarded to state treasurer for deposit in state general fund. Amendment effective July 1, 2002.

Code Commissioner Instruction: Pursuant to sec. 47, Ch. 257, L. 2001, in (4) in version effective July 1, 2002, the code commissioner changed "state treasurer" to "department of revenue".

Saving Clause: Section 55, Ch. 585, L. 2001, was a saving clause.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 382 at beginning of (1) inserted exception clause; inserted (2) establishing a $2,500 fee for filing a judgment against a customer of a foreign capital depository; and made minor changes in style.

1997 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 382, L. 1997, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because the bill gives the state banking board and the department of commerce authority to adopt administrative rules to effectuate the purposes, policies, and provisions of this bill. The legislature intends that rules be adopted by the state banking board to govern the processes and procedures for both issuing a charter and for suspending or revoking a charter for a foreign capital depository. Because the department of commerce bears responsibility for the regulation and supervision of a foreign capital depository, the legislature finds it prudent to delegate rulemaking authority to that department with respect to the conduct of examinations and inspections, for mandatory reports, and for other related administrative matters. Because the financial privacy of depository customers must be afforded the highest protection possible within the parameters of state and federal law and because an applicant for a depository charter must be provided a readily discernable combination of certainty and flexibility with respect to the services provided by a depository, a blanket delegation of rulemaking authority is not granted to either the board or the department."

Severability: Section 87, Ch. 382, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Attorney General's Opinions

Distribution of Foreign Judgment Filing Fee: The $60 fee collected by the Clerk of Court at the time of filing a foreign judgment must be distributed in accordance with the provisions of 25-1-201(2). (See 2001 amendment.) 44 A.G. Op. 38 (1992).

Fees Collectible Upon Filing of Foreign Judgment: Once a foreign judgment has been properly filed pursuant to 25-9-503, the Clerk of Court is required to treat the foreign judgment as a domestic judgment. The $60 fee paid at the time of filing replaces the filing fee paid at the commencement of an action or appearance of a defendant under 25-1-201(1)(a), the fee collected on the entry of judgment from the prevailing party under 25-1-201(1)(c), and the fee for filing and docketing a transcript of judgment or abstract of judgment from another court under 25-1-201(1)(h). The Clerk should therefore collect the $60 fee required in this section, the $5 fee for issuing an execution or order of sale on a foreclosure of a lien under 25-1-201(1)(i), and any other fees for services requested by the judgment creditor in the enforcement of the judgment. 44 A.G. Op. 38 (1992).

Part 6
Uniform Foreign-Country Money Judgments Recognition Act

Part Official Comments

PREFATORY NOTE

This Act is a revision of the Uniform Foreign Money-Judgments Recognition Act of 1962. That Act codified the most prevalent common law rules with regard to the recognition of money judgments rendered in other countries. The hope was that codification by a state of its rules on the recognition of foreign-country money judgments, by satisfying reciprocity concerns of foreign courts, would make it more likely that money judgments rendered in that state would be recognized in other countries. Towards this end, the Act sets out the circumstances in which the courts in states that have adopted the Act must recognize foreign-country money judgments. It delineates a minimum of foreign-country judgments that must be recognized by the courts of adopting states, leaving those courts free to recognize other foreign-country judgments not covered by the Act under principles of comity or otherwise. Since its promulgation over forty years ago, the 1962 Act has been adopted in a majority of the states and has been in large part successful in carrying out it purpose of establishing uniform and clear standards under which state courts will enforce the foreign-country money judgments that come within its scope.

This Act continues the basic policies and approach of the 1962 Act. Its purpose is not to depart from the basic rules or approach of the 1962 Act, which have withstood well the test of time, but rather to update the 1962 Act, to clarify its provisions, and to correct problems created by the interpretation of the provisions of that Act by the courts over the years since its promulgation. Among the more significant issues that have arisen under the 1962 Act which are addressed in this Revised Act are (1) the need to update and clarify the definitions section; (2) the need to reorganize and clarify the scope provisions, and to allocate the burden of proof with regard to establishing application of the Act; (3) the need to set out the procedure by which recognition of a foreign-country money judgment under the Act must be sought; (4) the need to clarify and, to a limited extent, expand upon the grounds for denying recognition in light of differing interpretations of those provisions in the current case law; (5) the need to expressly allocate the burden of proof with regard to the grounds for denying recognition; and (6) the need to establish a statute of limitations for recognition actions.

In the course of drafting this Act, the drafters revisited the decision made in the 1962 Act not to require reciprocity as a condition to recognition of the foreign-country money judgments covered by the Act. After much discussion, the drafters decided that the approach of the 1962 Act continues to be the wisest course with regard to this issue. While recognition of U.S. judgments continues to be problematic in a number of foreign countries, there was insufficient evidence to establish that a reciprocity requirement would have a greater effect on encouraging foreign recognition of U.S. judgments than does the approach taken by the Act. At the same time, the certainty and uniformity provided by the approach of the 1962 Act, and continued in this Act, creates a stability in this area that facilitates international commercial transactions.

No State Jurisdiction to Enforce Tribal Court Judgment on Reservation Via Uniform Foreign Money-Judgments Recognition Act: Two non-Indian plaintiffs obtained judgments in the Fort Peck Tribal Court against Anderson, an enrolled tribal member living within the boundaries of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, for Anderson's purchase of cattle feed supplement and for work performed on the reservation in developing water sources in Anderson's pastures. Plaintiffs then filed suit in District Court against Anderson under the Uniform Foreign Money-Judgments Recognition Act (Recognition Act), requesting that the court recognize the tribal court judgments and give full faith and credit to the judgments, with rights of full enforcement pursuant to Montana law. The District Court ruled that the tribal court judgments must be recognized under the Recognition Act because the Fort Peck Tribes fall within the definition of "foreign state". The court also concluded that even though the Recognition Act does not apply to tribal court judgments, the judgments must be recognized under the doctrine of comity. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, ruling that the District Court erred in determining that the tribal court judgments could be enforced within the exterior boundaries of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation by the provisions of the Recognition Act. If the judgment debtor is a tribal member living within the exterior boundaries of the reservation, the tribal court has exclusive jurisdiction to enforce a tribal court judgment against assets owned by the member and located within the boundaries of the reservation. Under the Recognition Act, Montana courts have no jurisdiction to enforce a judgment within the jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment. Anderson v. Engelke, 1998 MT 24, 287 M 283, 954 P2d 1106, 55 St. Rep. 86 (1998).

2009 Amendment: Chapter 176 changed short title from Uniform Foreign Money-Judgments Recognition Act to Uniform Foreign-Country Money Judgments Recognition Act. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Saving Clause: Section 12, Ch. 176, L. 2009, was a saving clause.

Applicability: Section 13, Ch. 176, L. 2009, provided: "[This act] applies to all actions commenced on or after [the effective date of this act] in which the issue of recognition of a foreign-country judgment is raised." Effective October 1, 2009.

25-9-602. Definitions.

Official Comments

Source: This section is derived from Section 1 of the Uniform Foreign Money-Judgments Recognition Act of 1962.

1. The defined terms "foreign state" and "foreign judgment" in the 1962 Act have been changed to "foreign country" and "foreign-country judgment" in order to make it clear that the Act does not apply to recognition of sister-state judgments. Some courts have noted that the "foreign state" and "foreign judgment" definitions of the 1962 Act have caused confusion as to whether the Act should apply to sister-state judgments because "foreign state" and "foreign judgment" are terms of art generally used in connection with recognition and enforcement of sister-state judgments. See, e.g., Eagle Leasing v. Amandus, 476 N.W.2d 35 (S.Ct. Iowa 1991) (reversing lower court's application of UFMJRA to a sister-state judgment, but noting lower court's confusion was understandable as "foreign judgment" is term of art normally applied to sister-state judgments). See also, Uniform Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act § 1 [25-9-502] (defining "foreign judgment" as the judgment of a sister state or federal court).

The 1962 Act defines a "foreign state" as "any governmental unit other than the United States, or any state, district, commonwealth, territory, insular possession thereof, or the Panama Canal Zone, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, or the Ryuku Islands." Rather than simply updating the list in the 1962 Act's definition of "foreign state," the new definition of "foreign country" in this Act combines the "listing" approach of the 1962 Act's "foreign state" definition with a provision that defines "foreign country" in terms of whether the judgments of the particular government's courts are initially subject to the Full Faith and Credit Clause standards for determining whether those judgments will be recognized. Under this new definition, a governmental unit is a "foreign country" if it is (1) not the United States or a state, district, commonwealth, territory or insular possession of the United States; and (2) its judgments are not initially subject to Full Faith and Credit Clause standards.

The Full Faith and Credit Clause, Art. IV, section 1, provides that "Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general Laws prescribe the Manner in which such Acts, Records, and Proceedings shall be proved, and the Effect thereof." Whether the judgments of a governmental unit are subject to the Full Faith and Credit Clause may be determined by judicial interpretation of the Full Faith and Credit Clause or by statute, or by a combination of these two sources. For example, pursuant to the authority granted by the second sentence of the Full Faith and Credit Clause, Congress has passed 28 U.S.C.A. § 1738, which provides inter alia that court records from "any State, Territory, or Possession of the United States" are entitled to full faith and credit under the Full Faith and Credit Clause. In Stoll v. Gottlieb, 305 U.S. 165, 170 (1938), the United States Supreme Court held that this statute also requires that full faith and credit be given to judgments of federal courts. States also have made determinations as to whether certain types of judgments are subject to the Full Faith and Credit Clause. E.g. Day v. Montana Dept. Of Social & Rehab. Servs., [272 M 170,] 900 P.2d 296 (Mont. 1995) (tribal court judgment not subject to Full Faith and Credit, and should be treated with same deference shown foreign-country judgments). Under the definition of "foreign country" in this Act, the determination as to whether a governmental unit's judgments are subject to full faith and credit standards should be made by reference to any relevant law, whether statutory or decisional, that is applicable "in this state."

The definition of "foreign country" in terms of those judgments not subject to Full Faith and Credit standards also has the advantage of more effectively coordinating the Act with the Uniform Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act. That Act, which establishes a registration procedure for the enforcement of sister state and equivalent judgments, defines a "foreign judgment" as "any judgment, decree, or order of a court of the United States or of any other court which is entitled to full faith and credit in this state." Uniform Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act, § 1 [25-9-502] (1964). By defining "foreign country" in the Recognition Act in terms of those judgments not subject to full faith and credit standards, this Act makes it clear that the Enforcement Act and the Recognition Act are mutually exclusive - if a foreign money judgment is subject to full faith and credit standards, then the Enforcement Act's registration procedure is available with regard to its enforcement; if the foreign money judgment is not subject to full faith and credit standards, then the foreign money judgment may not be enforced until recognition of it has been obtained in accordance with the provisions of the Recognition Act.

2. The definition of "foreign-country judgment" in this Act differs significantly from the 1962 Act's definition of "foreign judgment." The 1962 Act's definition served in large part as a scope provision for the Act. The part of the definition defining the scope of the Act has been moved to section 3 [25-9-603], which is the scope section.

3. The definition of "foreign-country judgment" in this Act refers to "a judgment" of "a court" of the foreign country. The foreign-country judgment need not take a particular form - any order or decree that meets the requirements of this section and comes within the scope of the Act under Section 3 [25-9-603] is subject to the Act. Similarly, any competent government tribunal that issues such a "judgment" comes within the term "court" for purposes of this Act. The judgment, however, must be a judgment of an adjudicative body of the foreign country, and not the result of an alternative dispute mechanism chosen by the parties. Thus, foreign arbitral awards and agreements to arbitrate are not covered by this Act. They are governed instead by federal law, Chapter 2 of the U.S. Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C. §§ 201-208, implementing the United Nations Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards and Chapter 3 of the U.S. Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C. §§ 301-307, implementing the Inter-American Convention on International Commercial Arbitration. A judgment of a foreign court confirming or setting aside an arbitral award, however, would be covered by this Act.

4. The definition of "foreign-country judgment" does not limit foreign-country judgments to those rendered in litigation between private parties. Judgments in which a governmental entity is a party also are included, and are subject to this Act if they meet the requirements of this section and are within the scope of the Act under Section 3 [25-9-603].

2009 Amendment: Chapter 176 inserted definition of foreign country; substituted definition of foreign-country judgment for definition of foreign judgment that read: ""Foreign judgment" means any judgment of a foreign state granting or denying recovery of a sum of money, other than a judgment for taxes, a fine or other penalty, or a judgment for support in matrimonial or family matters"; deleted definition of foreign state that read: ""Foreign state" means any governmental unit other than the United States or any state, district, commonwealth, territory, or insular possession thereof or the Panama Canal Zone, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, or the Ryukyu Islands"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Saving Clause: Section 12, Ch. 176, L. 2009, was a saving clause.

Applicability: Section 13, Ch. 176, L. 2009, provided: "[This act] applies to all actions commenced on or after [the effective date of this act] in which the issue of recognition of a foreign-country judgment is raised." Effective October 1, 2009.

Case Notes

Indian Tribes Not Foreign States With Respect to Recognition Act: Day argued that the state could not collect unpaid child support from him because the statute of limitations for tribal court judgments was 5 years and therefore Montana's 10-year limitations period did not apply. The lower court applied the Uniform Foreign Money-Judgments Recognition Act to the case and concluded that an Indian tribe is a foreign state and because the tribal court's judgment was no longer enforceable within the tribe's boundaries, then it was not enforceable under the Act. The Supreme Court held that in regard to tribal support orders, the federal Full Faith and Credit for Child Support Orders Act specifically defines Indian tribes as states and not foreign states and held that the longer statute of limitations between two states applied and therefore Montana could seek unpaid child support from Day. The Supreme Court also held that the federal Act, although not enacted at the time that the support accrued, was in effect at the time of the trial and should have been applied by the lower court. In re Support Obligation of Day v. St., 272 M 170, 900 P2d 296, 52 St. Rep. 680 (1995).

25-9-603. Applicability.

Official Comments

Source: This section is based on Section 2 of the 1962 Act. Subsection (b) [(2)] contains material that was included as part of the definition of "foreign judgment" in Section 1(2) of the 1962 Act. Subsection (c) [(3)] is new.

1. Like the 1962 Act, this Act sets out in subsection 3(a) [25-9-603(1)] two basic requirements that a foreign-country judgment must meet before it comes within the scope of this Act - the foreign-country judgment must (1) grant or deny recovery of a sum of money and (2) be final, conclusive and enforceable under the law of the foreign country where it was rendered. Subsection 3(b) [25-9-603(2)] then sets out three types of foreign-country judgments that are excluded from the coverage of this Act, even though they meet the criteria of subsection 3(a) [25-9-603(1)] - judgments for taxes, judgments constituting fines and other penalties, and judgments in domestic relations matters. These exclusions are comparable to those contained in Section 1(2) of the 1962 Act.

2. This Act applies to a foreign-country judgment only to the extent the foreign-country judgment grants or denies recovery of a sum of money. If a foreign-country judgment both grants or denies recovery of a sum money and provides for some other form of relief, this Act would apply to the portion of the judgment that grants or denies monetary relief, but not to the portion that provides for some other form of relief. The U.S. court, however, would be left free to decide to recognize and enforce the non-monetary portion of the judgment under principles of comity or other applicable law. See Section 11.

3. In order to come within the scope of this Act, a foreign-country judgment must be final, conclusive, and enforceable under the law of the foreign country in which it was rendered. This requirement contains three distinct, although inter-related concepts. A judgment is final when it is not subject to additional proceedings in the rendering court other than execution. A judgment is conclusive when it is given effect between the parties as a determination of their legal rights and obligations. A judgment is enforceable when the legal procedures of the state to ensure that the judgment debtor complies with the judgment are available to the judgment creditor to assist in collection of the judgment.

While the first two of these requirements - finality and conclusiveness - will apply with regard to every foreign-country money judgment, the requirement of enforceability is only relevant when the judgment is one granting recovery of a sum of money. A judgment denying a sum of money obviously is not subject to enforcement procedures, as there is no monetary award to enforce. This Act, however, covers both judgments granting and those denying recovery of a sum of money. Thus, the fact that a foreign-country judgment denying recovery of a sum of money is not enforceable does not mean that such judgments are not within the scope of the Act.

Instead, the requirement that the judgment be enforceable should be read to mean that, if the foreign-country judgment grants recovery of a sum of money, it must be enforceable in the foreign country in order to be within the scope of the Act.

Like the 1962 Act, subsection 3(b) [25-9-603(2)] requires that the determinations as to finality, conclusiveness and enforceability be made using the law of the foreign country in which the judgment was rendered. Unless the foreign-country judgment is final, conclusive, and (to the extent it grants recovery of a sum of money) enforceable in the foreign country where it was rendered, it will not be within the scope of this Act.

4. Subsection 3(b) [25-9-603(2)] follows the 1962 Act by excluding three categories of foreign-country money judgments from the scope of the Act - judgments for taxes, judgments that constitute fines and penalties, and judgments in domestic relations matters. The domestic relations exclusion has been redrafted to make it clear that all judgments in domestic relations matters are excluded from the Act, not just judgments "for support" as provided in the 1962 Act. This is consistent with interpretation of the 1962 Act by the courts, which extended the "support" exclusion in the 1962 Act beyond its literal wording to exclude other money judgments in connection with domestic matters. E.g., Wolff v. Wolff, 389 A.2d 413 (My. App. 1978) ("support" includes alimony).

Recognition and enforcement of domestic relations judgments traditionally has been treated differently from recognition and enforcement of other judgments. The considerations with regard to those judgments, particularly with regard to jurisdiction and finality, differ from those with regard to other money judgments. Further, national laws with regard to domestic relations vary widely, and recognition and enforcement of such judgments thus is more appropriately handled through comity than through use of this uniform Act. Finally, other statutes, such as the Uniform Interstate Family Support Act [Title 40, ch. 5, part 1] and the federal International Child Support Enforcement Act, 42 U.S.C. § 659a (1996), address various aspects of the recognition and enforcement of domestic relations awards. Under Section 11 of this Act, courts are free to recognize money judgments in domestic relations matters under principles of comity or otherwise, and U.S. courts routinely enforce money judgments in domestic relations matters under comity principles.

Foreign-country judgments for taxes and judgments that constitute fines or penalties traditionally have not been recognized and enforced in U.S. courts. See, e.g., Restatement Third of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States § 483 (1986). Both the "revenue rule," under which the courts of one country will not enforce the revenue laws of another country, and the prohibition on enforcement of penal judgments seem to be grounded in the idea that one country does not enforce the public laws of another. See id. Reporters' Note 2. The exclusion of tax judgments and judgments constituting fines or penalties from the scope of the Act reflects this tradition. Under Section 11, however, courts remain free to consider whether such judgments should be recognized and enforced under comity or other principles.

A judgment for taxes is a judgment in favor of a foreign country or one of its subdivisions based on a claim for an assessment of a tax. Thus, a judgment awarding a plaintiff restitution of the purchase price paid for an item would not be considered in any part a judgment for taxes, even though one element of the recovery was the sales tax paid by the plaintiff at the time of purchase. Such a judgment would not be one designed to enforce the revenue laws of the foreign country, but rather one designed to compensate the plaintiff. Courts generally hold that the test for whether a judgment is a fine or penalty is determined by whether its purpose is remedial in nature, with its benefits accruing to private individuals, or it is penal in nature, punishing an offense against public justice. E.g., Chase Manhattan Bank, N.A. v. Hoffman, 665 F.Supp 73 (D. Mass. 1987) (finding that Belgium judgment was not penal even though the proceeding forming the basis of the suit was primarily criminal where Belgium court considered damage petition a civil remedy, the judgment did not constitute punishment for an offense against public justice of Belgium, and benefit of the judgment accrued to private judgment creditor, not Belgium). Thus, a judgment that awards compensation or restitution for the benefit of private individuals should not automatically be considered penal in nature and therefore outside the scope of the Act simply because the action is brought on behalf of the private individuals by a government entity. Cf. U.S.-Australia Free Trade Agreement, art.14.7.2, U.S.-Austl., May 18, 2004 (providing that when government agency obtains a civil monetary judgment for purpose of providing restitution to consumers, investors, or customers who suffered economic harm due to fraud, judgment generally should not be denied recognition and enforcement on ground that it is penal or revenue in nature, or based on other foreign public law).

5. Under subsection 3(b) [25-9-603(2)], a foreign-country money judgment is not within the scope of this Act "to the extent" that it comes within one of the excluded categories. Therefore, if a foreign-country money judgment is only partially within one of the excluded categories, the non-excluded portion will be subject to this Act.

6. Subsection 3(c) [25-9-603(3)] is new. The 1962 Act does not expressly allocate the burden of proof with regard to establishing whether a foreign-country judgment is within the scope of the Act. Courts applying the 1962 Act generally have held that the burden of proof is on the person seeking recognition to establish that the judgment is final, conclusive and enforceable where rendered. E.g., Mayekawa Mfg. Co. Ltd. v. Sasaki, 888 P.2d 183, 189 (Wash. App. 1995) (burden of proof on creditor to establish judgment is final, conclusive, and enforceable where rendered); Bridgeway Corp. v. Citibank, 45 F.Supp.2d 276, 285 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (party seeking recognition must establish that there is a final judgment, conclusive and enforceable where rendered); S.C.Chimexim S.A. v. Velco Enterprises, Ltd., 36 F. Supp.2d 206, 212 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (Plaintiff has the burden of establishing conclusive effect). Subsection (3)(c) [25-9-603(3)] places the burden of proof to establish whether a foreign-country judgment is within the scope of the Act on the party seeking recognition of the foreign-country judgment with regard to both subsection (a) [(1)] and subsection (b) [(2)].

1997 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 382, L. 1997, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because the bill gives the state banking board and the department of commerce authority to adopt administrative rules to effectuate the purposes, policies, and provisions of this bill. The legislature intends that rules be adopted by the state banking board to govern the processes and procedures for both issuing a charter and for suspending or revoking a charter for a foreign capital depository. Because the department of commerce bears responsibility for the regulation and supervision of a foreign capital depository, the legislature finds it prudent to delegate rulemaking authority to that department with respect to the conduct of examinations and inspections, for mandatory reports, and for other related administrative matters. Because the financial privacy of depository customers must be afforded the highest protection possible within the parameters of state and federal law and because an applicant for a depository charter must be provided a readily discernable combination of certainty and flexibility with respect to the services provided by a depository, a blanket delegation of rulemaking authority is not granted to either the board or the department."

Severability: Section 87, Ch. 382, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

Case Notes

Indian Tribes Not Foreign States With Respect to Recognition Act: Day argued that the state could not collect unpaid child support from him because the statute of limitations for tribal court judgments was 5 years and therefore Montana's 10-year limitations period did not apply. The lower court applied the Uniform Foreign Money-Judgments Recognition Act to the case and concluded that an Indian tribe is a foreign state and because the tribal court's judgment was no longer enforceable within the tribe's boundaries, then it was not enforceable under the Act. The Supreme Court held that in regard to tribal support orders, the federal Full Faith and Credit for Child Support Orders Act specifically defines Indian tribes as states and not foreign states and held that the longer statute of limitations between two states applied and therefore Montana could seek unpaid child support from Day. The Supreme Court also held that the federal Act, although not enacted at the time that the support accrued, was in effect at the time of the trial and should have been applied by the lower court. 25-9-605. Standards for recognition of foreign-country judgment.

Official Comments

Source: This section is based on Section 4 of the 1962 Act.

1. This Section provides the standards for recognition of a foreign-country money judgment. Section 7 [25-9-611] sets out the effect of recognition of a foreign-country money judgment under this Act.

2. Recognition of a judgment means that the forum court accepts the determination of legal rights and obligations made by the rendering court in the foreign country. See, e.g. Restatement (Second) of Conflicts of Laws, Ch. 5, Topic 3, Introductory Note (recognition of foreign judgment occurs to the extent the forum court gives the judgment "the same effect with respect to the parties, the subject matter of the action and the issues involved that it has in the state where it was rendered.") Recognition of a foreign-country judgment must be distinguished from enforcement of that judgment. Enforcement of the foreign-country judgment involves the application of the legal procedures of the state to ensure that the judgment debtor obeys the foreign-country judgment. Recognition of a foreign-country money judgment often is associated with enforcement of the judgment, as the judgment creditor usually seeks recognition of the foreign-country judgment primarily for the purpose of invoking the enforcement procedures of the forum state to assist the judgment creditor's collection of the judgment from the judgment debtor. Because the forum court cannot enforce the foreign-country judgment until it has determined that the judgment will be given effect, recognition is a prerequisite to enforcement of the foreign-country judgment. Recognition, however, also has significance outside the enforcement context because a foreign-country judgment also must be recognized before it can be given preclusive effect under res judicata and collateral estoppel principles. The issue of whether a foreign-country judgment will be recognized is distinct from both the issue of whether the judgment will be enforced, and the issue of the extent to which it will be given preclusive effect.

3. Subsection 4(a) [25-9-605(1)] places an affirmative duty on the forum court to recognize a foreign-country money judgment unless one of the grounds for nonrecognition stated in subsection (b) [(2)] or (c) [(3)] applies. Subsection (b) [(2)] states three mandatory grounds for denying recognition to a foreign-country money judgment. If the forum court finds that one of the grounds listed in subsection (b) [(2)] exists, then it must deny recognition to the foreign-country money judgment. Subsection (c) [(3)] states eight nonmandatory grounds for denying recognition. The forum court has discretion to decide whether or not to refuse recognition based on one of these grounds. Subsection (d) [(4)] places the burden of proof on the party resisting recognition of the foreign-country judgment to establish that one of the grounds for nonrecognition exists.

4. The mandatory grounds for nonrecognition stated in subsection (b) [(2)] are identical to the mandatory grounds stated in Section 4 of the 1962 Act. The discretionary grounds stated in subsection 4(c)(1) through (6) [25-9-605(3)(a) through (3)(f)] are based on subsection 4(b)(1) through (6) of the 1962 Act. The discretionary grounds stated in subsection 4(c)(7) and (8) [25-9-605(3)(g) and (3)(h)] are new.

5. Under subsection (b)(1) [(2)(a)], the forum court must deny recognition to the foreign-country money judgment if that judgment was "rendered under a judicial system that does not provide impartial tribunals or procedures compatible with the requirements of due process of law." The standard for this ground for nonrecognition "has been stated authoritatively by the Supreme Court of the United States in Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U.S.113, 205 (1895). As indicated in that decision, a mere difference in the procedural system is not a sufficient basis for nonrecognition. A case of serious injustice must be involved." Cmt § 4, Uniform Foreign Money-Judgment Recognition Act (1962). The focus of inquiry is not whether the procedure in the rendering country is similar to U.S. procedure, but rather on the basic fairness of the foreign-country procedure. Kam-Tech Systems, Ltd. V. Yardeni, 74 A.2d 644, 649 (N.J. App. 2001) (interpreting the comparable provision in the 1962 Act); accord, Society of Lloyd's v. Ashenden, 233 F.3d 473 (7th Cir. 2000) (procedures need not meet all the intricacies of the complex concept of due process that has emerged from U.S. case law, but rather must be fair in the broader international sense) (interpreting comparable provision in the 1962 Act). Procedural differences, such as absence of jury trial or different evidentiary rules are not sufficient to justify denying recognition under subsection (b)(1) [(2)(a)], so long as the essential elements of impartial administration and basic procedural fairness have been provided in the foreign proceeding. As the U.S. Supreme Court stated in Hilton:

"Where there has been opportunity for a full and fair trial abroad before a court of competent jurisdiction conducting the trial upon regular proceedings, after due citation or voluntary appearance of the defendant, and under a system of jurisprudence likely to secure an impartial administration of justice between the citizens of its own country and those of other countries, and there is nothing to show either prejudice in the court, or in the system of laws under which it was sitting, or fraud in procuring the judgment, or any other special reason why the comity of this nation should not allow it full effect then a foreign-country judgment should be recognized. Hilton, 159 U.S. at 202."

6. Under section 4(b)(2) [25-9-605(2)(b)], the forum court must deny recognition to the foreign-country judgment if the foreign court did not have personal jurisdiction over the defendant. Section 5(a) [25-9-606(1)] lists six bases for personal jurisdiction that are adequate as a matter of law to establish that the foreign court had personal jurisdiction. Section 5(b) [25-9-606(2)] makes clear that other grounds for personal jurisdiction may be found sufficient.

7. Subsection 4(c)(2) [25-9-605(3)(b)] limits the type of fraud that will serve as a ground for denying recognition to extrinsic fraud. This provision is consistent with the interpretation of the comparable provision in subsection 4(b)(2) of the 1962 Act by the courts, which have found that only extrinsic fraud — conduct of the prevailing party that deprived the losing party of an adequate opportunity to present its case — is sufficient under the 1962 Act. Examples of extrinsic fraud would be when the plaintiff deliberately had the initiating process served on the defendant at the wrong address, deliberately gave the defendant wrong information as to the time and place of the hearing, or obtained a default judgment against the defendant based on a forged confession of judgment. When this type of fraudulent action by the plaintiff deprives the defendant of an adequate opportunity to present its case, then it provides grounds for denying recognition of the foreign-country judgment. Extrinsic fraud should be distinguished from intrinsic fraud, such as false testimony of a witness or admission of a forged document into evidence during the foreign proceeding. Intrinsic fraud does not provide a basis for denying recognition under subsection 4(c)(2) [25-9-605(3)(b)], as the assertion that intrinsic fraud has occurred should be raised and dealt with in the rendering court.

8. The public policy exception in subsection 4(c)(3) [25-9-605(3)(c)] is based on the public policy exception in subsection 4(b)(3) of the 1962 Act, with one difference. The public policy exception in the 1962 Act states that the relevant inquiry is whether "the [cause of action] [claim for relief] on which the judgment is based" is repugnant to public policy. Based on this "cause of action" language, some courts interpreting the 1962 Act have refused to find that a public policy challenge based on something other than repugnancy of the foreign cause of action comes within this exception. E.g., Southwest Livestock & Trucking Co., Inc. v. Ramon, 169 F.3d 317 (5th Cir. 1999) (refusing to deny recognition to Mexican judgment on promissory note with interest rate of 48% because cause of action to collect on promissory note does not violate public policy); Guinness PLC v. Ward, 955 F.2d 875 (4th Cir. 1992) (challenge to recognition based on post-judgment settlement could not be asserted under public policy exception); The Society of Lloyd's v. Turner, 303 F.3d 325 (5th Cir. 2002) (rejecting argument legal standards applied to establish elements of breach of contract violated public policy because cause of action for breach of contract itself is not contrary to state public policy); cf. Bachchan v. India Abroad Publications, Inc., 585 N.Y.S.2d 661 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1992) (judgment creditor argued British libel judgment should be recognized despite argument it violated First Amendment because New York recognizes a cause of action for libel). Subsection 4(c)(3) [25-9-605(3)(c)] rejects this narrow focus by providing that the forum court may deny recognition if either the cause of action or the judgment itself violates public policy. Cf. Restatement (Third) of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, § 482(2)(d) (1986) (containing a similarly-worded public policy exception to recognition).

Although subsection 4(c)(3) [25-9-605(3)(c)] of this Act rejects the narrow focus on the cause of action under the 1962 Act, it retains the stringent test for finding a public policy violation applied by courts interpreting the 1962 Act. Under that test, a difference in law, even a marked one, is not sufficient to raise a public policy issue. Nor is it relevant that the foreign law allows a recovery that the forum state would not allow. Public policy is violated only if recognition or enforcement of the foreign-country judgment would tend clearly to injure the public health, the public morals, or the public confidence in the administration of law, or would undermine "that sense of security for individual rights, whether of personal liberty or of private property, which any citizen ought to feel." Hunt v. BP Exploration Co. (Libya) Ltd., 492 F. Supp. 885, 901 (N.D. Tex. 1980).

The language "or of the United States" in subsection 4(c)(3) [25-9-605(3)(c)], which does not appear in the 1962 Act provision, makes it clear that the relevant public policy is that of both the State in which recognition is sought and that of the United States. This is the position taken by the vast majority of cases interpreting the 1962 public policy provision. E.g., Bachchan v. India Abroad Publications, Inc., 585 N.Y.S.2d 661 (Sup.Ct. N.Y. 1992) (British libel judgment denied recognition because it violates First Amendment).

9. Subsection 4(c)(5) [25-9-605(3)(e)] allows the forum court to refuse recognition of a foreign-country judgment when the parties had a valid agreement, such as a valid forum selection clause or agreement to arbitrate, providing that the relevant dispute would be resolved in a forum other than the forum issuing the foreign-country judgment. Under this provision, the forum court must find both the existence of a valid agreement and that the agreement covered the subject matter involved in the foreign litigation resulting in the foreign-country judgment.

10. Subsection 4(c)(6) [25-9-605(3)(f)] authorizes the forum court to refuse recognition of a foreign-country judgment that was rendered in the foreign country solely on the basis of personal service when the forum court believes the original action should have been dismissed by the court in the foreign country on grounds of forum non conveniens.

11. Subsection 4(c)(7) [25-9-605(3)(g)] is new. Under this subsection, the forum court may deny recognition to a foreign-country judgment if there are circumstances that raise substantial doubt about the integrity of the rendering court with respect to that judgment. It requires a showing of corruption in the particular case that had an impact on the judgment that was rendered. This provision may be contrasted with subsection 4(b)(1) [25-9-605(2)(a)], which requires that the forum court refuse recognition to the foreign-country judgment if it was rendered under a judicial system that does not provide impartial tribunals. Like the comparable provision in subsection 4(a)(1) of the 1962 Act, subsection 4(b)(1) [25-9-605(2)(a)] focuses on the judicial system of the foreign country as a whole, rather than on whether the particular judicial proceeding leading to the foreign-country judgment was impartial and fair. See, e.g., The Society of Lloyd's v. Turner, 303 F.3d 325, 330 (5th Cir. 2002) (interpreting the 1962 Act); CIBC Mellon Trust Co. v. Mora Hotel Corp,. N.V., 743 N.Y.S.2d 408, 415 (N.Y. App. 2002) (interpreting the 1962 Act); Society of Lloyd's v. Ashenden, 233 F.3d 473, 477 (7th Cir. 2000) (interpreting the 1962 Act). On the other hand, subsection 4(c)(7) [25-9-605(3)(g)] allows the court to deny recognition to the foreign-country judgment if it finds a lack of impartiality and fairness of the tribunal in the individual proceeding leading to the foreign- country judgment. Thus, the difference is that between showing, for example, that corruption and bribery is so prevalent throughout the judicial system of the foreign country as to make that entire judicial system one that does not provide impartial tribunals versus showing that bribery of the judge in the proceeding that resulted in the particular foreign-country judgment under consideration had a sufficient impact on the ultimate judgment as to call it into question.

12. Subsection 4(c)(8) [25-9-605(3)(h)] also is new. It allows the forum court to deny recognition to the foreign-country judgment if the court finds that the specific proceeding in the foreign court was not compatible with the requirements of fundamental fairness. Like subsection 4(c)(7) [25-9-605(3)(g)], it can be contrasted with subsection 4(b)(1) [25-9-605(2)(a)], which requires the forum court to deny recognition to the foreign-country judgment if the forum court finds that the entire judicial system in the foreign country where the foreign-country judgment was rendered does not provide procedures compatible with the requirements of fundamental fairness. While the focus of subsection 4(b)(1) [25-9-605(2)(a)] is on the foreign country's judicial system as a whole, the focus of subsection 4(c)(8) [25-9-605(3)(h)] is on the particular proceeding that resulted in the specific foreign-country judgment under consideration. Thus, the difference is that between showing, for example, that there has been such a breakdown of law and order in the particular foreign country that judgments are rendered on the basis of political decisions rather than the rule of law throughout the judicial system versus a showing that for political reasons the particular party against whom the foreign-country judgment was entered was denied fundamental fairness in the particular proceedings leading to the foreign-country judgment.

Subsections 4(c)(7) and (8) [25-9-605(3)(g) and (3)(h)] both are discretionary grounds for denying recognition, while subsection 4(b)(1) [25-9-605(2)(a)] is mandatory. Obviously, if the entire judicial system in the foreign country fails to satisfy the requirements of impartiality and fundamental fairness, a judgment rendered in that foreign country would be so compromised that the forum court should refuse to recognize it as a matter of course. On the other hand, if the problem is evidence of a lack of integrity or fundamental fairness with regard to the particular proceeding leading to the foreign-country judgment, then there may or may not be other factors in the particular case that would cause the forum court to decide to recognize the foreign-country judgment. For example, a forum court might decide not to exercise its discretion to deny recognition despite evidence of corruption or procedural unfairness in a particular case because the party resisting recognition failed to raise the issue on appeal from the foreign-country judgment in the foreign country, and the evidence establishes that, if the party had done so, appeal would have been an adequate mechanism for correcting the transgressions of the lower court.

13. Under subsection 4(d) [25-9-605(4)], the party opposing recognition of the foreign-country judgment has the burden of establishing that one of the grounds for nonrecognition set out in subsection 4(b) or (c) [25-9-605(2) or (3)] applies. The 1962 Act was silent as to who had the burden of proof to establish a ground for nonrecognition and courts applying the 1962 Act took different positions on the issue. Compare Bridgeway Corp. v. Citibank, 45 F.Supp. 2d 276, 285 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (plaintiff has burden to show no mandatory basis under 4(a) [25-9-605(1)] for nonrecognition exists; defendant has burden regarding discretionary bases) with The Courage Co. LLC v. The ChemShare Corp., 93 S.W.3d 323, 331 (Tex. App. 2002) (party seeking to avoid recognition has burden to prove ground for nonrecognition). Because the grounds for nonrecognition in Section 4 [25-9-605] are in the nature of defenses to recognition, the burden of proof is most appropriately allocated to the party opposing recognition of the foreign-country judgment.

2009 Amendment: Chapter 176 inserted (1) regarding court recognition of foreign-country judgments; in (2) at beginning of introductory clause substituted "court of this state may not recognize a foreign-country judgment" for "foreign judgment is not conclusive"; in (2)(a) after "under a" inserted "judicial"; in (3) in introductory clause substituted "court of this state need not recognize a foreign-country judgment" for "foreign judgment need not be recognized"; in (3)(b) after "fraud" inserted "that deprived the losing party of an adequate opportunity to present its case"; in (3)(c) at beginning after "the" inserted "judgment or the" and at end after "state" inserted "or of the United States"; inserted (3)(g) regarding circumstances that raise substantial doubt about the integrity of the rendering court; inserted (3)(h) regarding proceeding being not compatible with due process; inserted (4) regarding burden of establishing a ground for nonrecognition; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Applicability: Section 13, Ch. 176, L. 2009, provided: "[This act] applies to all actions commenced on or after [the effective date of this act] in which the issue of recognition of a foreign-country judgment is raised." Effective October 1, 2009.

25-9-606. Personal jurisdiction.

Official Comments

Source: This provision is based on Section 5 of the 1962 Act. Its substance is the same as that of Section 5 of the 1962 Act, except as noted in Comment 2 below with regard to subsection 5(a)(4) [25-9-606(1)(d)].

1. Under section 4(b)(2) [25-9-605(2)(b)], the forum court must deny recognition to the foreign-country judgment if the foreign court did not have personal jurisdiction over the defendant. Section 5(a) [25-9-606(1)] lists six bases for personal jurisdiction that are adequate as a matter of law to establish that the foreign court had personal jurisdiction. Section 5(b) [25-9-606(2)] makes it clear that these bases of personal jurisdiction are not exclusive. The forum court may find that the foreign court had personal jurisdiction over the defendant on some other basis.

2. Subsection 5(a)(4) of the 1962 Act provides that the foreign court had personal jurisdiction over the defendant if the defendant was "a body corporate" that "had its principal place of business, was incorporated, or had otherwise acquired corporate status, in the foreign state." Subsection 5(a)(4) [25-9-606(1)(d)] of this Act extends that concept to forms of business organization other than corporations.

3. Subsection 5(a)(3) [25-9-606(1)(c)] provides that the foreign court has personal jurisdiction over the defendant if the defendant agreed before commencement of the proceeding leading to the foreign-country judgment to submit to the jurisdiction of the foreign court with regard to the subject matter involved. Under this provision, the forum court must find both the existence of a valid agreement to submit to the foreign court's jurisdiction and that the agreement covered the subject matter involved in the foreign litigation resulting in the foreign-country judgment.

25-9-607. Stay of proceedings pending appeal of foreign-country judgment.

Official Comments

Source: This section is the same substantively as section 6 of the 1962 Act, except that it adds as an additional measure for the duration of the stay "the time for appeal expires."

1. Under Section 3 [25-9-603] of this Act, a foreign-country judgment is not within the scope of this Act unless it is conclusive and enforceable where rendered. Thus, if the effect of appeal under the law of the foreign country in which the judgment was rendered is to prevent it from being conclusive or enforceable between the parties, the existence of a pending appeal in the foreign country would prevent the application of this Act. Section 8 [25-9-607] addresses a different situation. It deals with the situation in which either (1) the party seeking a stay has demonstrated that it intends to file an appeal in the foreign country, although the appeal has not yet been filed or (2) an appeal has been filed in the foreign country, but under the law of the foreign country filing of an appeal does not affect the conclusiveness or enforceability of the judgment. Section 8 [25-9-607] allows the forum court in those situations to determine in its discretion that a stay of proceedings is appropriate.

2009 Amendment: Chapter 176 substituted current text for former text that read: "If the defendant satisfies the court either that an appeal is pending or that the defendant is entitled and intends to appeal from the foreign judgment, the court may stay the proceedings until the appeal has been determined or until the expiration of a period of time sufficient to enable the defendant to prosecute the appeal." 1997 Amendment: Chapter 382 at beginning inserted exception clause.

1997 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 382, L. 1997, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because the bill gives the state banking board and the department of commerce authority to adopt administrative rules to effectuate the purposes, policies, and provisions of this bill. The legislature intends that rules be adopted by the state banking board to govern the processes and procedures for both issuing a charter and for suspending or revoking a charter for a foreign capital depository. Because the department of commerce bears responsibility for the regulation and supervision of a foreign capital depository, the legislature finds it prudent to delegate rulemaking authority to that department with respect to the conduct of examinations and inspections, for mandatory reports, and for other related administrative matters. Because the financial privacy of depository customers must be afforded the highest protection possible within the parameters of state and federal law and because an applicant for a depository charter must be provided a readily discernable combination of certainty and flexibility with respect to the services provided by a depository, a blanket delegation of rulemaking authority is not granted to either the board or the department."

25-9-610. Procedure for recognition of foreign-country judgment.

Official Comments

Source: This section is new.

1. Unlike the 1962 Act, which was silent as to the proper procedure for seeking recognition of a foreign-country judgment, Section 6 [25-9-610] of this Act expressly sets out the ways in which the issue of recognition may be raised. Under section 6 [25-9-610], the issue of recognition always must be raised in a court proceeding. Thus, section 6 [25-9-610] rejects decisions under the 1962 Act holding that the registration procedure found in the Uniform Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act could be utilized with regard to recognition of a foreign-country judgment. E.g. Society of Lloyd's v. Ashenden, 233 F.3d 473 (7th Cir. 2000). The Enforcement Act deals solely with the enforcement of sister-state judgments and other judgments entitled to full faith and credit, not with the recognition of foreign-country judgments.

More broadly, section 6 [25-9-610] rejects the use of any registration procedure in the context of the foreign-country judgments covered by this Act. A registration procedure represents a balance between the interest of the judgment creditor in obtaining quick and efficient recognition and enforcement of a judgment when the judgment debtor has already been provided with an opportunity to litigate the underlying issues, and the interest of the judgment debtor in being provided an adequate opportunity to raise and litigate issues regarding whether the foreign-country judgment should be recognized. In the context of sister-state judgments, this balance favors use of a truncated procedure such as that found in the Enforcement Act. Recognition of sister-state judgments normally is mandated by the Full Faith and Credit Clause. Courts recognize only a very limited number of grounds for denying full faith and credit to a sister-state judgment - that the rendering court lacked jurisdiction, that the judgment was procured by fraud, that the judgment has been satisfied, or that the limitations period has expired. Thus, the judgment debtor with regard to a sister-state judgment normally does not have any grounds for opposing recognition and enforcement of the judgment. The extremely limited grounds for denying full faith and credit to a sister-state judgment reflect the fact such judgments will have been rendered by a court that is subject to the same due process limitations and the same overlap of federal statutory and constitutional law as the forum state's courts, and, to a large extent, the same body of court precedent and socio-economic ideas as those shaping the law of the forum state. Therefore, there is a strong presumption of fairness and competence attached to a sister-state judgment that justifies use of a registration procedure.

The balance between the benefits and costs of a registration procedure is significantly different, however, in the context of recognition and enforcement of foreign-country judgments. Unlike the limited grounds for denying full faith and credit to a sister-state judgment, this Act provides a number of grounds upon which recognition of a foreign-country judgment may be denied. Determination of whether these grounds apply requires the forum court to look behind the foreign-country judgment to evaluate the law and the judicial system under which the foreign-country judgment was rendered. The existence of these grounds for nonrecognition reflects the fact there is less expectation that foreign-country courts will follow procedures comporting with U.S. notions of fundamental fairness and jurisdiction or that those courts will apply laws viewed as substantively tolerable by U.S. standards than there is with regard to sister-state courts. In some situations, there also may be suspicions of corruption or fraud in the foreign-country proceedings. These differences between sister-state judgments and foreign-country judgments provide a justification for requiring judicial involvement in the decision whether to recognize a foreign- country judgment in all cases in which that issue is raised. Although the threshold for establishing that a foreign-country judgment is not entitled to recognition under Section 4 [25-9-605] is high, there is a sufficiently greater likelihood that significant recognition issues will be raised so as to require a judicial proceeding.

2. This Section contemplates that the issue of recognition may be raised either as an original matter or in the context of a pending proceeding. Subsection 6(a) [25-9-610(1)] provides that in order to raise the issue of recognition of a foreign-country judgment as an initial matter, the party seeking recognition must file an action for recognition of the foreign-country judgment. Subsection 6(b) [25-9-610(2)] provides that when the recognition issue is raised in a pending proceeding, it may be raised by counterclaim, cross-claim or affirmative defense, depending on the context in which it is raised. These rules are consistent with the way the issue of recognition most often was raised in most states under the 1962 Act.

3. An action seeking recognition of a foreign-country judgment under this Section is an action on the foreign-country judgment itself, not an action on the underlying cause of action that gave rise to that judgment. The parties to an action under Section 6 [25-9-610] may not relitigate the merits of the underlying dispute that gave rise to the foreign-country judgment.

4. While this Section sets out the ways in which the issue of recognition of a foreign-country judgment may be raised, it is not intended to create any new procedure not currently existing in the state or to otherwise effect existing state procedural requirements. The parties to an action in which recognition of a foreign-country judgment is sought under Section 6 [25-9-610] must comply with all state procedural rules with regard to that type of action. Nor does this Act address the question of what constitutes a sufficient basis for jurisdiction to adjudicate with regard to an action under Section 6 [25-9-610]. Courts have split over the issue of whether the presence of assets of the debtor in a state is a sufficient basis for jurisdiction in light of footnote 36 of the U.S. Supreme Court decision in Shaffer v. Heitner, 433 U.S. 186, 210 n.36 (1977). This Act takes no position on that issue.

5. In states that have adopted the Uniform Foreign-Money Claims Act, that Act will apply to the determination of the amount of a money judgment recognized under this Act.

25-9-611. Effect of recognition of foreign-country judgment.

Official Comments

Source: The substance of subsection 7(1) [25-9-611(1)] is based on Section 3 of the 1962 Act. Subsection 7(2) [25-9-611(2)] is new.

1. Section 5 [25-9-606] of this Act sets out the standards for the recognition of foreign-country judgments within the scope of this Act, and places an affirmative duty on the forum court to recognize any foreign-country judgment that meets those standards. Section 6 [25-9-610] of this Act sets out the procedures by which the issue of recognition may be raised. This Section sets out the consequences of the decision by the forum court that the foreign-country judgment is entitled to recognition.

2. Under subsection 7(1) [25-9-611(1)], the first consequence of recognition of a foreign-country judgment is that it is treated as conclusive between the parties in the forum state. Section 7(1) [25-9-611(1)] does not attempt to establish directly the extent of that conclusiveness. Instead, it provides that the foreign-country judgment is treated as conclusive to the same extent that a judgment of a sister state that had been determined to be entitled to full faith and credit would be conclusive. This means that the foreign-country judgment generally will be given the same effect in the forum state that it has in the foreign country where it was rendered. Subsection 7(1) [25-9-611(1)], however, sets out the minimum effect that must be given to the foreign-country judgment once recognized. The forum court remains free to give the foreign-country judgment a greater preclusive effect in the forum state than the judgment would have in the foreign country where it was rendered. Cf. Restatement (Third) of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, § 481 cmt c (1986).

3. Under subsection 7(2) [25-9-611(2)], the second consequence of recognition of a foreign-country judgment is that, to the extent it grants a sum of money, it is enforceable in the forum state in accordance with the procedures for enforcement in the forum state and to the same extent that a judgment of the forum state would be enforceable. Cf. Restatement (Third) of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States § 481 (1986) (judgment entitled to recognition is enforceable in accordance with the procedure for enforcement of judgments applicable where enforcement is sought). Thus, under subsection 7(2) [25-9-611(2)], once recognized, the foreign-country judgment has the same effect and is subject to the same procedures, defenses and proceedings for reopening, vacating, or staying a judgment of a comparable court in the forum state, and can be enforced or satisfied in the same manner as such a judgment of the forum state.

25-9-612. Statute of limitations.

Official Comments

Source: This Section is new. The 1962 Act did not contain a statute of limitations. Some courts applying the 1962 Act have used the state's general statute of limitations, e.g., Vrozos v. Sarantopoulos, 552 N.E.2d 1053 (Ill. App. 1990) (as Recognition Act contains no statute of limitations, general five-year statute of limitations applies), while others have used the statute of limitations applicable with regard to enforcement of a domestic judgment, e.g., La Societe Anonyme Goro v. Conveyor Accessories, Inc., 677 N.E. 2d 30 (Ill. App. 1997).

1. Under Section 3 [25-9-603] of this Act, this Act only applies to foreign-country judgments that are conclusive, and if the judgment grants recovery of a sum of money, enforceable where rendered. Thus, if the period of effectiveness of the foreign-country judgment has expired in the foreign country where the judgment was rendered, the foreign-country judgment would not be subject to this Act. This means that the period of time during which a foreign-country judgment may be recognized under this Act normally is measured by the period of time during which that judgment is effective (that is, conclusive and, if applicable, enforceable) in the foreign country that rendered the judgment. If, however, the foreign-country judgment remains effective for more than fifteen years after the date on which it became effective in the foreign country, Section 9 [25-9-612] places an additional time limit on recognition of a foreign-country judgment. It provides that, if the foreign-country judgment remains effective between the parties for more than fifteen years, then an action to recognize the foreign-country judgment under this Act must be commenced within that fifteen year period.

2. Section 9 [25-9-612] does not address the issue of whether a foreign-country judgment that can no longer be the basis of a recognition action under this Act because of the application of the fifteen-year limitations period in Section 9 [25-9-612] may be used for other purposes. For example, a common rule with regard to judgments barred by a statute of limitations is that they still may be used defensively for purposes of offset and for their preclusive effect. The extent to which a foreign-country judgment with regard to which a recognition action is barred by Section 9 [25-9-612] may be used for these or other purposes is left to the other law of the forum state.

Part 7
Uniform Foreign-Money Claims Act

PREFATORY NOTE

This Act facilitates uniform judicial determination of claims expressed in the money of foreign countries. It requires judgments and arbitration awards in these cases to be entered in the foreign money rather than in United States dollars. The debtor may pay the judgment in dollars on the basis of the rate of exchange prevailing at the time of payment.

A Uniform Act governing foreign-money claims has become desirable because:

These claims have increased greatly as a result of the growth in international trade.

Values of foreign moneys as compared to the United States dollar fluctuate more over shorter periods of time than was formerly the case.

United States jurisdictions treat recoveries on foreign-money claims differently than most of our major trading partners.

A lack of uniformity among the states in resolving foreign-money claims stimulates forum shopping and creates a lack of certainty in the law.

American courts historically follow one of two different rules in selecting a time during litigation for converting foreign money into United States dollars. These are called the "breach day rule" - the date the money should have been paid - and the "judgment date rule" - when judgment is entered. Many other countries use the "payment day rule" - when the judgment is paid. See Miliangos v. George Frank (Textiles) Ltd., (1976) A.C. 1007. The merits of this approach have begun to be recognized in this country. The payment day rule is endorsed by this Act.

The three rules produce wildly disparate results in terms of making an injured person whole. This is illustrated by the following example:

An American citizen (A) owes 18,790 pounds sterling to a British corporation (BCo) suing in New York, and the pound is falling against the dollar. Due to the declining value of the pound, the three rules worked out as follows:

Date	Rate of Exchange	BCo Gets
Breach day	Pound = $2.20	$41,338
Judgment day	Pound = $1.50	$28,185
Payment day	Pound = $1.20	$22,548

A judgment of $41,338 may be entered based on the breach day rule. However, the payment in dollars was worth 34,449 pounds ($41,338 divided by $1.20) when eventually received, an excess of L15,659 over the actual loss.

This example is adapted from an actual case. See Comptex v. LaBow, 783 F.2d 333 (2d Cir. 1986). The facts are simplified.

If conversion is delayed until the date of actual payment, the creditor is recompensed with its own money or the financial equivalent in United States dollars; the debtor bears the risk of a fall in the debtor's money or reaps the benefit of a rise therein. If conversion is made at breach or judgment date, the risk of fluctuation in value of a money not of its selection falls on the creditor.

The real issue is where the risk of exchange rate fluctuation should be placed. This Act recognizes the right of the parties to agree upon the money that governs their relationship. In the absence of an agreement, the Act adopts the rule of giving the aggrieved party the amount to which it is entitled in its own money or the money in which the loss was suffered.

The principle of the Act is to restore the aggrieved party to the economic position it would have been in had the wrong not occurred. Thus, for example, if oil is spilled on the coast of France by an American ship, the loss is felt by the French in francs and a judgment of an American court for damages should reflect this fact. Courts should enter judgments in the money customarily used by the injured person.

The payment day rule, on which the Act is based, meets the reasonable expectations of the parties involved. It places the aggrieved party in the position it would have been in financially but for the wrong that gave rise to the claim. States which adopt it will align themselves with most of the major civilized countries of the world.

The Act also covers other issues that may arise in connection with foreign-money claims. These include revalorization and interest. In order to determine aliquot shares for distributions from funds created in insolvency and estate proceedings, the Act specifies use of the date the distribution proceeding was initiated for conversion of foreign money into United States dollars.

Source: This part is based on the Uniform Foreign-Money Claims Act.

Severability: Section 16, Ch. 152, L. 1993, was a severability clause.

Applicability: Section 17, Ch. 152, L. 1993, provided: "[This act] [25-9-701 through 25-9-715] applies to actions and distribution proceedings commenced after October 1, 1993."

25-9-702. Definitions.

Official Comments

1. "Action." A suit or arbitration may be legal or equitable in nature, but it must be based on a pecuniary claim.

2. "Bank-offered spot rate" is the rate at which a bank will sell the requisite amount of foreign money for immediate or nearly immediate use by the buyer.

3. "Conversion date." Exchange rates may fluctuate from day to day. A date must be picked for calculating the value of foreign money in terms of United States dollars. As used in the Act, "conversion date" means the day before a foreign-money claim is paid or set-off. The day refers to the time period of the place of the payor, not necessarily that of the recipient. The exchange rate prevailing at or near the close of business on the banking day before the day payment is made will be well known at the time of payment. See Comment 2 to Section 7 [25-9-708].

4. "Distribution proceeding." In keeping with the concept underlying Section 2 [25-9-703], the coverage of this statute is limited to judicial actions and nonjudicial proceedings which involve the creation of a fund from which pro-rata distributions are made to claimants. As provided in Section 8 [25-9-709], a different conversion date is required where either input to or outgo from a fund involves two or more different moneys. Thus, the term includes a mortgage foreclosure proceeding, judicial or under a trust deed, distribution of property in divorce and child support proceedings, distributions in the administration of a trust or a decedent's estate, an assignment for the benefit of creditors, an equity receivership, a liquidation by a statutory successor, a voluntary dissolution of a business or a nonprofit enterprise or the like when in each case a fund must be shared among claimants and where, usually, the fund will not satisfy all claimants of the same class. An asset or a liability of the fund must also involve one or more foreign-money claims, but not all of the claims can be in the same money.

5. "Foreign money." Since only the federal government has the power to coin money and regulate the value thereof, the term "foreign" means a government other than that of the United States of America. Special Drawing Rights of the International Monetary Fund are foreign money even though the United States is a member of the Fund. Foreign governments included are all those whose moneys are, in the currency markets of the world, exchangeable for the money of other currencies even though the government is not recognized by the United States.

6. "Foreign-money claim." The term "claim" is not limited to any one party to an action or a distribution proceeding and may be asserted by a plaintiff or a defendant or by a party to an arbitration or distribution proceeding. It may be based on a foreign judgment, or sound in contract, quasi-contract, or tort.

7. "Money." The definition includes composite currencies such as European Currency Units created by agreement of the governments that are members of the European Monetary System or the Special Drawing Rights created under the auspices of the International Money Fund. These are "stores of value" used to determine the quantity of payment in some international transactions.

8. "Money of the claim." See Section 4 [25-9-705] and the Comment thereto.

9. "Party." This combines the Uniform Commercial Code's definitions of "person" and "organization," but is limited to those who are parties to transactions or involved in events which could give rise to a foreign-money claim.

10. "Rate of Exchange." A free market rate is to be used rather than an official rate if both exist. Some countries have transactional differences in exchange rates with slightly different rates; for example, in Belgium one rate prevails for commercial and another for financial transactions. Both rates are recognized in money market transactions. The last sentence of the definition indicates that the rate appropriate to the transaction is the rate to be used.

11. "Spot rate" is the term used in the financial markets of the United States for the rate of exchange for immediate or nearly immediate transfers from one money to another, as distinguished from the rates for future options or future deliveries.

In the foreign exchange markets, as in the stock markets, quotations are either "bid" or "ask," and the spread between is where the dealer makes a profit. An "offered spot rate" is the rate at which the offeror will sell the particular money. It is, of course, higher than the rate at which that person will buy the same money. "Spot" refers to the time the trade is made, not the time for settlement, which in spot transactions is often two days after the date of the trade.

12. "State." The definition, as in other Uniform Laws, is extended to include areas given the same, or nearly the same, treatment in law as the states.

25-9-703. Scope.

Official Comments

Under the rules of the conflict of laws, the determination of when a foreign money is converted to United States dollars is generally considered a procedural matter for the law of the forum. Subsection (b) [(2)] removes any doubt.

25-9-704. Variation by agreement.

Official Comments

1. A basic policy of the Act is to preserve freedom of contract and to permit parties to resolve disputed matters by contract at any time, even as to choice of law problems. The parties may agree upon the date and time for conversion. After entry of judgment the parties may agree upon how the judgment is to be satisfied.

2. Subsection (b) [(2)] covers cases where, for example, claims for petroleum may be settled in United States dollars but settlement for joint costs of exploration may be in pounds sterling. The parties also may agree on the money to be used for damages. The second sentence recognizes that a price stated in a particular money does not indicate, without more evidence, an intent that all damages from breach are to be in the same money. The principle of freedom of contract allows the parties to allocate the risks of currency fluctuations between foreign moneys as they desire. Sections 4 [25-9-705] and 5 [25-9-706] provide rules in the absence of special agreements by the parties for determining the money to be used. Parties may by agreement select a particular market or foreign exchange dealer to be used for exchange purposes.

25-9-705. Determining money of claim.

Official Comments

1. Subsection (a) [(1)] uses "payment" in a broad sense not related to just the price, but to any obligation arising out of a contract to transfer money. See also Section 3(b) [25-9-704(2)].

2. Subsection (b) [(2)] states rules to fill gaps in the agreement of the parties with rules as to the allocation of risks of fluctuations in exchange rates. The three rules will normally apply in the order stated. Prior dealings may indicate the desired money. If there are none, it is appropriate to use the money indicated by trade usage or custom for transactions of like kind. The final rule of subsection (a) [(1)] is one established in English cases. See The Despina R and the Folias, (1979) A.C. 685. An example is the use of an operating account in United States dollars by a French company to buy Japanese yen for ship repairs; the loss is felt in the depletion of the dollar bank account. Appropriateness of a rule is to be determined by the judge from the facts of the case. See Section 6(d) [25-9-704(4)].

25-9-706. Determining amount of money of certain contract claims.

Official Comments

1. Subsections (a) [(1)] and (b) [(2)] cover different interpretation problems. One arises where the amount of the money to be paid is measured by another money, one of which is foreign. An example is "pay 5,000 Swiss francs in pounds sterling." The issue is the time at which the rate of exchange into pounds sterling is to be applied. Subsection (a) [(1)] says in a "measured by" situation with no rate specified, the rate of exchange that controls is the one prevailing at or near the close of business on the day before the day of payment. See Section 1(2) [25-9-702(3)], the definition of "conversion date."

2. Another problem arises when an exchange rate in effect before a default is used, as in "pay on November 30, 1989, 5,000 Swiss francs in pounds sterling at the exchange rate prevailing on June 30, 1989." In this case, the issue is how long does the specified exchange rate control in the absence of a clear expression of intent?

Inclusion of a fixed rate as of a date before default, under subsection (b)[(2)], remains effective only if payment is made within a reasonable time after default, not to exceed 30 days. The 30-day limitation accords usually with the expectation of the parties. Parties may agree to a longer time.

3. The most common application of subsection (c) [(3)] will be found in international loan transactions. For example, a loan by a Japanese bank to an American company could be made with dollars purchased by yen for the purpose. The loan agreement could provide for repayment in dollars of an amount which, when received by the lender, would repurchase the amount of yen used to acquire the dollars advanced.

An exemption is needed from the application of usury laws that may be interpreted to hold that the indexing of the principal amount creates additional interest. See Aztec Properties, Inc. v. Union Planters National Bank, 530 S.W.2d 756 (Tenn. Sup. Ct. 1975). The subsection removes all doubts as to the legal enforceability of such agreements under theories such as usury, merger in a judgment, unconscionability, or the like.

25-9-707. Asserting and defending foreign-money claim.

Official Comments

1. Subsection (a) [(1)] covers not only the claim of a plaintiff but also the assertion by a defendant of a defense, set-off, or counterclaim. Subsection (b) [(2)] provides that the money asserted as the money of its defenses by the defendant need not be the same as that of the plaintiff.

2. The money to be used as the money of the claim is a threshold issue to be determined, if contested, by the court after any factual issues as to expenditures, custom, usage, or course of dealing are decided. See subsection (b) [(2)]. If a payment is made or a debt incurred in a money other than that in which the loss was felt, the party asserting the foreign-money claim should establish the amount of the money of the claim used to procure the money of expenditure and the applicable exchange rate used.

3. Judgments may be entered in more than one money when dealings impact on more than one area. An inn-keeper in Mexico, for example, in taking in customers from many countries, should be held to foresee that treatment for injuries at the inn would occur not only in Mexico, but also in the native land of the injured party or in a third country.

25-9-708. Judgments and awards on foreign-money claims — times of money conversion — form of judgment.

Official Comments

1. Subsection (a) [(1)] changes a number of statutes in the states which can be construed to require all values in legal proceedings to be expressed in United States dollars. Professor Brand, in his article in the Yale Journal of International Law, Vol. 11:139 at page 169, identified 18 states having statutes which could require all judgments to be entered in dollars. They are Arkansas, California, Idaho, Iowa, Louisiana, Maryland, Michigan, Montana, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, South Carolina, Tennessee, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, and Wisconsin. Brand, ibid. fn. 166. Hence, direct statutory authority must be given the courts in those states, and will be helpful in other states. In some states other statutes may need amendments. See, e.g., Wisc. Stats. 138.01, 138.02, 138.03, and 779.05.

2. Subsection (d) [(4)] gives defendants the option of paying in dollars which are, at the payment date, practically the economic equivalent of the foreign money awarded. The judgment creditor should be indifferent to whether the debtor exercises the right to pay in dollars as the only difference is a small bank charge for exchanging the dollars for the foreign money. The concept of the rate of the banking day next before the payment day is taken from Section 131 of the Province of Ontario, Canada, Courts of Justice Act (Ch. 11 Ont. Stats. (1984) as recently amended). It gives the defendant and the sheriff conducting the sale the necessary conversion rate comfortably ahead of its use. Newspaper quotations are usually said to be "at or near the close of business" on the stated date, so that phrase is used in this Act.

3. Subsection (e) [(5)] provides for netting the affirmative recoveries of a defendant and plaintiff, whether in the same money or in different moneys, but preserving the quantum of each for appellate purposes. The theory is that when claims are reduced to money, they become mutual debts and should be set-off, so that a person's exchange rate fluctuation risk continues only for the surplus in its money of the claim. The set-off is made by the judge or arbitrator.

4. The form of judgment in subsection (f) [(6)] should be varied appropriately where the money to be paid is measured by a foreign money. See Section 5 [25-9-706].

25-9-709. Conversions of foreign money in distribution proceeding.

Official Comments

All claims must be in the same money when determining aliquot shares in a distribution proceeding. The Act requires use of the date the proceeding was initiated for applying the exchange rate to convert foreign-money claims into United States dollars. See Re Lines Bros. Ltd., (1982) 2 All E.R. 99. A claim may be amended to show the proper conversion rate and the proper amount of United States dollars.

25-9-710. Prejudgment and judgment interest.

Official Comments

1. As to pre-judgment interest, the Act adopts the majority rule in the United States that pre-judgment interest follows the substantive law of the case under conflict of laws rules, both as to the right to recover and the rate. English courts use a different rule, i.e., the borrowing rate used by plaintiff or prevailing in the country issuing the money of the judgment. See Helmsing Schiffarts G.M.B.H. v. Malta Drydock Corp. (1977) 2 Lloyd's Rep. 44 (Maltese money but borrowed in West Germany; German rate); Miliangos v. George Frank (Textiles) Ltd. (No. 2) (1976) 1 QB 487 at 489 (Swiss money, Swiss interest rate). Although pre-judgment interest is one form of damages, provision for pre-judgment interest is not to be taken as indicating that no other damages for delay in payment can be awarded under the substantive law applicable to the determination of damages. Cf. Isaac Naylor & Sons, Ltd. v. New Zealand Co-operative Wool Marketing Association, Ltd. (1981) 1 N.Z.L.R. 361 (exchange loss due to delay as additional damages).

2. Allowances of pre-judgment interest in some states depend upon a party's conduct with respect to settlement or delay of the proceeding. Subsection (b) [(2)] treats these state laws as either procedural in nature or expressions of a significant policy, in either case to be governed by the law of the forum state.

3. Interest on a judgment is considered to be procedural and also goes by the law of the forum. There is a problem here in that there is great discrepancy among the states in the rates for judgment interest. When a judgment is in a foreign money, United States interest rates may result in some overcompensation or undercompensation as compared to what would be awarded in the jurisdiction issuing the foreign money. But in both the United States and in foreign countries, most jurisdictions have fixed statutory rates that do not readily respond to the inflation or deflation of the value of their money in the world market. Hence it was decided to apply the usual rules of the conflict of laws.

25-9-711. Enforcement of foreign judgments.

Official Comments

1. Some states have special acts that simply cover the recognition, entry, and enforcement of foreign judgments. Common law enforcement is by action. Subsection (a) [(1)] refers to the common law method; it is subject to subsection (b) [(2)] which refers to statutory procedures. Subsection (c) [(3)] applies to both procedures.

2. Subsection (d) [(4)] avoids constitutional issues under the full faith and credit clause by requiring that judgments of sister states be enforced as entered in the sister state.

25-9-712. Determining United States dollar value of foreign-money claims for limited purposes.

Official Comments

This section protects those who must determine how much should be held subject to a levy or other collection process or what the dollar amount of a supersedeas or other surety bond should be. If the judgment debtor is damaged by a gross overstatement of the dollar amount in the affidavit or certificate of counsel for the judgment creditor or the bank officer, recovery should be against that person.

25-9-713. Effect of currency revalorization.

Official Comments

1. Subsection (a) [(1)] refers to situations in which a country authorizes the issue of a new money to take the place of the old money at a stated ratio. An example is Brazil's recent abolition of cruzieros for cruzados. The subsection mandates that foreign money claims should be subjected to the same ratio.

2. The Act takes no position on the effect of money repudiations or revalorizations so drastic as to be, in effect, confiscations. Remedy, if any, for these is usually found through diplomatic channels. Equally, the Act takes no position on the effect of exchange control laws. The effect, if any, on obligations to pay is left to other law.

25-9-714. Supplementary general principles of law.

Official Comments

The section is taken from Section 1-103 of the Uniform Commercial Code.

CHAPTER 10
COSTS

Chapter Case Notes

Attorney Fees Not Awardable on Affidavit of Counsel — Hearing Required: Even though a contract may provide for the award of reasonable attorney fees, it is improper to award attorney fees solely on the affidavit of counsel without holding an evidentiary hearing on the matter. Stark v. Borner, 234 M 254, 762 P2d 857, 45 St. Rep. 1885 (1988), followed in Rothing v. Kallestad, 2007 MT 109, 337 M 193, 159 P3d 222 (2007).

Court-Appointed Counsel for Indigent Party in Civil Proceeding — No Requirement: There is no constitutional or statutory requirement that an indigent party be provided with court-appointed counsel in a civil proceeding. In re Adoption of K.L.J.K., 224 M 418, 730 P2d 1135, 43 St. Rep. 2297 (1986).

No Explicit Authority for Award of Attorney Fees in Disqualification Action: As there is no provision in 3-1-802 that allows a judge to award attorney fees to a party or damages to a nonparty, such award is improper. Unless a statute provides explicitly for an award of attorney fees to the prevailing party, a court cannot make such an award. In re Marriage of Gahr, 212 M 481, 689 P2d 257, 41 St. Rep. 1879 (1984).

Part 1
Imposition of Costs

Part Case Notes

Recoupment of Costs Provided for Defense of Claims Outside Insurance Policy Coverage: Plaintiff defended claims from third parties against defendant, but the claims were subsequently determined to be barred by exclusionary language in defendant's policy. Plaintiff sought to recoup the costs expended on defendant's behalf, and the District Court awarded plaintiff's costs. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the award. Plaintiff timely and explicitly reserved the right to recoup the defense costs by notifying defendant of plaintiff's reservation of rights prior to paying the costs and thus expressly reserved its right to recoup defense costs if a court determined that plaintiff had no duty to provide the costs. Defendant implicitly accepted plaintiff's reserved rights by posing no objection to the reservation. Travelers Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Ribi Immunochem Research, Inc., 2005 MT 50, 326 M 174, 108 P3d 469 (2005). See also Grinnell Mut. Reins. Co. v. Shierk, 996 F. Supp. 836 (S.D. Ill. 1998), United Nat'l Ins. Co. v. SST Fitness Corp., 309 F3d 914 (6th Cir. 2002), and Horace Mann Ins. Co. v. Hanke, 2013 MT 320, 372 Mont. 350, 312 P.3d 429.

Attorney Fees — General Rules for Determining Prevailing Party: No single factor solely determines the prevailing party for the purpose of attorney fees. The party awarded a money judgment is not necessarily the successful or prevailing party, though such a judgment is an important factor in deciding who prevailed. A party surviving an action involving a counterclaim, setoff, refund, or penalty and who has the net judgment should generally be considered the prevailing party. If a counterclaiming defendant receives only a portion of his requested relief, but the plaintiff's claim is totally denied, the defendant should receive his attorney fees. If plaintiff and defendant both seek relief and each is awarded part of the requested relief, the party prevailing on the main issue in controversy must be allowed attorney fees. Schmidt v. Colonial Terrace Associates, 215 M 62, 694 P2d 1340, 42 St. Rep. 182 (1985).

Contract Allowing Costs to Prevailing Party — Contrary Subsequent Agreement: In an action in which each party claimed breach of a contract, where the parties agreed to an order that each would pay one-half of a special master's fee, the order was not in error, even though the contract provided for costs to the prevailing party. Schmidt v. Colonial Terrace Associates, 215 M 62, 694 P2d 1340, 42 St. Rep. 182 (1985).

25-10-101. When costs allowed, of course, to plaintiff.

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

1981 Amendment: Added (7) that read: "in an action for property damage arising out of the ownership, maintenance, or use of a motor vehicle if he is entitled to attorney's fees under 25-10-303".

Case Notes

Entirety of Litigation to Be Considered to Determine Whether Insured Forced to Assume Burden of Legal Action: The plaintiff was involved in a collision with another driver who admitted liability for the accident and for the plaintiff's resulting injuries. The plaintiff recovered the policy limit from the other driver but sought underinsured motorist coverage from her insurer. Ultimately, the plaintiff filed an action against her insurer for amounts due under her policy. After a jury verdict in her favor, the plaintiff moved for nontaxable costs and attorney fees, which the District Court denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that while the "insurance exception" to the American rule on the recovery of attorney fees may apply when the insurer forces the insured to assume the burden of legal action to obtain the full benefit of the insurance contract, the District Court failed to make any factual findings that considered both parties' actions during the entire process leading up to the resolution of the claim. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court's order and remanded for further proceedings. Mlekush v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2015 MT 302, 381 Mont. 292, 358 P.3d 913.

Insurance Dispute — Fees, Interest, and Costs Awarded: The plaintiff was injured while working on his vehicle. He had a medical insurance policy and a separate motor vehicle policy with a medical payment provision. The medical insurer paid most of the claim. The plaintiff then sought payment of the entirety of the claim from the motor vehicle insurer, who denied the claim. The plaintiff alleged breach of contract and unfair trade practices. The Supreme Court found that the policy language did not limit the plaintiff from receiving a duplicate payment of medical expenses and that the plaintiff was entitled to attorney fees under the insurance exception to the American rule, prejudgment and postjudgment interest, and costs. Winter v. St. Farm Mut. Auto.

Accreted Islands in River Held to Be School Trust Lands — Restitution Improper Absent Unjust Enrichment Claim — State Entitled to Costs: The state filed an action to quiet title to three islands in the Missouri River that had formed from sedimentary accretions on the riverbed. The District Court ruled that under the equal footing doctrine, the state held title to the disputed lands as public trust land, which could not be acquired by the defendants through adverse possession. The District Court also ruled, relying on PPL Mont., LLC v. St., 2010 MT 64, 355 Mont. 402, 229 P.3d 421, that these lands were not school trust lands. The District Court then ruled sua sponte that under the doctrine of unjust enrichment, the state was required to reimburse the defendants for all property taxes and improvements made on the land and ordered each party to pay its own costs and fees. The Supreme Court disagreed and held that under 77-1-102, these lands were school trust lands and that because the defendants never asserted an unjust enrichment claim, the state was not on notice and had no opportunity to oppose the reimbursements ordered by the District Court. Finally, the court held that under 25-10-101, the state as the prevailing party was entitled to recover certain costs. The court reversed the District Court's judgment and remanded the case to the District Court to determine and award the appropriate amount for costs. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation v. Abbco Investments, LLC, 2012 MT 187, 366 Mont. 120, 285 P.3d 532.

Landlord-Tenant Dispute — Denial of Attorney Fees for Minor Award Proper — Denial of Costs Improper — Remanded for Award of Costs: Landlords sued their former tenants, alleging that the tenants had caused considerable damage to the rental property. After significant litigation, which involved the obtaining of and setting aside of a default judgment, the landlords were awarded approximately $2,000. They then sought to recover their costs and attorney fees of $20,000. The District Court denied both their requests. The landlords appealed, and the Supreme Court agreed that the District Court had correctly interpreted the rental agreement as providing for attorney fees only in the event of an eviction, which had not occurred in this case. Furthermore, 70-24-442, which allows for the award of attorney fees, is discretionary; 25-10-101, however, which provides for an award of costs to the successful plaintiff, is mandatory. Therefore, the denial of attorney fees was proper given the circumstances, but the District Court erred in ordering the parties to pay their own costs. Accordingly, the Supreme Court remanded the case to the District Court to determine the proper amount of costs to award the landlords. Benintendi v. Hein, 2011 MT 298, 363 Mont. 32, 265 P.3d 1239.

Challenge to Award of Attorney Fees Based on Contract — Failure to Argue that Claim Was Not Based on Contract Before District Court — Supreme Court Refusal to Review Argument: The District Court awarded the prevailing hospital attorney fees pursuant to its signed Patient Service Agreement contract with the plaintiff estate. On appeal, the estate argued that the hospital was not entitled to recover attorney fees under the contract because it did not bring an action on the contract. Citing In re Parenting of N.S., 2011 MT 98, 360 Mont. 288, 253 P.3d 863, the Supreme Court declined to address the estate's argument because it had not been presented to the District Court. Estate of Donald v. Kalispell Regional Medical Center, 2011 MT 166, 361 Mont. 179, 258 P.3d 395.

Award of Costs to Employer in Employment Discrimination Case Proper — Federal Law Applicable Only to Award of Attorney Fees: In an employment discrimination case, the District Court awarded partial summary judgment to the employer and, after deducting the costs of a frivolous videotaped deposition, awarded costs to the employer. Rolison contended that the court erred by applying Montana law to the award of costs rather than 42 U.S.C. 2000e-5(k) and Christiansburg Garment Co. v. EEOC, 434 US 412 (1978), and asserted that a defendant in an action brought under Title VII of the federal Civil Rights Act of 1964 may recover costs from a plaintiff only if the action was frivolous, unreasonable, or without foundation. The Supreme Court disagreed after noting that the federal statute and Christiansburg both apply to the award of attorney fees, not costs. Therefore, the District Court properly applied 25-10-102 and this section rather than federal law in awarding costs to the defendant. Rolison v. Bozeman Deaconess Health Serv., Inc., 2005 MT 95, 326 M 491, 111 P3d 202 (2005).

Pro Rata Calculation of Attorney Fees Based on Percentage of Plaintiff's Successful Claims Rejected: The District Court awarded plaintiff attorney fees for a breach of warranty claim against a siding installer and a siding manufacturer, which was the only theory based on contract for which plaintiff received a verdict against both defendants. To calculate the award, the court allocated the total amount of time expended by plaintiff's attorneys among the seven claims that existed prior to summary judgment and the three claims that existed thereafter on a pro rata basis, awarding plaintiff one-seventh of the attorneys' time expended prior to summary judgment and one-third of their time after summary judgment. Plaintiff contended that the pro rata calculation was in error, and the Supreme Court agreed. A similar mathematical approach was rejected by the U.S. Supreme Court in Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 US 424 (1983), as providing little aid in determining what is a reasonable fee in light of all relevant factors. The award was also inconsistent with the guidelines established in Swenson v. Janke, 274 M 354, 908 P2d 678 (1995), for determining a reasonable fee award, and because the District Court failed to consider the Swenson factors, the award was remanded for recalculation. Osterman v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 2003 MT 327, 318 M 342, 80 P3d 435 (2003).

Insurer's Breach of Duty to Indemnify — Recovery of Attorney Fees by Injured Third-Party Claimant Who Prevails in Insurance Coverage Action Against Motor Vehicle Liability Insurer — Modification of Insurance Exception — Standard of Review of Question of Law: Following remand in Christensen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 2000 MT 378, 303 M 493, 22 P3d 624 (2000), the Christensens requested attorney fees incurred in the declaratory judgment action. The District Court denied the request, and the Christensens appealed. Generally, under the American rule, a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory provision, although equitable exceptions are recognized. Here, the parties agreed that there was no contractual authority to support an award of attorney fees, although the Supreme Court held in Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum, 2003 MT 97, 315 M 210, 69 P3d 663 (2003), that 27-8-313 authorizes a District Court to award attorney fees when the court, in its discretion, considers such an award to be necessary or proper. The Christensens submitted that the defendant insurer was obligated to reimburse them based on the insurance exception rationale articulated in Home Ins. Co. v. Pinski Bros., Inc., 160 M 219, 500 P2d 945 (1972), which approved an award of attorney fees in cases in which an insurer breaches its obligation to defend an insured. The Supreme Court noted that the issue presented a question of law, so the standard of review was whether the District Court's interpretation of law was correct. The Supreme Court held that an insurer that breaches its duty to indemnify is liable for attorney fees when an insured is forced to assume the burden of legal action to obtain the full benefit of the insurance contract, regardless of whether the insurer's duty to defend is at issue. However, in this case, the Christensens were third-party beneficiaries, and the Supreme Court declined to extend the insurance exception to third-party claimants overruling Yovish v. United Serv. Auto. Ass'n, 243 M 284, 794 P2d 682 (1990), because that would sanction attorney fee awards for simply demonstrating the existence of any insurance contract from which a third-party claimant successfully established coverage, which would undermine the American rule. Thus, although the Christensens were precluded from recovering attorney fees under the obligatory insurance exception, the case was remanded for a determination of whether attorney fees were necessary or proper under 27-8-313 and Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Brewer, 2003 MT 98, 315 M 231, 69 P3d 652 (2003), followed in Hernandez v. Yellowstone County Comm'rs, 2008 MT 251, 345 M 1, 189 P3d 638 (2008), with regard to award of attorney fees only to a prevailing party under the private attorney general theory.

Challenge to Driver's License Suspension Considered Special Proceeding — Successful Defendant Entitled to Costs: Neal's driver's license was suspended for failure to take a breath test. Neal challenged the suspension, claiming that he did not refuse to take a breath test, and the District Court agreed. Neal's license was reinstated and Neal was granted costs. The state objected to the award of costs, and the District Court amended the original order and denied costs, so Neal appealed. Neal contended that as the prevailing party, an award of costs was proper under subsection (2) of this section because the license was valued at more than $50 or under subsection (4) of this section because the petition to reinstate the license was a special proceeding. The state contended that the particular provisions of 25-10-711 prevailed over the general provisions of this section, so this section did not apply. The Supreme Court disagreed, finding no inconsistency between the statutes. Section 25-10-711 applies to actions in which a party prevails against a government entity and can establish that the government's claim or defense was frivolous or pursued in bad faith, but no such finding is required for recovery of costs under this section. The court went on to find that Neal's claim that costs were proper based on the license value was unfounded, because no finding of valuation was ever determined. However, the court concluded that a challenge to a driver's license suspension or revocation was a special proceeding pursuant to 27-1-102, and that as the prevailing party in the action, Neal was entitled to costs pursuant to this section. Neal v. St., 2003 MT 53, 314 M 357, 66 P3d 280 (2003).

Test for Determining Prevailing Party in Mixed Motive Employment Discrimination Case: Laudert suffered liver failure while employed by the Richland County Sheriff's Department

(RCSD) and had to resign. Following Laudert's full recovery, his former position came open again and he applied but was not rehired. He filed a discrimination charge on grounds of age and disability. The hearings examiner found that questions asked by the RCSD interview panel constituted direct evidence that RCSD had unlawfully considered Laudert's disability, but did not award damages because Laudert would not have been hired even in the absence of any unlawful consideration of his disability. The District Court held that Laudert was not entitled to attorney fees because he did not prevail on the ultimate basis for his petition. Laudert appealed the denial of attorney fees, asserting that because the hearings examiner found that his disability had been unlawfully considered and because affirmative relief was awarded against RCSD in the form of an injunctive order requiring RCSD to submit a written policy regarding hiring procedures, including guidelines regarding future inquiry into applicant disabilities, he was the prevailing party. The Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in applying the "central issue" and "primary relief sought" tests for determining the prevailing party, analyses expressly repudiated in Tex. St. Teachers Ass'n v. Garland Independent School District, 489 US 782 (1989). Requiring plaintiff to prevail on the ultimate basis for a petition is an inappropriate test for determining whether attorney fees should be awarded under 49-2-505. Under Farrar v. Hobby, 506 US 103 (1992), a plaintiff prevails when actual relief on the merits of the claim materially alters the legal relationship between the parties by modifying the defendant's behavior in a way that directly benefits the plaintiff. Here, the order of affirmative injunctive relief clearly modified RCSD's behavior. However, the Supreme Court rejected the Farrar requirement that a plaintiff secure a direct benefit at the time of the judgment in order to be a prevailing party because that requirement would not further the purpose of awarding attorney fees under Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act. Complaints of civil rights abuses that successfully establish a finding of discrimination and an order of injunctive relief are the type of meritorious litigation that should be encouraged. The District Court's determination that Laudert did not prevail because RCSD proved it would have made the same hiring decision, despite its consideration of Laudert's disability, was reversible error. Laudert v. Richland County Sheriff's Dept., 2000 MT 218, 301 M 114, 7 P3d 386, 57 St. Rep. 872 (2000). Following remand for determination of a reasonable fee award under 49-2-505, the District Court noted that Laudert was the prevailing party in the 2000 case, even though Laudert's request for damages was denied, and awarded Laudert's counsel fees for all time expended. The RCSD appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The Supreme Court cited Pa. v. Del. Valley Citizens' Council for Clean Air, 478 US 546 (1986), for the strong presumption, given the rationale behind fee-shifting provisions, that the lodestar amount is a reasonable fee, noting that fee-shifting statutes were not designed to be windfalls for attorneys or to replicate the amount that an attorney would receive in other types of litigation, but rather to enable private parties to retain the legal assistance necessary to seek redress when their rights are violated. The court also applied the two-step approach in Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 US 424 (1983), to address other considerations that may lead to a fee adjustment in cases when attorney fees are recoverable by a partially prevailing plaintiff in pursuit of unsuccessful claims. Under Hensley, an attorney should receive fees for the full services provided when plaintiff has obtained excellent results, even if plaintiff does not prevail on every claim. In this case, Laudert achieved the level of success necessary to support the award of the full amount of fees claimed, and the District Court did not err in awarding the full amount. Laudert v. Richland County Sheriff's Dept., 2001 MT 287, 307 M 403, 38 P3d 790 (2001). See also Ihler v. Chisholm, 2000 MT 37, 298 M 254, 995 P2d 439 (2000). See also Dolan v. No Attorney Fees Awarded Absent Prevailing Party: H-D Irrigating, Inc., bought land and irrigation equipment from Hobble Diamond Cattle Company and Kimble Properties, Inc., respectively, then sued both companies for constructive fraud when the land eroded and caused damage to the irrigation system. The District Court held that neither party was the prevailing party and that each party was responsible for its own attorney fees and costs. The Supreme Court agreed. Generally, attorney fees are not recoverable absent a statutory or contractual provision. Here, both parties gained a victory but also suffered a loss, and the District Court did not abuse its discretion when it did not award attorney fees. H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000). See also McCauley v. Thompson-Nistler, 2000 MT 215, 301 M 81, 10 P3d 794, 57 St. Rep. 855 (2000).

Payment Required by Contract Not Considered Loss — Attorney Fees and Costs to Prevailing Party: An agreement in a real property transaction provided for attorney fees to the prevailing party. Plaintiff brought an action to determine ownership of the property and was awarded summary judgment, part of which required plaintiff to pay one of the defendants $100,000 pursuant to a profit sweep provision of the agreement. Defendants cited Parcel v. Myers, 214 M 220, 697 P2d 89, 41 St. Rep. 2426 (1984), claiming that plaintiff could not be considered the prevailing party because plaintiff may have gained a victory but had also suffered a loss. However, the payment could not be considered a loss to plaintiff because it was an obligation required to satisfy the agreement, so attorney fees and costs should have been awarded plaintiff as prevailing party. Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 1078 (1999).

"Costs" Held Not to Include Expenses of Deposition for Perpetuation of Testimony Incurred After Offer of Judgment: The Valeos sued Tabish for damage to the Valeos' road allegedly caused by Tabish's trucks. Tabish answered alleging contributory negligence. Thereafter, Tabish made an offer of judgment that the Valeos did not accept and subsequently incurred $609.29 for cost of airfare, hotel, and car rental in the taking of a deposition for perpetuation of testimony. The jury returned a verdict for Tabish, and the District Court entered judgment to include the $609.29 claimed by Tabish in his memorandum of costs. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court's opinion and held that "costs", as used in former Rule 68, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), should not be construed more broadly than the same word in 25-10-201 and held that its previous opinion in Fisher v. St. Farm Ins. Co., 281 M 236, 934 P2d 163 (1997), supported that conclusion. The Supreme Court also rejected Tabish's argument that the word "costs", as used in Rule 68, must provide an independent right to receive costs other than as defined and provided in 25-10-102 and this section or the rule would otherwise serve no independent purpose to encourage the settlement of litigation. The Supreme Court noted that Tabish provided no authority for that argument and that the language of 25-10-102 and this section is significantly different from the language of Rule 68. Valeo v. Tabish, 1999 MT 146, 295 M 34, 983 P2d 334, 56 St. Rep. 579 (1999).

No Reciprocal Right to Attorney Fees: The Valeos sued Tabish for damage to the Valeos' road allegedly caused by Tabish's trucks. Tabish answered, alleging contributory negligence and requesting attorney fees pursuant to 25-10-303. The Valeos moved for partial summary judgment on the issue of fees, and the District Court denied the motion. The jury returned a verdict for Tabish, and the District Court awarded Tabish attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that there is no reciprocal right to attorney fees under 25-10-303 because that statute grants only a plaintiff the right to attorney fees. Granting fees to a defendant pursuant to 25-10-303 would require the Supreme Court to insert language into that statute that isn't there, an act prohibited by 1-2-101. The Supreme Court dismissed Tabish's argument that fees are authorized by 25-10-102 and this section, pointing out that those statutes authorize the payment of only costs, not attorney fees. The Supreme Court also analyzed numerous cases cited by Tabish as authority for his claim that the payment of fees is reciprocal, holding that in each previous Supreme Court opinion cited by Tabish, the Supreme Court relied upon a different statute other than 25-10-303. For that reason, those cases were inapplicable to the issue before the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court therefore reversed the District Court and denied the defendant payment of his attorney fees. Valeo v. Tabish, 1999 MT 146, 295 M 34, 983 P2d 334, 56 St. Rep. 579 (1999).

Attorney Fees Payable Under Clear Language of Contract — Costs Awarded as Matter of Course: It was error for the trial court to order the parties to pay their own attorney fees and costs when the clear and unambiguous language of the property sale contract in question provided that plaintiffs, as the successful party, were entitled to recover fees. Further, under this section, plaintiffs were entitled to the award of court costs, as a matter of course, by virtue of receiving judgment in their favor. Quigley v. Acker, 1998 MT 72, 288 M 190, 955 P2d 1377, 55 St. Rep. 295 (1998).

Costs Allowable in Summary Judgment Case — Remand: Springer prevailed in an action against a traffic control officer and the city of Bozeman to recover damages for destruction of a vehicle without notice. The District Court awarded Springer $1,500 in damages and $1,636.32 in costs. Citing Thayer v. Hicks, 243 M 138, 793 P2d 784 (1990), the city argued that the court abused its discretion in awarding costs because most of the identified costs did not fall within the purview of 25-10-201. Generally, a party that ultimately prevails on summary judgment is entitled to the same allowable costs as if the case had been disposed of at trial. On appeal, the Supreme Court reviewed the bill of costs; affirmed the award of filing fees; reversed the award for long-distance telephone calls pursuant to Thayer; and remanded for a determination of whether awards for photocopy costs, facsimile transmission expenses, postage costs, shipping charges, a service fee, counsel's mileage expenses, and deposition costs were allowable. Springer v. Becker, 284 M 267, 949 P2d 641, 54 St. Rep. 876 (1997).

Contract Overcharge and Negligence Claims Barred by Res Judicata When Other Party Had Already Sued for Failure to Pay: A trucker obtained default judgment in Justice's Court for the failure of Greenwood to pay the full amount that the trucker charged for hauling cattle. Greenwood had claimed that the amount charged was more than agreed upon and refused to pay the difference. He also deducted an amount for the trucker's alleged injury to two steers. Greenwood's later District Court action alleging that the contract was void for an overcharge and alleging the negligent injury of the two steers was barred by res judicata. The Supreme Court also ruled that the case was not one of those rare ones in which a court could use its equitable powers to award attorney fees, which were requested by the trucker. Greenwood v. Steve Nelson Trucking, Inc., 270 M 216, 890 P2d 765, 52 St. Rep. 151 (1995).

Costs Prior to Entry of Partial Summary Judgment: The trial court awarded the plaintiffs costs incurred subsequent to the entry of a partial summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court remanded the case for the trial court to determine the costs due the plaintiffs for costs incurred prior to entry of the partial summary judgment. Smith v. Johnson, 245 M 137, 798 P2d 106, 47 St. Rep. 1661 (1990).

Question of Insurance Coverage Under Policy — Award of Costs Discretionary: The lower court granted the insurer's motion for summary judgment, holding that there was no coverage of the plaintiff's personal injuries under the contract, but denied the insurer's motion for costs. The Supreme Court affirmed, stating that there was no statutory grounds for costs, thus making the award of costs discretionary. Erickson v. Dairyland Ins. Co., 241 M 119, 785 P2d 705, 47 St. Rep. 130 (1990), overruled, to the extent that 25-10-102 does not require that a successful defendant in an action for money or damages recover costs.

Costs in Contempt — Injunction Action: Defendant was found to be in contempt of a previous court order allowing plaintiff to regulate a water supply system. Plaintiffs sought to enjoin defendant from further interference with the system. After finding defendant in contempt, the court awarded costs to plaintiff. On appeal, defendant contended his contempt fine should be part of the costs, relying on State ex rel. Foss v. District Court, 216 M 327, 701 P2d 342, 42 St. Rep. 845 (1985). The Supreme Court held that because this was an injunction action, costs were awardable under 25-10-101(6) and could be in addition to the fine. Walker v. Warner, 228 M 162, 740 P2d 1147, 44 St. Rep. 1424 (1987).

Reformation of Contract — No Prevailing Party — Denial of Costs and Attorney Fees: In suit for reformation of contract for deed and for negligent misrepresentation, the District Court reduced the sales contract by $1,500 but denied plaintiff's damage claims and refused to award plaintiff costs and attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying costs and attorney fees in absence of a statute or contract provision. Plaintiff was not entitled to costs under 25-10-101 because the action did not involve title to property and plaintiff did not receive a "judgment in his favor". There is no prevailing party when both parties gain a victory but also suffer a loss. Parcel v. Myers, 214 M 220, 697 P2d 89, 41 St. Rep. 2426 (1984).

Liability Dispute Between Insurers — Costs and Fees: In a proceeding that was essentially between two insurers to determine which of two overlapping policies covered auto accident, the winner was not entitled to costs and attorney fees. Bill Atkin Volkswagen, Inc. v. McClafferty, 213 M 99, 689 P2d 1237, 41 St. Rep. 1981 (1984).

Interest and Expenses Allowable: Plaintiff entered a buy-sell to purchase defendants' ranch. One of his major considerations was gaining investment tax credits. Defendants refused to perform, and plaintiff filed a breach of contract action. The District Court found for plaintiff and awarded him prejudgment interest at 10% on his state and federal income tax obligation, the earnest money, and his capital expenditures on the ranch. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that interest on the earnest money was all that should be allowed as prejudgment interest under 27-1-211. Prejudgment interest should be 6% under 31-1-106. Interest should then be allowed on the judgment according to 27-1-211 at the amount of 10% under 25-9-205. The expenses that are allowable to a plaintiff are found in 25-10-201, and 25-10-101 outlines when costs are allowed. The cost of depositions not used during trial is not allowed. Various travel expenditures would not have been chargeable to defendants if the contract had been performed. The portion of capital expenditures allowed should be only the loss plaintiff suffered as a result of expenditures from the time of signing the buy-sell to the time of breach. Ehly v. Cady, 212 M 82, 687 P2d 687, 41 St. Rep. 1611 (1984).

Duty to Defend — Attorney Fees: Plaintiff tendered defense of a counterclaim to defendant. Defendant refused to defend, contending the allegations of the counterclaim were excluded from policy coverage. This declaratory judgment action was then brought. The court found that the counterclaim was within the policy coverage. Relying on Home Ins. Co. v. Pinski Bros., Inc., 160

M 219, 500 P2d 945 (1972), the court awarded attorney fees and costs for wrongful refusal to defend. Lindsay Drilling v. USF&G, 208 M 91, 676 P2d 203, 41 St. Rep. 193 (1984), followed in Newman v. Scottsdale Ins. Co., 2013 MT 125, 370 Mont. 133, 301 P.3d 348.

Title Insurers' Failure to Defend First and Second Suits Against Insured — Liability for Costs of First Suit: Adjoining landowner sued insured for interference with his easement rights, title insurance companies refused to defend, insured hired his own counsel, the suit was settled, and adjoining landowner again sued insured when insured refused to abide by the settlement. The insurers again refused to defend. The policy obligated insurers to defend any litigation founded upon a defect, lien, encumbrance, or other matter insured against. Insurers had failed to disclose and insure against the easements, though they were contained in the title records. The insurers acted in bad faith in refusing to defend the first suit but not in refusing to defend the second suit, since it arose from insurers' refusal to abide by the settlement in the first suit. Insurers were liable to insured for his costs in defending the first suit, and punitive damages could be imposed for failure to defend. Lipinski v. Title Ins. Co., 202 M 1, 655 P2d 970, 39 St. Rep. 2283 (1982).

Plaintiff Losing Quiet Title Action Not Entitled to Attorneys' Fees: Under 25-10-101 and 25-10-102 attorneys' fees may be awarded as a matter of course to the party receiving a favorable judgment involving real property. Thus, when plaintiff filed a quiet title action and ended up losing possession of property he was not entitled to attorneys' fees unless awarded by discretion of the court under 25-10-103, and the court properly decreed that each party pay their own costs. Stimatz v. St., 189 M 179, 615 P2d 228 (1980).

Costs Awardable to Party Prevailing at Trial: Plaintiffs contracted with defendant to build their log home. Before and after occupancy of the home, structural problems requiring repair occurred. Plaintiffs prevailed at trial but were denied costs. Costs are awardable under former Rule 54(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and 25-10-101(3). Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to costs at trial. Carroccia v. Todd, 189 M 172, 615 P2d 225 (1980).

Costs and Fees for Voluntary Dismissal: The defendant was entitled to reasonable costs and attorney fees in order to cure prejudice to the defense when trial court granted plaintiff's motion for voluntary dismissal under former Rule 41(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Petritz v. Albertsons, Inc., 187 M 102, 608 P2d 1089 (1980), distinguished in USF&G Co. v. Rodgers, 267 M 178, 882 P2d 1037, 51 St. Rep. 1023 (1994).

Party Prevailing on Main Issue Entitled to Costs: In this case the court adopted the California rule in interpreting cost statutes. If a plaintiff files a complaint in an action covered by 25-10-101 and succeeds only partially, the plaintiff is entitled to costs. If an action is filed and the defendant counterclaims and succeeds in having the plaintiff's claim totally denied but only recovers a portion of the relief demanded in the counterclaim, the defendant should receive costs. If, however, a party initiates a lawsuit, the defendant counterclaims, and the judgment awards both parties part of the relief they seek, the party prevailing on the main issue in controversy in the case must be allowed costs. The main issue in this case was the existence of an easement across the disputed road. Respondents prevailed on that issue. The cost statutes therefore entitled them to the costs of suit, including the cost of the survey necessary to determine the boundary between the Medhus and Dutter properties. Medhus v. Dutter, 184 M 437, 603 P2d 669 (1979), followed in Hoven v. Amrine, 224 M 15, 727 P2d 533, 43 St. Rep. 1977 (1986), and in Kearney v. KXLF Communications, Inc., 263 M 407, 869 P2d 772, 51 St. Rep. 119 (1994).

Fee Agreement Negotiations — Effect: The result of the negotiations between an attorney and his client as to their fee agreement is not controlling in fixing a reasonable attorney fee to assess against the opposing party. Such an award must be determined in accordance with the guidelines enumerated in Crncevich v. Georgetown Recreation Corp., 168 M 113, 541 P2d 56 (1975). Olson v. Carter, 175 M 105, 572 P2d 1238 (1977); Engebretson v. Putnam, 174 M 409, 571 P2d 368 (1977).

Attorney's Fees: On foreclosure of mortgage, federal tax lien took priority over attorney's fees allowed under 71-1-233 since attorney's lien failed to meet "choate" test at the time the amount of federal taxes owed on the property was fixed. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown v. Tilzey, 238 F. Supp. 750 (D.C. Mont. 1965).

Recovery of Costs When Value of Personal Property Not Shown: In an action in claim and delivery to recover the possession of machinery, where a verdict was directed for plaintiff and plaintiff had failed to offer proof of the value of the machinery, the court should not have made any allowance of costs to the plaintiff. Key v. Clements, 133 M 344, 323 P2d 603 (1958).

Application to Writ of Prohibition — Attorney's Fees: If pleaded, attorney fees are allowable as an item of damages in prohibition cases. State ex rel. Taylor v. District Court, 131 M 397, 310 P2d 779 (1957).

Theory of Complainant Not Determinative: Where plaintiff in an action for accounting did not prevail on exact theory outlined in his complaint but he did obtain precise relief sought, trial court properly entered judgment awarding costs to him. Ivins v. Hardy, 120 M 35, 179 P2d 745 (1947).

Prevailing Party Prima Facie Entitled to Costs: Plaintiff, a stockholder in a bank, was awarded judgment, with costs, on his complaint to require a bank officer to turn over a commission, earned on a loan, to the bank. The District Court properly gave judgment for costs as the prevailing party is prima facie entitled to costs under this statute, there being no abuse of discretion shown. Sullivan v. Mountain, 117 M 224, 160 P2d 477 (1945).

Successful Counterclaim by Defendant — Plaintiff's Costs Denied: Where plaintiff sued the defendant for damages sustained in an automobile accident and the jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant on his counterclaim, it was error for the court to allow plaintiff his costs, as the counterclaim constituted part of the defense to the plaintiff's claim and, because the counterclaim was granted, it is clear that the plaintiff did not prevail. Marcus v. Bowman, 110 M 412, 101 P2d 68 (1940).

Judgment Previously Paid — Defendant Entitled to Costs of Defense: In an action on foreclosure of mechanics' lien (now construction lien), where the court concluded that the lien had been discharged and the amount recovered on a judgment had previously been tendered by defendant, defendant was the prevailing party and as such was entitled to his costs of useless litigation. Luebben v. Metlen, 110 M 350, 100 P2d 935 (1940).

Amendment of Decree to Award Costs: Where the successful party in a water right suit was awarded all he prayed for, including injunctive relief, but neither findings, conclusions, nor decree mentioned costs, the trial court had the power to amend the decree by nunc pro tunc order awarding costs where his opponent, after the cost bill had been filed, waived his right to have them retaxed by not asserting it. State ex rel. Kruletz v. District Court, 110 M 36, 98 P2d 883 (1940).

Recovery of Costs After Claim Fully Paid: A plumbing company, asserting claim stipulated to have been fully paid by surety on federal public building contractor's bond, in intervening petition filed in action on such bond, to recover for materials furnished and work performed under agreement between intervener and contractor, is not entitled to recover attorney's fees and costs. It cannot reasonably be held that one whose claim has been paid in full can on any legal theory recover over $50, exclusive of interest. U.S. v. Seaboard Sur. Co., 26 F. Supp. 681 (D.C. Mont. 1938).

Multiple Parties in Water Rights Action — Section Inapplicable: In view of the peculiar nature of water right suits where every party thereto is an antagonist of every other party, the provisions of this section relative to costs recoverable by the successful party are not strictly applicable and may be applied only by making some apportionment of costs. Osnes Livestock Co. v. Warren, 103 M 284, 62 P2d 206 (1936).

Nominal Damages — Costs Not to Be Awarded: Under this section, one recovering nominal damages only is not entitled to costs. Doyle v. Union Bank & Trust Co., 102 M 563, 59 P2d 1171 (1936).

Real Property Use and Occupation: In an action by the purchaser of land at foreclosure sale to recover from a tenant in possession the reasonable value of its use and occupation, in which the recovery was less than $50, plaintiff was not, under subsection (3) of this section, entitled to his costs. Patterson v. Law, 78 M 221, 254 P 412 (1927).

Real Property Damages — Loss Immaterial: In an action for damages for trespass committed by defendant in pasturing his sheep upon plaintiff's land, plaintiff was entitled to recover his costs irrespective of the amount of the verdict in his favor, under subsection (1) of this section. Kiehl v. Holliday, 77 M 451, 251 P 527 (1926).

Successive Trials — Costs Recoverable for Both: Under this section, a successful litigant may recover all costs from his adversary, whether incurred in one or more trials of the cause; therefore, where plaintiff, though successful on the first trial secured a retrial on the ground of inadequacy of the verdict and had judgment, the court properly awarded him costs incident to both trials. Brunnabend v. Tibbles, 76 M 288, 246 P 536 (1926), distinguished in Christie v. Morris, 119 M 383, 176 P2d 660 (1946).

Costs Not Provided by Statute — Lack of Judicial Discretion: Costs eo nomine being the creatures of statute, they are not recoverable unless provided for therein, courts being without discretion to allow them where not so provided for. Jones v. Great N. Ry., 68 M 231, 217 P 673 (1923).

Application to Supervisory Writs of Supreme Court: Relator in an application to the Supreme Court for Writ of Supervisory Control running to the District Court is entitled to his costs, upon a judgment in his favor. State ex rel. Loundagin v. Tattan, 56 M 211, 181 P 984 (1919).

Habeas Corpus as Special Proceeding: A habeas corpus proceeding is a special proceeding in the nature of an action, the disposition of the Writ is a judgment, and the relator a plaintiff, within the meaning of this section. State ex rel. Brandegee v. Clements, 52 M 57, 155 P 271 (1916); State ex rel. Newell v. Newell, 13 M 302, 34 P 28 (1893); State ex rel. Shannon v. Reynolds, 13 M 423, 34 P 613 (1893).

Application to Writ of Prohibition — Action Against Justice's Court: Under this section and 25-10-102 one who successfully prosecutes a Writ, prohibiting a Justice of the Peace from proceeding further in an action in which the Justice has unlawfully issued a search warrant, is entitled to his costs. In such cases the prevailing party is entitled to his costs as a matter of course. State ex rel. Streit v. Justice Court, 45 M 375, 123 P 405 (1912).

Statutory Basis Only for Costs: The power to allow costs is purely statutory, and unless some statutory authority exists for their allowance, an allowance thereof is erroneous. Colusa Parrot Min. & Smelting Co. v. Barnard, 28 M 11, 72 P 45 (1903).

Tender by Defendant After Suit — Costs Allowable: Where defendant paid $1,095 after suit brought and in a stipulation admitted a balance due plaintiff of $6.64 but made no offer to allow judgment for that amount, it was error to refuse plaintiff a judgment for costs on his obtaining judgment for the $6.64. Pape v. Chauvin-Fant Furniture Co., 25 M 417, 65 P 424 (1901).

25-10-102. When costs allowed, of course, to defendant.

Case Notes

Prevailing Defendant Entitled to Costs in Action for Money or Damages: Rodgers sued defendant insurer to recover money, but defendant was granted summary judgment and requested costs pursuant to 25-10-101(3). The District Court ordered that each party bear its own costs, and defendant appealed. Rodgers contended that this action was not covered by 25-10-101(3) because as plaintiff, he did not recover more than $50. The Supreme Court held that if the subsection was interpreted as Rodgers asserted, a prevailing defendant could never recover costs in an action for recovery of money or damages, which was contrary to legislative intent. Thus, defendant was entitled to costs, and the court reversed for an assessment of defendant's costs. Rodgers v. MONY Life Ins. Co., 2005 MT 290, 329 M 289, 124 P3d 137 (2005), overruling any portion of Erickson v. Dairyland Ins. Co., 241 M 119, 785 P2d 705 (1990), interpreting this section as not requiring that a successful defendant in an action for money or damages recover costs.

Award of Costs to Employer in Employment Discrimination Case Proper — Federal Law Applicable Only to Award of Attorney Fees: In an employment discrimination case, the District Court awarded partial summary judgment to the employer and, after deducting the costs of a frivolous videotaped deposition, awarded costs to the employer. Rolison contended that the court erred by applying Montana law to the award of costs rather than 42 U.S.C. 2000e-5(k) and Christiansburg Garment Co. v. EEOC, 434 US 412 (1978), and asserted that a defendant in an action brought under Title VII of the federal Civil Rights Act of 1964 may recover costs from a plaintiff only if the action was frivolous, unreasonable, or without foundation. The Supreme Court disagreed after noting that the federal statute and Christiansburg both apply to the award of attorney fees, not costs. Therefore, the District Court properly applied 25-10-101 and this section rather than federal law in awarding costs to the defendant. Rolison v. Bozeman Deaconess Health Serv., Inc., 2005 MT 95, 326 M 491, 111 P3d 202 (2005).

"Costs" Held Not to Include Expenses of Deposition for Perpetuation of Testimony Incurred After Offer of Judgment: The Valeos sued Tabish for damage to the Valeos' road allegedly caused by Tabish's trucks. Tabish answered alleging contributory negligence. Thereafter, Tabish made an offer of judgment that the Valeos did not accept and subsequently incurred $609.29 for cost of airfare, hotel, and car rental in the taking of a deposition for perpetuation of testimony. The jury returned a verdict for Tabish, and the District Court entered judgment to include the $609.29 claimed by Tabish in his memorandum of costs. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court's opinion and held that "costs", as used in former Rule 68, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), should not be construed more broadly than the same word in 25-10-201 and held that its previous opinion in Fisher v. St. Farm Ins. Co., 281 M 236, 934 P2d 163 (1997), supported that conclusion. The Supreme Court also rejected Tabish's argument that the word "costs", as used in former Rule 68, must provide an independent right to receive costs other than as defined and provided in 25-10-101 and this section or the rule would otherwise serve no independent purpose to encourage the settlement of litigation. The Supreme Court noted that Tabish provided no authority for that argument and that the language of 25-10-101 and this section is significantly different from the language of former Rule 68. Valeo v. Tabish, 1999 MT 146, 295 M 34, 983 P2d 334, 56 St. Rep. 579 (1999).

No Reciprocal Right to Attorney Fees: The Valeos sued Tabish for damage to the Valeos' road allegedly caused by Tabish's trucks. Tabish answered, alleging contributory negligence and requesting attorney fees pursuant to 25-10-303. The Valeos moved for partial summary judgment on the issue of fees, and the District Court denied the motion. The jury returned a verdict for Tabish, and the District Court awarded Tabish attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that there is no reciprocal right to attorney fees under 25-10-303 because that statute grants only a plaintiff the right to attorney fees. Granting fees to a defendant pursuant to 25-10-303 would require the Supreme Court to insert language into that statute that isn't there, an act prohibited by 1-2-101. The Supreme Court dismissed Tabish's argument that fees are authorized by 25-10-101 and this section, pointing out that those statutes authorize the payment of only costs, not attorney fees. The Supreme Court also analyzed numerous cases cited by Tabish as authority for his claim that the payment of fees is reciprocal, holding that in each previous Supreme Court opinion cited by Tabish, the Supreme Court relied upon a different statute other than 25-10-303. For that reason, those cases were inapplicable to the issue before the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court therefore reversed the District Court and denied the defendant payment of his attorney fees. Valeo v. Tabish, 1999 MT 146, 295 M 34, 983 P2d 334, 56 St. Rep. 579 (1999).

Costs and Fees for Voluntary Dismissal: Plaintiff voluntarily dismissed the case under former Rule 41(a)(1), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), before an answer or a summary judgment motion was filed by defendant. It was error for the District Court to award defendant costs for substantial discovery made before dismissal. The District Court erroneously relied on discretionary authority under former Rule 41(a)(2) to award costs when dismissal was made under that subsection. USF&G Co. v. Rodgers, 267 M 178, 882 P2d 1037, 51 St. Rep. 1023 (1994).

Recovery of Costs by Prevailing Party for Depositions Used at Trial: Costs may be allowed by the District Court against a losing party only for depositions used as evidence at the trial or for impeachment purposes during the trial. Semenza v. Leitzke, 232 M 15, 754 P2d 509, 45 St. Rep. 829 (1988), followed in McGinley v. Ole's Country Stores, Inc., 241 M 248, 786 P2d 1156, 47 St. Rep. 181 (1990), and in Kearney v. KXLF Communications, Inc., 263 M 407, 869 P2d 772, 51 St. Rep. 119 (1994).

Liability Dispute Between Insurers — Costs and Fees: In a proceeding that was essentially between two insurers to determine which of two overlapping policies covered auto accident, the winner was not entitled to costs and attorney fees. Bill Atkin Volkswagen, Inc. v. McClafferty, 213 M 99, 689 P2d 1237, 41 St. Rep. 1981 (1984).

Party Prevailing on Main Issue Entitled to Costs: In this case the court adopted the California rule in interpreting cost statutes. If a plaintiff files a complaint in an action covered by 25-10-101 and succeeds only partially, the plaintiff is entitled to costs. If an action is filed and the defendant counterclaims and succeeds in having the plaintiff's claim totally denied but only recovers a portion of the relief demanded in the counterclaim, the defendant should receive costs. If, however, a party initiates a lawsuit, the defendant counterclaims, and the judgment awards both parties part of the relief they seek, the party prevailing on the main issue in controversy in the case must be allowed costs. The main issue in this case was the existence of an easement across the disputed road. Respondents prevailed on that issue. The cost statutes therefore entitled them to the costs of suit, including the cost of the survey necessary to determine the boundary between the Medhus and Dutter properties. Medhus v. Dutter, 184 M 437, 603 P2d 669 (1979), followed in Hoven v. Amrine, 224 M 15, 727 P2d 533, 43 St. Rep. 1977 (1986).

Costs Awarded to Defendant — Timely Filing: The mandatory language of 25-10-102 required the award of costs to a defendant who prevailed in a suit intended to enjoin him from further trespassing on a road that the lower court declared defendant had a prescriptive easement over since timely application for costs was made pursuant to 25-10-501. St. v. Cronin, 179 M 481, 587 P2d 395 (1978).

Counterclaim Dismissed — Costs of Defense Allowable: Where, in an action to recover damages, the jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendants, whose cross complaint containing a counterclaim had been dismissed, the trial court erred in allowing costs to plaintiff but acted properly in allowing defendants' bill for costs. Marcus v. Bowman, 110 M 412, 101 P2d 68 (1940), followed in Frigon v. Morrison-Maierle, Inc., 233 M 113, 760 P2d 57, 45 St. Rep. 1344 (1988).

Partial Decree for Defendant — Costs Allowed: Where in an action to quiet plaintiff's rights in 46 tracts and defendant claimed title to 27 of the tracts, the judgment, which decreed that plaintiff was entitled to 21 but made no disposition of the other 25, was in effect one against plaintiff as to the latter number and in favor of defendant, he failing only as to 2 tracts claimed by him, and the court did not err in rendering judgment for defendant for his costs. Aronow v. Hill, 87 M 153, 286 P 140 (1930).

Severance of Multiple Defendants — Costs Allowed: Where plaintiff at the time the cause was called for trial dismissed the action against one of several defendants, a severance of the action as to that defendant took place and he was entitled to the costs necessarily incurred by him in preparing for trial, summoning witnesses, etc., the same as if he had been made the sole defendant in the first instance. Patterson v. Law, 78 M 221, 254 P 412 (1927).

Costs Awarded Against State in Special Proceeding: A proceeding for the forfeiture of intoxicating liquors and property used in violation of the prohibition law and seized under section 11106, R.C.M. 1921 (since repealed), was neither a criminal nor a civil action but was special in its nature, and costs may be awarded the claimant against the State when it is the losing party. St. v. Rouleau, 68 M 529, 219 P 1096 (1923).

Defendant Partially Successful — Apportionment of Costs Not Allowed: In the absence of statutory authorization therefor, costs may not be apportioned between plaintiff and defendant where the former had judgment on one of his causes of action and the latter had judgment on the other; this section applies only to an action wherein defendant recovers judgment and plaintiff is altogether unsuccessful. Jones v. Great N. Ry., 68 M 231, 217 P 673 (1923).

Costs for Counterclaim Allowable: Costs were properly allowed defendant on his recovering $35 under a counterclaim. Spencer v. Mungus, 28 M 357, 72 P 663 (1903).

Supreme Court — Dismissal of Special Proceedings: Costs will be allowed in the Supreme Court to defendant where a special proceeding is dismissed, though the judgment awards no costs, and judgment for costs will be entered on application. State ex rel. Baker v. District Court, 24 M 425, 62 P 688 (1900). See also State ex rel. Healy v. District Court, 26 M 224, 67 P 114, 68 P 470 (1902).

Case Notes

Statute-Based Holding — Private Attorney General Doctrine Inapplicable Absent Vindication of Constitutional Interests: The private attorney general doctrine for the award of attorney fees applies when the government fails to properly enforce interests that are significant to its citizens, but the doctrine only applies when constitutional interests are vindicated. When a holding is statute-based rather than a determination of constitutional interests, the award of fees under the private attorney general doctrine is not warranted. Baxter v. St., 2009 MT 449, 354 M 234, 224 P3d 1211 (2009). See also Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800 (1999), and Am. Cancer Soc'y v. St., 2004 MT 376, 325 M 70, 103 P3d 1085 (2004).

Sanctions for Alleged Bad Faith in Settlement Negotiations Properly Denied: The District Court ordered a settlement conference between plaintiff and defendant city regarding denial of plaintiff's conditional permit request for a liquor and gambling establishment. The city sent a representative with limited settlement authority and made no settlement offer. Plaintiff requested sanctions against the city for failing to participate in settlement in good faith, but the District Court denied the request. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that sending a representative with very little authority and failing to settle a case, without more, do not necessarily constitute grounds for sanctions. Here, the city participated in the conference as required, informed plaintiff of the representative's limited authority and of the city's opinion that the case had little settlement value, and even suggested delaying the conference to allow the representative to gain additional settlement authority. The city's actions were not made in bad faith, and the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying sanctions. The District Court was affirmed. Germann v. Stephens, 2006 MT 130, 332 M 303, 137 P3d 545 (2006).

No Equitable Exception to American Rule for Parties Forced to Bring Suit to Determine Legal Rights Against Party Presenting Frivolous Defense in Bad Faith: Plaintiffs in a forcible detainer action contended that they should be granted attorney fees as an exception to the American Rule that a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory grant of those fees because plaintiffs were forced to bring a lawsuit to determine their legal property rights against a defendant who presented a frivolous defense asserted in bad faith. The District Court declined to award attorney fees, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that a malicious or bad faith equitable exception to the American Rule has consistently been denied and that the exception in Langemeier v. Kuehl, 2001 MT 306, 307 M 499, 40 P3d 343 (2001), did not apply. Harding v. Savoy, 2004 MT 280, 323 M 261, 100 P3d 976 (2004).

Attorney Fees Proper to Defend Untimely and Inappropriate Nonmeritorious Action: An award of attorney fees to plaintiff was within the District Court's discretion when plaintiff, as a wholly innocent party, was forced to employ counsel to defend a nonmeritorious motion that was both untimely and inappropriate. Connell v. Dept. of Social and Rehabilitation Services, 2003 MT 361, 319 M 69, 81 P3d 1279 (2003), following Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114 (1978). See also In re J.A.L., 2014 MT 196, 376 Mont. 18, 329 P.3d 1273.

Award of Attorney Fees Under Private Attorney General Doctrine Inapplicable to Legislative Actions: Plaintiffs, including several individuals and cities, prevailed in an action declaring as unconstitutional a statutory process for designating a county building code jurisdictional area and eliminating municipal jurisdictional areas by an election procedure limited to record owners of real property instead of the general constituency. Plaintiffs sought attorney fees from defendants, including several counties and the state, under the private attorney general doctrine exception established in Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800 (1999). The Supreme Court found that although it might be equitable to award attorney fees to plaintiffs under the doctrine, the inequity of imposing those fees against the defendant counties who neither fashioned nor passed the unconstitutional law was overriding. Thus, the only entity remaining against whom fees could be assessed was the state, for the actions of the Legislature, but under 2-9-111, the Legislature is immune from suit for any action or omission, so there was no avenue whereby attorney fees could be assessed, and the request for fees was denied. Finke v. State ex rel. McGrath, 2003 MT 48, 314 M 314, 65 P3d 576 (2003).

Application of Former Rule 68, M.R.Civ.P., Does Not Preclude Award of Presettlement Offer Costs: In a contract dispute, the state had made a pretrial offer of settlement that was rejected by the plaintiff contractors. The recovery by the contractors was for less than the pretrial settlement offer, and the lower court awarded the state its postoffer costs as mandated by former Rule 68, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The lower court also awarded the state its presettlement offer costs. The contractors argued that the rule limits allowable costs to those incurred after the offer of settlement. The Supreme Court held that the rule mandates an award of postsettlement offer costs but that it does not limit the discretion granted a court under this section to award presettlement offer costs. Idaho Asphalt Supply v. Dept. of Transportation, 2001 MT 27, 304 M 157, 18 P3d 1018 (2001).

Test for Determining Prevailing Party in Mixed Motive Employment Discrimination Case: Laudert suffered liver failure while employed by the Richland County Sheriff's Department (RCSD) and had to resign. Following Laudert's full recovery, his former position came open again and he applied but was not rehired. He filed a discrimination charge on grounds of age and disability. The hearings examiner found that questions asked by the RCSD interview panel constituted direct evidence that RCSD had unlawfully considered Laudert's disability, but did not award damages because Laudert would not have been hired even in the absence of any unlawful consideration of his disability. The District Court held that Laudert was not entitled to attorney fees because he did not prevail on the ultimate basis for his petition. Laudert appealed the denial of attorney fees, asserting that because the hearings examiner found that his disability had been unlawfully considered and because affirmative relief was awarded against RCSD in the form of an injunctive order requiring RCSD to submit a written policy regarding hiring procedures, including guidelines regarding future inquiry into applicant disabilities, he was the prevailing party. The Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in applying the "central issue" and "primary relief sought" tests for determining the prevailing party, analyses expressly repudiated in Tex. St. Teachers Ass'n v. Garland Independent School District, 489 US 782 (1989). Requiring plaintiff to prevail on the ultimate basis for a petition is an inappropriate test for determining whether attorney fees should be awarded under 49-2-505. Under Farrar v. Hobby, 506 US 103 (1992), a plaintiff prevails when actual relief on the merits of the claim materially alters the legal relationship between the parties by modifying the defendant's behavior in a way that directly benefits the plaintiff. Here, the order of affirmative injunctive relief clearly modified RCSD's behavior. However, the Supreme Court rejected the Farrar requirement that a plaintiff secure a direct benefit at the time of the judgment in order to be a prevailing party because that requirement would not further the purpose of awarding attorney fees under Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act. Complaints of civil rights abuses that successfully establish a finding of discrimination and an order of injunctive relief are the type of meritorious litigation that should be encouraged. The District Court's determination that Laudert did not prevail because RCSD proved it would have made the same hiring decision, despite its consideration of Laudert's disability, was reversible error. Laudert v. Richland County Sheriff's Dept., 2000 MT 218, 301 M 114, 7 P3d 386, 57 St. Rep. 872 (2000). Following remand for determination of a reasonable fee award under 49-2-505, the District Court noted that Laudert was the prevailing party in the 2000 case, even though Laudert's request for damages was denied, and awarded Laudert's counsel fees for all time expended. The RCSD appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The Supreme Court cited Pa. v. Del. Valley Citizens' Council for Clean Air, 478 US 546 (1986), for the strong presumption, given the rationale behind fee-shifting provisions, that the lodestar amount is a reasonable fee, noting that fee-shifting statutes were not designed to be windfalls for attorneys or to replicate the amount that an attorney would receive in other types of litigation, but rather to enable private parties to retain the legal assistance necessary to seek redress when their rights are violated. The court also applied the two-step approach in Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 US 424 (1983), to address other considerations that may lead to a fee adjustment in cases when attorney fees are recoverable by a partially prevailing plaintiff in pursuit of unsuccessful claims. Under Hensley, an attorney should receive fees for the full services provided when plaintiff has obtained excellent results, even if plaintiff does not prevail on every claim. In this case, Laudert achieved the level of success necessary to support the award of the full amount of fees claimed, and the District Court did not err in awarding the full amount. Laudert v. Richland County Sheriff's Dept., 2001 MT 287, 307 M 403, 38 P3d 790 (2001). See also Ihler v. Chisholm, 2000 MT 37, 298 M 254, 995 P2d 439 (2000). See also Dolan v. No Attorney Fees Awarded Absent Prevailing Party: H-D Irrigating, Inc., bought land and irrigation equipment from Hobble Diamond Cattle Company and Kimble Properties, Inc., respectively, then sued both companies for constructive fraud when the land eroded and caused damage to the irrigation system. The District Court held that neither party was the prevailing party and that each party was responsible for its own attorney fees and costs. The Supreme Court agreed. Generally, attorney fees are not recoverable absent a statutory or contractual provision. Here, both parties gained a victory but also suffered a loss, and the District Court did not abuse its discretion when it did not award attorney fees. H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000). See also McCauley v. Thompson-Nistler, 2000 MT 215, 301 M 81, 10 P3d 794, 57 St. Rep. 855 (2000).

Doctrine of Private Attorney General Applied — Three-Part Test for Awarding Attorney Fees: The District Court concluded that under 25-10-711, attorney fees were not available to plaintiff in this case because the action involved "neither frivolous conduct, extreme conduct, nor bad faith by the State". Plaintiff argued that it was entitled to attorney fees under the doctrine of private attorney general, which is an equitable exception to the American rule that a party is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory provision. Under Serrano v. Priest, 569 P2d 1303 (Calif. 1977), there are three basic factors to be considered in awarding attorney fees based on the doctrine of private attorney general: (1) the strength or societal importance of the public policy vindicated by the litigation; (2) the necessity of private enforcement and the magnitude of the resultant burden on plaintiff; and (3) the number of people standing to benefit from the decision. Here, plaintiff prevailed in a challenge to the constitutionality of numerous statutes regarding the state's administration of school trust lands. The litigation involved important public policies grounded in the constitution, requiring private constitutional enforcement, and benefited a large class of citizens interested in Montana's public schools. The District Court ignored recognized principles in denying plaintiff's reasonable attorney fees, resulting in substantial injustice. The Supreme Court applied the Serrano test and reversed for an award of attorney fees to plaintiff under the doctrine of private attorney general. Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800, 56 St. Rep. 1065 (1999), following In re Porter, 156 M 190, 478 P2d 866 (1970), distinguishing School District v. St., 236 M 44, 769 P2d 684, 46 St. Rep. 169 (1989), and followed in Columbia Falls Elementary School District No. 6 v. St., 2005 MT 69, 326 M 304, 109 P3d 257 (2005), and Sunburst School District No. 2 v. Texaco, Inc., 2007 MT 183, 338 M 259, 165 P3d 1079 (2007).

Living Trust — Costs and Attorney Fees Awarded to Trustee From Trust — Judicial Construction of Trust Documents: Clifford Dern and his wife Mary established a living trust for the benefit of their family. Derril Dern, a cotrustee, refused to sign a quitclaim deed conveying various properties left to the trust beneficiaries, and Mary brought an action to determine the beneficiaries' rights. The District Court relied upon this section for its determination that payment of costs was discretionary with the court. The Supreme Court held that this section applies only in those situations in which costs are not otherwise provided for. In this case, article 3 of the trust documents states that the trustee may pay "expenses of administration" from the trust. In reliance on that language and on 72-33-631 (now repealed), the Supreme Court held that the fees were a necessary expense of the trust, given Derril's refusal to sign the deed. The Supreme Court also noted that 72-33-631 (now repealed) allows repayment of expenditures incurred by the trustee in administration of the trust, that that provision was patterned after a section of the California probate code, and that California decisions interpreting that section of the California probate code hold that reasonable attorney fees are considered necessary expenses of trust administration. The Supreme Court also pointed out that its decision to allow fees is further buttressed by decisions interpreting 72-12-206. Finally, because the trust documents provided that only expenses of the trust were to be paid from the "trust estate", without further delineation of what constitutes the "trust estate", the Supreme Court interpreted those words to mean the entire trust estate, and because the marital trust estate was the only remaining source of funding for the entire estate, the fees were to be paid from the marital trust estate. In re Estate of Dern, 279 M 138, 928 P2d 123, 53 St. Rep. 1087 (1996).

Payment of Attorney Fees Not Required — Inclusion of Litigation Cost in Corporate Value Approved: McCann Ranch, Inc. (MRI), brought a declaratory judgment action against Sharon in order to determine the value of her 600 minority shares for purposes of the dissolution of her marriage. Sharon argued that the District Court erred in refusing to award her attorney fees and costs. The Supreme Court held that inasmuch as the action was a declaratory judgment action brought by the corporation, attorney fees were not payable. The Supreme Court noted that even if the action had been a minority shareholder action, award of attorney fees was discretionary. The District Court did not abuse its discretion because there was no "prevailing party" in the action. The Supreme Court also held that the District Court did not err in the calculation of MRI's litigation expenses for inclusion in the corporate assets prior to valuation of Sharon's shares because the expenses as valued by Sharon were not supported by the record. McCann Ranch, Inc. v. Quigley-McCann, 276 M 205, 915 P2d 239, 53 St. Rep. 349 (1996).

Question of Insurance Coverage Under Policy — Award of Costs Discretionary: The lower court granted the insurer's motion for summary judgment, holding that there was no coverage of the plaintiff's personal injuries under the contract, but denied the insurer's motion for costs. The Supreme Court affirmed, stating that there was no statutory grounds for costs, thus making the award of costs discretionary. Erickson v. Dairyland Ins. Co., 241 M 119, 785 P2d 705, 47 St. Rep. 130 (1990), overruled, to the extent that 25-10-102 does not require that a successful defendant in an action for money or damages recover costs.

Failure to Prevail or Establish Frivolous Defense — Costs Disallowed: The trial court's conclusion that plaintiff had not prevailed in an action and that each party acted in good faith in bringing and defending the lawsuit was sufficient to preclude the award of fees and costs under 25-10-711 and under the court's exercise of its equity power. Myers v. Dept. of Agriculture, 232 M 286, 756 P2d 1144, 45 St. Rep. 1056 (1988).

Costs in Contempt — Injunction Action: Defendant was found to be in contempt of a previous court order allowing plaintiff to regulate a water supply system. Plaintiffs sought to enjoin defendant from further interference with the system. After finding defendant in contempt, the court awarded costs to plaintiff. On appeal, defendant contended his contempt fine should be part of the costs, relying on State ex rel. Foss v. District Court, 216 M 327, 701 P2d 342, 42 St. Rep. 845 (1985). The Supreme Court held that because this was an injunction action, costs were awardable under 25-10-101(6) and could be in addition to the fine. Walker v. Warner, 228 M 162, 740 P2d 1147, 44 St. Rep. 1424 (1987).

Contempt Order — Costs Award Proper — Attorney Fees Award Improper: In reviewing a contempt order that arose out of a water rights dispute, the Supreme Court ruled that an award of costs to the irrigation district as the prevailing party was proper, but that an award of attorney fees to the district was not proper. The court reasoned that no applicable statute or contractual provision provided for attorney fees and that the case did not fit within the exceptions recognized in Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114, 35 St. Rep. 811 (1978). State ex rel. Foss v. District Court, 216 M 327, 701 P2d 342, 42 St. Rep. 845 (1985).

Reformation of Contract — No Prevailing Party — Denial of Costs and Attorney Fees: In suit for reformation of contract for deed and for negligent misrepresentation, the District Court reduced the sales contract by $1,500 but denied plaintiff's damage claims and refused to award plaintiff costs and attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying costs and attorney fees in absence of a statute or contract provision. Plaintiff was not entitled to costs under 25-10-101 because the action did not involve title to property and plaintiff did not receive a "judgment in his favor". There is no prevailing party when both parties gain a victory but also suffer a loss. Parcel v. Myers, 214 M 220, 697 P2d 89, 41 St. Rep. 2426 (1984).

Plaintiff Losing Quiet Title Action Not Entitled to Attorney Fees: Under 25-10-101 and 25-10-102 attorneys' fees may be awarded as a matter of course to the party receiving a favorable judgment involving real property. Thus, when plaintiff filed a quiet title action and ended up losing possession of the property he was not entitled to attorneys' fees unless awarded by discretion of the court under 25-10-103, and the court properly decreed that each party pay their own costs. Stimatz v. St., 189 M 179, 615 P2d 228 (1980).

Costs in Condemnation Proceeding: Although the plaintiff is the losing party in an eminent domain proceeding and therefore not the party benefited in the proceeding, he can nevertheless be accountable for defendants' costs. Groundwater v. Wright, 180 M 27, 588 P2d 1003 (1979).

Recovery Upon Theory Other Than Alleged — Costs Properly Allowed: Where the plaintiff brought an action against the defendant to dissolve an alleged partnership, for an accounting and to compel the sale of partnership property, and the court found that a partnership did not exist but that the relationship between the parties was that of joint adventurers and granted the requested relief, costs were properly allowed under this section as the plaintiff was given the relief requested. Ivins v. Hardy, 120 M 35, 179 P2d 745 (1947), overruled as to issue of whether partnership existed in Walsh v. Ellingson Agency, 188 M 367, 613 P2d 1381 (1980).

Stakeholder's Costs — Abuse of Discretion: The court abused its discretion in awarding costs to one of two claimants to a fund, against a stakeholder who had paid it into court to await judgment as to which of the two claimants was the true owner; the successful claimant and defendant stakeholder were each entitled to their costs as against the unsuccessful claimant. Zunchich v. Sec. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 85 M 341, 278 P 1011 (1929).

Award of Costs in Divorce Proceedings — Unsuccessful Defendant Unable to Pay: In equity cases the awarding of costs rests within the discretion of the trial court, and if it appears from the existence of the circumstances sufficient to overcome the prima facie right of the prevailing party to his costs that it would be inequitable to compel the losing one to pay them, it may impose them upon the former; therefore, where a decree of divorce was awarded to plaintiff husband and it was shown that the wife was without means, awarding of costs to her may not be said to have amounted to an abuse of discretion on the part of the court. Albrecht v. Albrecht, 83 M 37, 269 P 158 (1928).

Costs Statutorily Created — Discretion as Provided by Statute Only: Costs eo nomine were not recoverable by either party at the common law; they are the creatures of statute, and in adjudging them, courts must be guided by the sections of the Codes awarding them, and they are without discretion in the matter except in the class of cases referred to in this section and section 25-10-104. Albrecht v. Albrecht, 83 M 37, 269 P 158 (1928).

Costs as Condition to New Trial — Discretion of Court: This section, though not in terms authorizing the District Court to impose terms as a condition to the granting of a new trial, was sufficiently broad to vest that court with such discretionary power. Brunnabend v. Tibbles, 76 M 288, 246 P 536 (1926).

Discretion of Court Under Other Section: It may be within the power of the Legislature to lodge the whole matter of costs in the discretion of the courts, but until it does so, they have no discretion in adjudging them, except in the class of cases mentioned in this section and 25-10-104. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co. v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 27 M 288, 70 P 1114 (1902).

Case Notes

Neither Party Totally Successful — Cost of Transcript Properly Split: Both parties appealed, but each party lost a portion of its appeal. Weber paid the initial cost of the transcript that was used by both parties in preparing their appeal. Because neither party was totally successful, the District Court properly divided the cost of the transcript between the parties. Weber v. St., 258 M 62, 852 P2d 117, 50 St. Rep. 425 (1993).

Minor Changes in Grant of Custody on Remand — No Legal Issues Reversed: In affirming a decision on remand by the District Court to hold each party responsible for its own costs of the original appeal and to equally divide the costs of the children's lawyer, the court followed State ex rel. Nesbitt v. District Court, 119 M 198, 173 P2d 412 (1946), in holding that under former Rule 33, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), the slight modification in the previous decree did not make appellant the successful party on appeal and that absent reversal of legal questions in favor of either party, assignment of individual costs was proper. In re Marriage of Kuzara, 224 M 124, 728 P2d 786, 43 St. Rep. 2068 (1986).

Attorney Fees — Not Included in Costs on Appeal: There was substantial evidence to support the findings of the lower court in regard to award of attorney fees at the trial level. Furthermore, the wife was not entitled to attorney fees on appeal since they are not included in costs recoverable by the prevailing party on appeal. Allen v. Allen, 175 M 527, 575 P2d 74 (1978).

"Discretion" as Discretion of Appellate Court: The discretion referred to in this section is the discretion of the appellate court and not the discretion of the trial court. State ex rel. Nesbitt v. District Court, 119 M 198, 173 P2d 412 (1946).

Plaintiff Paying Remittitur as "Successful Party": Where Supreme Court upheld judgment for plaintiffs in all respects except that it found judgment excessive in a small amount and remanded cause to the District Court to grant new trial unless plaintiffs filed a remittitur, plaintiffs were the "successful parties" on appeal and were therefore entitled to their costs and trial court erred in awarding costs on appeal to defendants. State ex rel. Nesbitt v. District Court, 119 M 198, 173 P2d 412 (1946).

Cause Remanded for Amendment of Petition — Costs Allowed: Supreme Court's order reversing District Court's order dismissing petition for appointment as City Attorney under veterans' preference laws but remanding cause with directions to permit amendment of petition so as to bring it within such laws gave petitioner no substantive right rendering him successful party entitled to costs in Supreme Court. State ex rel. O'Sullivan v. District Court, 119 M 189, 172 P2d 816 (1946).

No Request for Costs in Modification and Affirmance of Judgment: Where the Supreme Court modified judgment and affirmed it as modified but did not mention costs, which were discretionary under this section, and appellant in his motion for rehearing did not ask for determination thereof, the District Court in modifying the judgment as directed on remittitur did not err in making an order requiring each party to pay his own costs in both courts. Lloyd v. Great Falls, 107 M 588, 87 P2d 187 (1939).

Excessive Costs on Appeal for Transcript: Where appellant inserts matter in the transcript on appeal not properly part of it or duplicates papers when an appropriate reference would have answered the purpose and by so doing causes the transcript to exceed 100 pages, thus calling for the printing thereof, cost of printing, otherwise recoverable, was disallowed on reversal of judgment. Linney v. Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pac. R.R., 94 M 229, 21 P2d 1101 (1933).

Costs Statutorily Created — Discretion as Provided by Statute Only: Costs eo nomine were not recoverable by either party at the common law; they are the creatures of statute, and in adjudging them, courts must be guided by the sections of the Codes awarding them, and they are without discretion in the matter except in the class of cases referred to in 25-10-103 and this section. Albrecht v. Albrecht, 83 M 37, 269 P 158 (1928).

Failure to Assert Error in Trial Court — Respondent to Collect Costs on Appeal:

Where appellant by proper motion in the District Court could have obtained the relief granted him on appeal by way of modification of the judgment, the respondent will be awarded his costs on appeal as upon full affirmance of the judgment. In re Fort Shaw Irrigation District, 81 M 170, 261 P 962 (1927).

Where appellant made no effort in the trial court to have an apparent error in an award of damages corrected on motion for a new trial and the judgment is modified on appeal to the extent of such erroneous award, the respondent will be awarded his costs on appeal notwithstanding such modification. Ramsbacher v. Hohman, 80 M 480, 261 P 273 (1927).

Memorandum of Costs Required: The successful party is entitled to his costs on appeal, whether or not a formal order to that effect is made by the Supreme Court, if he files a memorandum of his costs with the Clerk of the District Court within 30 days after the remittitur is filed with that officer; failure to do so deprives him of his right to have them included in the judgment in his favor on a subsequent trial. First St. Bank v. Larsen, 72 M 400, 233 P 960 (1925).

Supreme Court Order for Costs — Enforcement by District Court: The disposition of costs on an appeal is, under this section and 72-10-111, within the discretion of the Supreme Court; and if such court directs the costs to be charged against the respondents and such order has become final when the remittitur issues, the District Court has no jurisdiction over that order except to enforce it; it has no power to change or modify the order. In re Williams' Estate, 52 M 366, 157 P 963 (1916).

Order for Administrator to Personally Pay Costs — Jurisdiction of District Court: Where the Supreme Court in the disposition of an appeal from an order settling an administrator's account remands the cause with directions to require that officer to file a further account and orders that the costs incident to the appeal be paid by the administrator personally, the jurisdiction of the District Court is limited to the enforcement of the order, except that it may determine disputed questions of costs or on final settlement of the account allow such portion of the costs incurred as a charge against the estate as justice may require. Procedure for Collecting Costs Applied: Although a party is free to contract for costs not allowed by 25-10-201, because the contract at issue did not contain any procedural language regarding how to file the bill of costs, the procedural requirements contained in 25-10-501 applied. Costs in Attorney Disciplinary Action Governed by Montana Rules for Lawyer Disciplinary Enforcement: Attorney Potts objected to the statement of costs filed by the Office of Disciplinary Counsel stemming from disciplinary proceedings against Potts before the Commission on Practice, asserted that the Office violated several statutes and former Rule 33, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), in assigning costs as directed in In re Potts, 2007 MT 81, 336 M 517, 158 P3d 418 (2007), and requested a hearing before an adjudicatory panel regarding reasonableness of the costs. The Supreme Court held that, in accord with the court's authority to regulate and discipline attorneys, the Montana Rules for Lawyer Disciplinary Enforcement (MRLDE), not the statutes and rules applicable to civil actions generally, govern costs imposed by the Office as discipline or sanctions against attorneys. Under Rule 9(A)(8), MRLDE, the attorney must pay reasonable costs of any professional services employed by the Commission, and the case was remanded for a hearing before an adjudicatory panel for consideration of the reasonableness of the amount requested by the Office for each category of costs. In re Potts, 2007 MT 236, 339 M 186, 171 P3d 286 (2007).

Award of Attorney Fees and Costs Allowed Both for Sanction and as Statutory Fees — Conditions of Dual Award: The District Court awarded attorney fees and costs to defendants as a sanction for plaintiffs' violation of former Rule 11, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Defendants also prevailed on a ditch encroachment claim against plaintiffs and were thus entitled to attorney fees and costs as the prevailing party pursuant to 70-17-112. The Supreme Court noted that in this case, the conduct being punished was distinct under each respective authority, so the District Court was allowed to award attorney fees and costs both for a former Rule 11 violation and pursuant to the statute. However, if attorney fees and costs are awarded as a former Rule 11 sanction, the District Court must ensure that the conduct being sanctioned is not the same conduct for which attorney fees and costs are awarded under the statute because litigants are not entitled to duplicate awards for the same conduct. Byrum v. Andren, 2007 MT 107, 337 M 167, 159 P3d 1062 (2007).

Boundary Dispute Not Considered Appropriate for Declaratory Judgment — Attorney Fees Properly Denied: In a prescriptive easement dispute based on competing surveys, the District Court relied on this section and denied plaintiffs' request for attorney fees. On appeal, plaintiffs asserted that because defendant had alleged that the case was a declaratory judgment action, attorney fees should have been granted under 27-8-311. The Supreme Court disagreed. Under 27-8-202, an action for declaratory judgment encompasses the construction of a deed or other instrument, not a determination of a boundary based on competing surveys. Plaintiffs provided no other basis for an award of attorney fees, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the District Court judgment. Steiger v. Brown, 2007 MT 29, 336 M 29, 152 P3d 705 (2007).

Recoupment of Costs Provided for Defense of Claims Outside Insurance Policy Coverage: Plaintiff defended claims from third parties against defendant, but the claims were subsequently determined to be barred by exclusionary language in defendant's policy. Plaintiff sought to recoup the costs expended on defendant's behalf, and the District Court awarded plaintiff's costs. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the award. Plaintiff timely and explicitly reserved the right to recoup the defense costs by notifying defendant of plaintiff's reservation of rights prior to paying the costs and thus expressly reserved its right to recoup defense costs if a court determined that plaintiff had no duty to provide the costs. Defendant implicitly accepted plaintiff's reserved rights by posing no objection to the reservation. Travelers Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Ribi Immunochem Research, Inc., 2005 MT 50, 326 M 174, 108 P3d 469 (2005). See also Grinnell Mut. Reins. Co. v. Shierk, 996 F. Supp. 836 (S.D. Ill. 1998), United Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Summary Judgment — Deposition Costs Recoverable if Deposition Used in Dispositive Manner: In summary judgment actions, deposition costs are recoverable when a deposition is used in a dispositive manner. Here, depositions were not necessary to decide defendant's summary judgment motion because the grant of summary judgment was based purely on statutory interpretation and undisputed facts not derived from the depositions, so defendant's motion for deposition costs was properly denied. Ritchie v. Ennis, 2004 MT 43, 320 M 94, 86 P3d 11 (2004). See also Roy v. Neibauer, 191 M 224, 623 P2d 555 (1981).

Failure of District Court to Reverse Judgment for Costs When Bill of Costs Not Timely Filed — Reversible Error: The District Court held that defendants were entitled to $822 in costs from plaintiff. However, defendants conceded that because they failed to file a timely bill of costs, they were not entitled to costs. Nevertheless, the District Court failed to reverse its judgment for costs, so plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court held that in light of defendants' concession, the District Court abused its discretion by not reversing the judgment, so the Supreme Court reversed the judgment. Hawkins v. Harney, 2003 MT 58, 314 M 384, 66 P3d 305 (2003).

Costs for Court Reporter Services and Subpoena Services Improperly Disallowed — Costs for Computer Research Properly Disallowed: Defendants prevailed in a prescriptive easement case and sought costs for court reporter services, subpoena services, and Westlaw computer research. The District Court declined to award costs for any of the services, and defendants appealed. The Supreme Court agreed with defendants that transcripts were necessary to prepare posttrial findings and conclusions, so costs for court reporter services were reasonable. Subpoena services were necessary to compel witnesses to attend trial, so subpoena service costs were also reasonable. However, Westlaw computer research services primarily involve improving a law practice's efficiency and may be common in modern law practice, but are not necessary costs. The case was remanded for an award of transcript and subpoena service costs. Ray v. Nansel, 2002 MT 191, 311 M 135, 53 P3d 870 (2002).

Supreme Court Refuses to Expand Equitable Exception for Awarding Attorney Fees for False Claims: Summers purchased a homeowner's policy from American and 2 years later purchased an additional policy from National without canceling his first policy. The home was subsequently burned, and Summers filed a claim with American. When American learned of the policy with National, National filed an interpleader action with the District Court and deposited its policy limit of $77,000, to which both American and Summers claimed entitlement. The American policy contained explicit language that the policy terminated upon the purchase of the subsequent policy by Summers. Relying on the public policy enunciated in automobile insurance stacking cases, Summers argued that the "other insurance" clause in American's policy was void as a matter of public policy. See Bennett v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 261 M 386, 862 P2d 1146 (1993). The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that stacking automobile policies was allowed in order to ensure that victims receive adequate compensation but that in the case before it, Summers could not demonstrate that the compensation received from National did not fully cover his loss and therefore American did not have to pay the homeowner a second time for the loss and was only liable to Summers for the premiums collected after Summers obtained the National policy. American urged the court to expand the equitable exception for awarding attorney fees when no contract or statutory basis exists for awarding the fees to cover false claims as well as frivolous or malicious claims. The Supreme Court declined to adopt an interpleader exception that would allow the award of fees when a false claim is made because the underlying claim was neither frivolous nor malicious. Nat'l Cas. Co. v. Am. Bankers Ins. Co. of Fla., 2001 MT 28, 304 M 163, 19 P3d 223 (2001).

"Costs" Held Not to Include Expenses of Deposition for Perpetuation of Testimony Incurred After Offer of Judgment: The Valeos sued Tabish for damage to the Valeos' road allegedly caused by Tabish's trucks. Tabish answered alleging contributory negligence. Thereafter, Tabish made an offer of judgment that the Valeos did not accept and subsequently incurred $609.29 for cost of airfare, hotel, and car rental in the taking of a deposition for perpetuation of testimony. The jury returned a verdict for Tabish, and the District Court entered judgment to include the $609.29 claimed by Tabish in his memorandum of costs. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court's opinion and held that "costs", as used in former Rule 68, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), should not be construed more broadly than the same word in this section and held that its previous opinion in Fisher v. St. Farm Ins. Co., 281 M 236, 934 P2d 163 (1997), supported that conclusion. The Supreme Court also rejected Tabish's argument that the word "costs", as used in former Rule 68, must provide an independent right to receive costs other than as defined and provided in 25-10-101 and 25-10-102 or the rule would otherwise serve no independent purpose to encourage the settlement of litigation. The Supreme Court noted that Tabish provided no authority for that argument and that the language of 25-10-101 and 25-10-102 is significantly different from the language of Rule 68. Valeo v. Tabish, 1999 MT 146, 295 M 34, 983 P2d 334, 56 St. Rep. 579 (1999).

Question Whether Maps and Aerial Photograph Prepared for Specific Use in Prescriptive Easement Action — Remand: There was confusion as to whether costs incurred in the preparation of maps and an aerial photograph related to expenses of creating them or copying them. The Supreme Court held that costs were allowable for copying the maps because the costs were a necessary disbursement incurred in the preparation of the summary judgment hearing in the case. However, the court was unable to make a similar determination regarding the aerial photograph and remanded for a determination of whether the photograph was an original or copy of the original prepared in furtherance of the case. Hitshew v. Butte/Silver Bow County, 1999 MT 26, 293 M 212, 974 P2d 650, 56 St. Rep. 111 (1999).

Costs Allowable in Summary Judgment Case — Remand: Springer prevailed in an action against a traffic control officer and the city of Bozeman to recover damages for destruction of a vehicle without notice. The District Court awarded Springer $1,500 in damages and $1,636.32 in costs. Citing Thayer v. Hicks, 243 M 138, 793 P2d 784 (1990), the city argued that the court abused its discretion in awarding costs because most of the identified costs did not fall within the purview of this section. Generally, a party that ultimately prevails on summary judgment is entitled to the same allowable costs as if the case had been disposed of at trial. On appeal, the Supreme Court reviewed the bill of costs; affirmed the award of filing fees; reversed the award for long-distance telephone calls pursuant to Thayer; and remanded for a determination of whether awards for photocopy costs, facsimile transmission expenses, postage costs, shipping charges, a service fee, counsel's mileage expenses, and deposition costs were allowable. Springer v. Becker, 284 M 267, 949 P2d 641, 54 St. Rep. 876 (1997).

Easement Dispute — Attorney Fees Improperly Awarded — Foy and Randono Distinguished — Costs Sustained: Smalls brought a quiet title action against Goods for determination of an easement. Goods counterclaimed to quiet title to an easement for themselves. The District Court found in favor of the Smalls on the easement issue and awarded Smalls $8,536 in attorney fees and $759 in costs. The Supreme Court reversed on the issue of attorney fees, holding that there was no applicable exception to the general rule that attorney fees cannot be awarded absent a contractual agreement or other special circumstances. The Supreme Court held that the District Court improperly relied upon Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114 (1978), and Martin v. Randono, 191 M 266, 623 P2d 959 (1981). The Supreme Court stated that the Randono case stands for the proposition that fees may not be awarded as costs and that Foy is distinguishable in that in Foy, fees were awarded to a person who had sought to avoid legal action, unlike the Smalls who initiated litigation in this case. Although expressing no opinion on the applicability of former Rules 11 and 54(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), to the case before it, the Supreme Court also pointed out that fees could be awarded as a sanction under former Rule 11 and that costs could be awarded pursuant to former Rule 54(d). However, the Supreme Court did sustain the award of costs to Smalls, noting that the purposes for which costs were awarded by the District Court were of the type of costs allowable under this section. Small v. Good, 284 M 159, 943 P2d 1258, 54 St. Rep. 825 (1997).

Failure to File Bill of Costs Held Waiver of Recovery of Costs — Issue Addressed First Time on Appeal: Cenex, Inc., brought a declaratory judgment action against the Yellowstone County Board of Commissioners. Cenex, for the first time on appeal, raised an objection to the District Court's order that it pay the Board $852.75 in costs. The Supreme Court noted that while it generally does not address issues raised for the first time on appeal, the failure of the Board to file a bill of costs pursuant to this section deprived Cenex of its opportunity to object to the taxation of costs before the District Court. The Supreme Court therefore determined that Cenex cannot be considered to have waived its right to appeal the taxation of costs and held that the Board's failure to file the bill of costs constituted a waiver of its right to recover costs from Cenex. Cenex, Inc. v. Yellowstone County Bd. of Comm'rs, 283 M 330, 941 P2d 964, 54 St. Rep. 695 (1997).

Cost of Copy of Deposition, Original of Which Was Paid for by Other Party: The cost of a copy of a doctor's deposition obtained by plaintiff's counsel was properly awarded as a cost to be paid by defendant. The deposition was a practical necessity to prepare for trial and was read at trial. The inclusion as a cost was proper, even though the cost of the original transcript of the deposition was paid for by defendant. Liedle v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 283 M 129, 938 P2d 1379, 54 St. Rep. 528 (1997).

Taxation of Costs in Offer of Judgment — Disallowance of Deposition Expenses: Fisher sought to recover the costs of depositions taken in a case that was settled by offer of judgment pursuant to former Rule 68, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), contending that costs should be allowable because they were necessary for the prosecution of the claim, even though it did not proceed to trial. Applying the definition of "costs" in this section, the Supreme Court noted that costs for depositions are allowed in only limited circumstances when the depositions are relied upon by the trial court or used in a trial setting. The court found that in the present case, acceptance of the offer of judgment averted a trial and that as a result, the depositions were not used as evidence, for purposes of impeachment, or in deciding a dispositive summary judgment motion. Denial of Fisher's request to recover deposition costs was proper. Fisher v. St. Farm Ins. Co., 281 M 236, 934 P2d 163, 54 St. Rep. 151 (1997), followed in Valeo v. Tabish, 1999 MT 146, 295 M 34, 983 P2d 334, 56 St. Rep. 579 (1999), and Idaho Asphalt Supply v. Dept. of Transportation, 2001 MT 27, 304 M 157, 18 P3d 1018 (2001).

Statute Not Applicable to Workers' Compensation Cases: Kloepfer appealed the Workers' Compensation Court's denial of her claim for $750 as cost for an expert medical witness. The Supreme Court held that this section does not apply to workers' compensation cases and that Kloepfer was entitled to recover her costs. Kloepfer v. Lumbermens Mut. Cas. Co., 272 M 78, 899 P2d 1081, 52 St. Rep. 663 (1995), overruling, as to the applicability of this section to workers' compensation cases, Baeta v. Don Tripp Trucking, 254 M 487, 839 P2d 566 (1992), and Stevens v. St. Fund, 268 M 460, 886 P2d 962 (1994).

Costs of Filed Depositions Recoverable: Expenses for taking depositions that are not used at trial and that are for the convenience of counsel are not recoverable costs. Expenses incurred in taking depositions that are filed with the District Court and that are used at trial are not for the convenience of the litigant and thus constitute recoverable costs under former Rule 30(h)(5), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Gilluly v. Miller, 270 M 272, 891 P2d 1147, 52 St. Rep. 178 (1995).

Costs for Workers' Compensation Investigator Properly Denied: Absent statutory authority or an applicable rule of court, the Workers' Compensation Court did not err in denying an award for the costs of hiring a private investigator to investigate a fraud claim related to a denial of benefits case because it was not within the course and practice of the court to make such an award and the parties did not stipulate to an award of those costs. Stevens v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 268 M 460, 886 P2d 962, 51 St. Rep. 1396 (1994), overruled, as to the applicability of this section to workers' compensation cases, by Kloepfer v. Lumbermens Mut. Cas. Co., 272 M 78, 899 P2d 1081, 52 St. Rep. 663 (1995).

Expenses of Investigation Not Recoverable as Costs — Exception for Money Paid by Undercover Agents: Defendants Richard and David Fertterer were convicted of felony criminal mischief for illegally killing game. They contended on appeal that they could not be required to pay the costs of the investigation incurred by the state prior to the filing of the information. Citing Masanovich v. School District No. 1, 178 M 138, 582 P2d 1234 (1978), and St. v. Haynes, 633 P2d 38 (Oreg. App. 1981), the Supreme Court held that the costs of investigation were not recoverable because there was no statutory authority for the charge, as there is for other costs. However, the court made an exception, recognized in another Oregon case, for money paid directly to defendants by undercover agents. In this case, the state was allowed to recover guide service fees and other expenses paid to the Fertterers. St. v. Fertterer, 255 M 73, 841 P2d 467, 49 St. Rep. 846 (1992).

Costs Limited to Those Incurred in Constructing Exhibits Admitted at Trial: The lower court awarded costs to the plaintiff for expenses incurred for videotape depositions, photographic exhibits, telephone calls, and expert witnesses' airfare and hotel bills. The Supreme Court held that only expenses expended on exhibits admitted at trial may be taxed to the losing party. The court specified that telephone calls, airfare, hotel bills, rental car expenses, and other incidental costs incurred in obtaining depositions are not recoverable. Thayer v. Hicks, 243 M 138, 793 P2d 784, 47 St. Rep. 1082 (1990), followed in Valeo v. Tabish, 1999 MT 146, 295 M 34, 983 P2d 334, 56 St. Rep. 579 (1999).

Cost of Photographs Used as Evidence — Not Necessary Expense: It is in the discretion of trial courts to permit jurors to view an accident site under consideration. Therefore, when the court denied a motion to allow viewing of the premises and the parties instead introduced photographic evidence of the site, the photographs were not a necessary expense within the meaning of this section. McGinley v. Ole's Country Stores, Inc., 241 M 248, 786 P2d 1156, 47 St. Rep. 181 (1990).

Recovery of Costs by Prevailing Party for Depositions Used at Trial: Costs may be allowed by the District Court against a losing party only for depositions used as evidence at the trial or for impeachment purposes during the trial. Semenza v. Leitzke, 232 M 15, 754 P2d 509, 45 St. Rep. 829 (1988), followed in McGinley v. Ole's Country Stores, Inc., 241 M 248, 786 P2d 1156, 47 St. Rep. 181 (1990).

Costs Allowed for Preparation of Maps, Surveys: The cost of preparation of maps and surveys is allowed when necessary to the jury's understanding of the facts in issue. Funk v. Robbin, 212 M 437, 689 P2d 1215, 41 St. Rep. 1848 (1984), followed in Goodover v. Lindey's Inc., 255 M 430, 843 P2d 765, 49 St. Rep. 1059 (1992). See also Larsen v. Richardson, 2011 MT 195, 361 Mont. 344, 260 P.3d 103.

Interest and Expenses Allowable: Plaintiff entered a buy-sell to purchase defendants' ranch. One of his major considerations was gaining investment tax credits. Defendants refused to perform, and plaintiff filed a breach of contract action. The District Court found for plaintiff and awarded him prejudgment interest at 10% on his state and federal income tax obligation, the earnest money, and his capital expenditures on the ranch. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that interest on the earnest money was all that should be allowed as prejudgment interest under 27-1-211. Prejudgment interest should be 6% under 31-1-106. Interest should then be allowed on the judgment according to 27-1-211 at the amount of 10% under 25-9-205. The expenses that are allowable to a plaintiff are found in 25-10-201, and 25-10-101 outlines when costs are allowed. The cost of depositions not used during trial is not allowed. Various travel expenditures would not have been chargeable to defendants if the contract had been performed. The portion of capital expenditures allowed should be only the loss plaintiff suffered as a result of expenditures from the time of signing the buy-sell to the time of breach. Ehly v. Cady, 212 M 82, 687 P2d 687, 41 St. Rep. 1611 (1984).

Broad Discretion for Taxing Costs: Defendant claimed that the trial court erred in awarding costs of two depositions and certain photographs to plaintiff. Deposition costs are allowable where the deposition is used at trial. The depositions in question were used to impeach witnesses; therefore, the costs were recoverable. As to the photographs, under this section, the trial court's broad authority for taxing costs permitted the taxing of the photography expense. Cash v. Otis Elevator Co., 210 M 319, 684 P2d 1041, 41 St. Rep. 1077 (1984), followed in Kearney v. KXLF Communications, Inc., 263 M 407, 869 P2d 772, 51 St. Rep. 119 (1994), and Daines v. Knight, 269 M 320, 888 P2d 904, 52 St. Rep. 8 (1995).

Contract Provision for Costs Enforced: Award of costs to defendant in action for breach of contract in which defendant counterclaimed would be affirmed where the contract expressly provided for costs in the event of a suit and plaintiff claimed error in the award but failed to present specific objections. Schmidt v. Colonial Terrace Associates, 202 M 46, 656 P2d 807, 39 St. Rep. 2318 (1982).

Cost Proper: Cost of filing fees, entry of judgment, depositions, stenographer's fee, and witness fees were proper costs allowed under 25-10-201. Miller v. Watkins, 200 M 455, 653 P2d 126, 39 St. Rep. 1867 (1982).

Mandamus — Litigation Expenses Awardable: In a prior decision, this case was remanded for a hearing on attorney fees. The District Court awarded fees, and plaintiffs appealed. Plaintiffs contended the District Court erred in refusing to award as damages, under 27-26-402, certain out-of-pocket litigation expenses. The District Court concluded that 27-26-402 does not contemplate the awarding of litigation expenses not itemized in 25-10-201. "Damages" is defined in 27-1-202, and "detriment" is defined in 27-1-201. The detriment suffered by plaintiffs with regard to these litigation expenses was caused by the Department of State Lands' (functions now transferred to Department of Environmental Quality) failure to perform a clear legal duty. Plaintiffs are entitled to be compensated for the reasonable litigation expenses related to the mandamus issue regardless of whether those expenses are awardable as "costs" within the meaning of 25-10-201. Kadillak v. Dept. of State Lands, 198 M 70, 643 P2d 1178, 39 St. Rep. 773 (1982).

Payment Out of "Common Fund": Private organization that won suit seeking to have state barred from denying certain state aid money to high school district was, under the "common fund" doctrine, entitled to recover attorney fees and costs from the common fund, that is, from the state aid money ordered to be paid. Under the common fund doctrine, if a party, through active litigation, creates or increases a fund, others sharing in the fund must bear a portion of the litigation costs, including reasonable attorney fees. Missoula High School Legal Defense Ass'n v. Supt. of Pub. Instruction, 196 M 106, 637 P2d 1188, 38 St. Rep. 2164 (1981).

Prima Facie Case for Costs: Verified memorandum of costs and disbursements of plaintiffs was prima facie evidence that the funds were necessarily expended and properly taxable to defendant unless, as a matter of law, they appeared otherwise on the face. Defendant had the burden of overcoming the prima facie case, and the award of costs was affirmed where defendant failed to carry its burden of showing the items of cost were not reasonable and necessary as found by the trial court. Swenson v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 141, 635 P2d 978, 38 St. Rep. 1588 (1981).

Deposition of Witness — Partial Transcript of Trial: A deposition taken solely for a party's own convenience cannot be charged to the other party as part of the costs. Here, however, a copy was furnished to the other party and the other party used it at trial. The cost of the deposition is therefore properly includable in costs. A party cannot order a partial transcript of the trial for use at the trial and then charge it to the other party as part of the costs. Morrison-Maierle, Inc. v. Selsco, 186 M 180, 606 P2d 1085 (1980). See also Frigon v. Morrison-Maierle, Inc., 233 M 113, 760 P2d 57, 45 St. Rep. 1344 (1988), and Harrison v. Chance, 244 M 215, 797 P2d 200, 47 St. Rep. 1539 (1990).

Costs Allowed for Documents "Used in the Action": Since there is a distinction between documents used "in the action" and those used "on trial", the costs of preparation, filing, recording, and copying are allowable costs under this section if the court determines the documents were "necessarily used in the action", even if not introduced at trial. Luppold v. Lewis, 172 M 280, 563 P2d 538 (1977).

Expenses of Deposition for Defendant's Own Benefit Not Recoverable as Cost: Cost to defendant of taking plaintiff's depositions for convenience of defendant's counsel could not be included in bill of costs where never filed with the court and plaintiff had no practical means of securing a copy; it was obviously a discovery deposition for defendant's own benefit. Lovely v. Burroughs Corp., 165 M 209, 527 P2d 557 (1974); Johnson v. Furgeson, 158 M 170, 489 P2d 1032 (1971).

Depositions for Benefit of Parties — Expense Recoverable as Cost: In action contesting assessment of net proceeds tax of mining industry, Board of Equalization was properly assessed costs of contestant's expense of taking deposition of secretary of Board of Equalization where contestant prevailed and deposition was for the benefit of the court and both parties, having been introduced into evidence by agreement of both parties. Pfizer, Inc. v. Madison County, 161 M 261, 505 P2d 399 (1973).

Deposition Expenses Not Taxable as Costs: The cost of taking a party's deposition for himself is not properly taxable as costs against the other party. Davis v. Trobough, 139 M 322, 363 P2d 727 (1961); Isman v. Altenbrand, 42 M 188, 111 P 849 (1910).

Expense of Map as Cost — Burden of Proof: Where a map of the premises in question is reasonably necessary to explain the situation, the reasonable cost of making the map may be taxed as a cost. The original verified memorandum of the cost of the map is prima facie evidence that the amount charged was necessarily expended; and the burden is on the party objecting to the taxation thereof to overcome the same. Perkins v. Stephens, 131 M 138, 308 P2d 620 (1957); Kelly v. Butte, 44 M 115, 119 P 171 (1911).

Photographs Not "Necessary" Expense: Particular photographs were not "necessary expenses" within the meaning of the wording of this section. Broberg v. N. Pac. Ry., 120 M 280, 182 P2d 851 (1947).

Costs as Incidental Damages: Costs are said to be in the nature of incidental damages allowed to the successful party to indemnify him against the expense of asserting his rights in court, when the necessity for so doing was caused by the other's breach of a legal duty. Luebben v. Metlen, 110 M 350, 100 P2d 935 (1940).

Typewritten Brief as "Other Reasonable and Necessary Expense": Although not specifically allowable under this section, the expense of preparation of typewritten brief was properly recoverable as costs under provision "such other reasonable and necessary expenses as are taxable according to the course and practice of the court". Gahagan v. Gugler, 103 M 521, 63 P2d 145 (1936).

Physical Examination Expenses Not Costs: The costs of a doctor's examination and report of an injured workman's physical condition are not proper costs in an action to recover under the Workmen's Compensation Act. Lunardello v. Republic Coal Co., 101 M 94, 53 P2d 87 (1935), explained in Gahagan v. Gugler, 103 M 521, 63 P2d 145 (1936).

Expense of Jury View of Scene Not Taxable as Costs: In an action to impose upon a railroad company the duty of paying for livestock killed on its track, the expense of taking the jury out to view the scene of the occurrence is not taxable as costs, in the absence of a custom or rule of court authorizing it. Dewell v. N. Pac. Ry., 54 M 350, 170 P 753 (1918).

Appeal Costs Taxable: Only such items of disbursements as are provided by this section may be recovered by the successful party. Disbursements necessarily made to secure the review of a case are a part of the costs taxable. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co. v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 33 M 400, 84 P 706 (1905).

Adverse Mining Claim — Survey and Abstract Not Costs: Disbursements for filing an adverse claim to a mining location in the land office for surveying, the making of a plat, and for an abstract of title for use in the land office were not taxable as costs under this section. Mares v. Dillon, 30 M 144, 75 P 969 (1904).

Survey Expenses: A finding that an inspection and survey was necessary to enable a party to properly present his case was an adjudication of costs attendant on procuring the order for the survey. King v. Allen, 29 M 5, 73 P 1107 (1903).

Adverse Mining Claim — Expenses of Models and Surveys Not Costs: Expenses paid for models, surveys, and for development work done in preparation for trial of an action to determine adverse claims to mining property cannot be taxed as costs. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co. v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 27 M 288, 70 P 1114 (1902), distinguished in Perkins v. Stephens, 131 M 138, 308 P2d 620 (1957).

Expenses of Judgment, Minute Entries, and Transcript as Costs: On the dismissal, at cost of relator, of a writ to review an order in a contempt proceeding, defendant is entitled to the fee paid by him for the judgment and minute entries included in his return and the expense of making the transcript, excepting certain pages consisting merely of recitals by defendant. State ex rel. Healy v. District Court, 26 M 224, 67 P 114, 68 P 470 (1902). See also In re Boyle, 26 M 365, 68 P 409 (1902).

STATUTORY BASIS FOR COSTS

Reciprocal Attorney Fees and Costs Under Loan Guaranty: A loan guaranty provided that the guarantor would pay costs and expenses incurred in connection with enforcement of the guaranty. After holding for the defendant guarantors, the trial court awarded witness fees and litigation costs to defendants, and the plaintiff bank appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Contractual attorney fees and costs provisions are reciprocal under 28-3-704, so the award to defendants was not in error. First Citizens Bank v. Sullivan, 2008 MT 428, 347 M 452, 200 P3d 39 (2008).

Successful Wage Claimant Entitled to All Costs Under Different Statute: Billings firefighters prevailed in their claim against the city for wages for all hours worked and for leave time and requested costs of $60,154.72. Pursuant to 25-10-201, the District Court limited recovery of costs to filing and service fees, postage, photocopies, and long-distance telephone calls and awarded $3,972.98. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that 25-10-201 applies an exclusive list of costs that may be taxed to an opponent unless the case is taken out of its operation by a more specialized statute, by stipulation of the parties, or by court rule. A wage claim case is covered by 39-3-214, a more specialized statute that requires an award of all costs reasonably incurred with the proceeding, so 25-10-201 did not apply. Thus, the case was remanded for an award of all reasonable costs incurred in the litigation pursuant to 39-3-214. Kuhr v. Billings, 2007 MT 201, 338 M 402, 168 P3d 615 (2007), distinguishing Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818 (1999).

Granting Witness Air Fare Costs Following Appeal: The filing of a notice of appeal did not deprive the District Court of jurisdiction to grant a pending bill for costs. However, the court properly disallowed as a cost the air fares for witnesses. Powers Mfg. Co. v. Leon Jacobs Enterprises, 216 M 407, 701 P2d 1377, 42 St. Rep. 906 (1985).

Mandamus — Litigation Expenses Awardable: In a prior decision, this case was remanded for a hearing on attorney fees. The District Court awarded fees, and plaintiffs appealed. Plaintiffs contended the District Court erred in refusing to award as damages, under 27-26-402, certain out-of-pocket litigation expenses. The District Court concluded that 27-26-402 does not contemplate the awarding of litigation expenses not itemized in 25-10-201. "Damages" is defined in 27-1-202, and "detriment" is defined in 27-1-201. The detriment suffered by plaintiffs with regard to these litigation expenses was caused by the Department of State Lands' (functions now transferred to Department of Environmental Quality) failure to perform a clear legal duty. Plaintiffs are entitled to be compensated for the reasonable litigation expenses related to the mandamus issue regardless of whether those expenses are awardable as "costs" within the meaning of 25-10-201. Kadillak v. Dept. of State Lands, 198 M 70, 643 P2d 1178, 39 St. Rep. 773 (1982).

Special Statute, Stipulation, or Rule: The list of items under this section is exclusive in respect to allowable costs except as to cases taken out of its operation by special statute, by stipulation of the parties, or by rule of court. Roseneau Foods, Inc. v. Coleman, 140 M 572, 374 P2d 87 (1962).

Disbursements to Be Covered by Statute: No item of disbursements may be recovered by successful party that does not come within the statute. Broberg v. N. Pac. Ry., 120 M 280, 182 P2d 851 (1947).

Section Exclusive: This section is exclusive except insofar as certain cases are taken out of its operation by special statutes. Gahagan v. Gugler, 100 M 599, 52 P2d 150 (1935).

ATTORNEY FEES

Entirety of Litigation to Be Considered to Determine Whether Insured Forced to Assume Burden of Legal Action: The plaintiff was involved in a collision with another driver who admitted liability for the accident and for the plaintiff's resulting injuries. The plaintiff recovered the policy limit from the other driver but sought underinsured motorist coverage from her insurer. Ultimately, the plaintiff filed an action against her insurer for amounts due under her policy. After a jury verdict in her favor, the plaintiff moved for nontaxable costs and attorney fees, which the District Court denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that while the "insurance exception" to the American rule on the recovery of attorney fees may apply when the insurer forces the insured to assume the burden of legal action to obtain the full benefit of the insurance contract, the District Court failed to make any factual findings that considered both parties' actions during the entire process leading up to the resolution of the claim. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court's order and remanded for further proceedings. Mlekush v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2015 MT 302, 381 Mont. 292, 358 P.3d 913.

Attorney Fees Properly Awarded — Exception to American Rule Appropriate: The District Court awarded the defendants attorney fees following summary judgment denying the plaintiffs' claims of an express easement over the defendants' property. The plaintiffs argued that attorney fees should not have been awarded since their proposed amended complaint would have cured all procedural and pleading defects. However, since the request to amend was sought nearly a year and a half after the original complaint was filed and following the defendants' request for summary judgment, the District Court denied the request and awarded attorney fees to the plaintiffs. The Supreme Court affirmed the award on appeal, holding that the equitable exception to the American rule for attorney fees applied since the defendants failed to offer a reasonable explanation for why they litigated a meritless legal theory for nearly a year and a half. Bardsley v. Pluger, 2015 MT 301, 381 Mont. 284, 358 P.3d 907, following, Motta v. Granite County Comm'rs, 2013 MT 172, 370 Mont. 469, 304 P.3d 720.

Attorney Fees — Rates for Kalispell Attorneys Working in Lincoln County Properly Awarded: The plaintiff sued Lincoln County and several of its Commissioners regarding the resignation and appointment process for Commissioners. After the District Court granted summary judgment to the defendants, they requested and were awarded attorney fees. The plaintiff claimed that the District Court had erred in awarding fees for rates for attorneys from Kalispell instead of rates for an attorney from Lincoln County. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the award of attorney fees at the hourly rate of the Kalispell attorneys, agreeing that it was reasonable for them to perform work in Lincoln County. Swapinski v. Lincoln County, 2015 MT 275, 381 Mont. 138, 357 P.3d 329.

Fees-for-Fees Improper Absent Exceptional Circumstances — Fee Award Vacated to Remove Additional Fees: The plaintiff sued Lincoln County and several of its Commissioners regarding the resignation and appointment process for Commissioners. After the District Court granted summary judgment to the defendants, they requested and were awarded attorney fees. The plaintiff opposed the award of fees, and the District Court held a hearing on the amount of the fees, awarding the defendants additional attorney fees for proving the reasonableness of the underlying fee award. On appeal, the Supreme Court vacated the fee award, holding that no exceptional circumstances warranted the additional fees. Swapinski v. Lincoln County, 2015 MT 275, 381 Mont. 138, 357 P.3d 329.

Violation of Open Meeting Laws — Attorney Fees Awarded — Prevailing Party Despite No Final Judgment: The plaintiffs sued the Fish, Wildlife, and Parks Commission for not providing adequate notice of a meeting at which the Commission voted to expedite the closing of the wolf hunting season. The District Court granted a temporary restraining order and ultimately awarded attorney fees. During litigation, the Legislature enacted a law prohibiting the Commission from implementing certain hunting closures, rendering the litigation moot. On appeal, the Commission argued that attorney fees were not appropriate because a final judgment was never issued. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that the plaintiffs were a prevailing party because the preliminary injunction produced the same result as a final judgment and there was no remaining underlying controversy to litigate. Citizens for Balanced Use v. Fish, Wildlife & Parks Comm'n, 2014 MT 214, 376 Mont. 202, 331 P.3d 844.

Fees Incurred in Determining Attorney Fees Excluded From Award: The plaintiffs sued the subdivision property owners over amendments to the covenants. The District Court then ruled against the remaining defendant and awarded attorney fees, including fees the plaintiffs incurred in determining the amount of fees incurred. The Supreme Court remanded and held that the fees incurred in establishing the reasonable amount of fees should be excluded from the award. Houden v. Todd, 2014 MT 113, 375 Mont. 1, 324 P.3d 1157.

Award Based On Hourly Fee Upheld Even Though Defendants Signed Contingency Agreement — Fee Amount Within District Court's Discretion: The defendants prevailed on a counterclaim for specific performance under a lease that included an option to purchase the land. At the hearing on attorney fees, the defendants provided testimony that they had signed a contingent fee agreement and that the $585,966 in attorney fees claimed was based on the contingent share of the fair market value of the land minus the lease's purchase option price for the land. The District Court rejected the total fee claim as unreasonable and instead awarded attorney fees on an hourly basis in the amount of $98,431. The defendants cross-appealed the District Court's action, but the Supreme Court denied the claim. Concluding that the District Court had properly assessed the reasonableness of the claim based on the factors outlined in Plath v. Schonrock, 2003 MT 21, 314 Mont. 101, 64 P.3d 984, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion and therefore upheld the hourly award. Shephard v. Widhalm, 2012 MT 276, 367 Mont. 166, 290 P.3d 712.

Failure to Hold Hearing Before Award of Sanctions — Remand: The District Court awarded attorney fees and costs against plaintiff for bringing a frivolous suit. However, the court did not adequately set forth its findings and conclusions or set forth its reasons for an award of fees, nor did the court hold a hearing before granting sanctions as required in former Rule 11, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Thus, the case was remanded for a hearing and for further proceedings on the reasonableness of attorney fees and costs. Good Schools Missoula, Inc. v. Missoula County Pub. School Dist. No. 1, 2008 MT 231, 344 M 374, 188 P3d 1013 (2008), following Glaspey v. Workman, 234 M 374, 763 P2d 666 (1988), Chase v. Bearpaw Ranch Ass'n, 2006 MT 67, 331 M 421, 133 P3d 190 (2006), and Byrum v. Andren, 2007 MT 107, 337 M 167, 159 P3d 1062 (2007).

Common Fund Not Created by Stavenjord I — No Recovery of Attorney Fees From Nonparticipating Claimants: On remand to the Workers' Compensation Court of Stavenjord v. Mont. St. Fund, 2003 MT 67, 314 M 466, 67 P3d 229 (2003) (Stavenjord I), the State Fund paid Stavenjord's additional benefits, and Stavenjord then sought recovery of common fund attorney fees for Stavenjord-type benefits secured by nonparticipating claimants. The Workers' Compensation Court concluded that Stavenjord I created a common fund and that Stavenjord's counsel was entitled to collect common fund fees from nonparticipating claimants who benefited from Stavenjord I. On appeal, the Supreme Court disagreed. Applying the elements of a common fund set out in Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Hall, 2001 MT 314, 308 M 29, 38 P3d 825 (2001), the court determined that Stavenjord I did not create an identifiable monetary fund or benefit, so the first element in creation of a common fund was not satisfied and Stavenjord's counsel was not entitled to collect common fund fees from nonparticipating claimants. The case was remanded to the Workers' Compensation Court for a determination of an appropriate procedure by which potential Stavenjord beneficiaries would be identified and notified of their interests related to increased Stavenjord-type benefits. Stavenjord v. Mont. St. Fund, 2006 MT 257, 334 M 117, 146 P3d 724 (2006).

Federal Claims Against City Council Members Acting in Individual Capacities — No Attorney Fees for Prevailing City Council Members: In a federal suit based on 42 U.S.C. 1983, plaintiff sued City Council members in their individual capacities. The District Court held that plaintiff should have known that 2-9-305(5) shielded the City Council members from suit, summarily dismissed plaintiff's claim, and awarded the City Council members' attorney fees pursuant to the frivolous claim provisions of 42 U.S.C. 1988. On appeal, plaintiff relied on Martinez v. Calif., 444 US 277 (1980), and Miller v. Red Lodge, 2003 MT 44, 314 M 278, 65 P3d 562 (2003) (citing Reisdorff v. Yellowstone County, 1999 MT 280, 296 M 525, 989 P2d 850 (1999)), for the proposition that state law cannot immunize federal claims. The Supreme Court distinguished those cases as too broad a recitation of the immunity proposition, citing instead Felder v. Casey, 487 US 131 (1988), for the holding that when state courts entertain a federally created cause of action, the federal right cannot be defeated by the forms of local practice and that any assessment of the applicability of state law to federal civil rights litigation must be made in light of the purpose and nature of the federal right. The main objective of 42 U.S.C. 1983 is to ensure that individuals who have suffered a deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights are afforded relief through damages or injunction. Although affording immunity to the City Council members would not have thwarted the objective of the federal law, the Supreme Court nevertheless declined to conclude that plaintiff should have known that 2-9-305(5) shielded the City Council members from suit or to consider as unreasonable plaintiff's federal claims against the City Council members in their individual capacities. Plaintiff's claim was therefore not frivolous, and the City Council members were not entitled to attorney fees pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 1988. Germann v. Stephens, 2006 MT 130, 332 M 303, 137 P3d 545 (2006), clarifying Kiely Constr. v. Red Lodge, 2002 MT 241, 312 M 52, 57 P3d 836 (2002).

Attorney Fees Through Fee-Shifting, but Limited Fees-for-Fees, Recoverable for Defendants Under Declaration of Covenants: A declaration of covenants provided that the applicant for relief was entitled to recover attorney fees in any action for enforcement of the covenants. Plaintiffs applied for relief, but defendants were granted summary judgment and sought attorney fees. Plaintiffs contended that defendants were not allowed attorney fees under the declaration because defendants were not the applicant for relief. However, 28-3-704 renders contractual fee-shifting provisions reciprocal, so as the prevailing party, defendants were entitled to reasonable attorney fees, including fees-for-fees to the extent that attorney fees were incurred in establishing defendants' entitlement to fees under the contract. Defendants' claim for attorney fees for fees incurred in establishing the amount of attorney fees was not compensable under the contract, and the District Court erred in awarding attorney fees to defendants incurred in establishing the amount of fees. In addition, the court erred in awarding defendants' attorney fees incurred in securing the withdrawal of plaintiffs' attorney because of a conflict of interest because that cost was not a necessary expense of enforcement of the declaration. Because the District Court erred by awarding defendants all legal costs without making an effort to ascertain the specific source of the costs, the issue was remanded for a proper determination of fees, particularly fees-for-fees, that defendants could recover. Chase v. Bearpaw Ranch Ass'n, 2006 MT 67, 331 M 421, 133 P3d 190 (2006).

Hearing Not Required Before Decision Made to Award Attorney Fees: Plaintiffs contended that because the District Court awarded but did not hold a hearing to set a specific amount for attorney fees within 60 days after granting summary judgment to defendants, the court lost jurisdiction to amend the judgment to award attorney fees. The Supreme Court noted that there is a distinction between a court's decision to award attorney fees and a court's determination of the proper measure of fees. An evidentiary hearing must be held before attorney fees may be awarded in any specific amount, but a hearing need not be held before a court may decide to award attorney fees. Thus, 51 days after defendants filed their motion, the District Court had authority to grant defendant's request for attorney fees. Chase v. Bearpaw Ranch Ass'n, 2006 MT 67, 331 M 421, 133 P3d 190 (2006), following Plath v. Schonrock, 2003 MT 21, 314 M 101, 64 P3d 984 (2003). See also Assoc. Press v. Crofts, 2004 MT 120, 321 M 193, 89 P3d 971 (2004), and In re Estate of Burrell, 2010 MT 280, 358 Mont. 460, 245 P.3d 1106.

No Equitable Exception to American Rule for Parties Forced to Bring Suit to Determine Legal Rights Against Party Presenting Frivolous Defense in Bad Faith: Plaintiffs in a forcible detainer action contended that they should be granted attorney fees as an exception to the American Rule that a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory grant of those fees because plaintiffs were forced to bring a lawsuit to determine their legal property rights against a defendant who presented a frivolous defense asserted in bad faith. The District Court declined to award attorney fees, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that a malicious or bad faith equitable exception to the American Rule has consistently been denied and that the exception in Langemeier v. Kuehl, 2001 MT 306, 307 M 499, 40 P3d 343 (2001), did not apply. Harding v. Savoy, 2004 MT 280, 323 M 261, 100 P3d 976 (2004).

Attorney Fees Proper to Defend Untimely and Inappropriate Nonmeritorious Action: An award of attorney fees to plaintiff was within the District Court's discretion when plaintiff, as a wholly innocent party, was forced to employ counsel to defend a nonmeritorious motion that was both untimely and inappropriate. Connell v. Dept. of Social and Rehabilitation Services, 2003 MT 361, 319 M 69, 81 P3d 1279 (2003), following Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114 (1978). Common Fund Doctrine Equitable Exception to American Rule Regarding Award of Attorney Fees Applicable to Medical Services Lien — Elements of Doctrine: Kilmer suffered severe injuries as a passenger in a vehicle driven by Hall. Kilmer received medical attention from a North Dakota hospital, which subsequently perfected a lien for the value of its services in the amount of $309,000. Hall had no insurance, but the co-owner of the vehicle had a $500,000 policy with Mountain West Farm Bureau (Mountain West). The policy had a step-down provision limiting Mountain West's liability to $25,000 for passengers other than the insured or a relative of the insured, so Mountain West initially found that Kilmer was entitled to only $25,000. However, after negotiating with Kilmer's attorney, Mountain West agreed to proffer the policy limit of $500,000, plus $30,000 in no-fault coverage. Mountain West then filed a complaint for interpleader, the hospital cross-claimed against Kilmer for satisfaction of its lien, and Kilmer cross-claimed against the hospital for a reduction in the hospital's recovery for a pro rata portion of Kilmer's attorney fees incurred in negotiating the settlement with Mountain West. The District Court applied Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont. v. Nichols, 157 M 106, 483 P2d 279 (1971), and held that the hospital was not liable for a pro rata portion of Kilmer's attorney fees. Kilmer appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Under the 1999 version of 71-3-1114 applicable to this case, the hospital had a valid lien for its medical services; however, the statute was silent on the issue of attorney fee apportionment (see, however, 2001 amendments addressing a hospital's pro rata liability for an injured person's attorney fees). Generally, Montana follows the American rule that a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory grant of those fees. There are exceptions to the American rule, one of which is the common fund doctrine authorizing the spread of fees among the individuals who benefit from the litigation that created the common fund. The three elements necessary to establish a common fund, as set out in Means v. Mont. Power Co., 191 M 395, 625 P2d 32 (1981), and Murer v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 283 M 210, 942 P2d 69 (1997), are: (1) one party, known as the active beneficiary, must create, reserve, or increase a common fund; (2) the active beneficiary must incur legal fees in establishing the common fund; and (3) the common fund must benefit ascertainable, nonparticipating beneficiaries. To the extent that there are inequities in the contributions of participating counsel, the court may then intervene to allocate fees accordingly. Because the common fund doctrine was not raised in Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont. v. Nichols, the Supreme Court held that that case did not preclude application of the doctrine in the present case. Thus, the District Court erred as a matter of law in relying on Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont. v. Nichols to grant the hospital's partial summary judgment. Although the Supreme Court declined to rule on the applicability of the common fund doctrine here because the parties did not present arguments in District Court as to whether Kilmer could satisfy the elements of the doctrine, the case was remanded to allow Kilmer to present arguments on the applicability of the common fund doctrine. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Hall, 2001 MT 314, 308 M 29, 38 P3d 825 (2001).

When Recovery of Deposition Expenses Allowed — Use of Deposition at Trial Required: The Bings argued that their costs associated with deposing Mularoni were associated with expenses related to a motion to compel discovery and were thus recoverable under former Rule 37(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The District Court declined to award deposition costs, and the Bings appealed. Pursuant to this section, a party to whom costs are awarded is entitled to include the costs of taking depositions. However, the Supreme Court has allowed deposition costs only in limited circumstances—when the deposition was relied on by the District Court or used in a trial setting as evidence or for impeachment or when the deposition is filed with the District Court and used by the court in a dispositive summary judgment motion. Deposition costs are not allowed when the purpose of the deposition is merely to assist the requesting party in compiling its case and is taken only for the convenience of counsel. A deposition that is not used at trial is considered to be for the convenience of counsel. In the present case, the deposition was not used at trial, nor was it used by the District Court in its ruling on the motion to compel, which was not a dispositive motion. Thus, the District Court did not err in declining to award deposition costs to the Bings. Mularoni v. Bing, 2001 MT 215, 306 M 405, 34 P3d 497 (2001). See also Fisher v. St. Farm Ins. Co., 281 M 236, 934 P2d 163 (1997).

Prevailing Party on Ditch Easement Claim Entitled to Attorney Fees and Costs Despite Loss of Separate Counterclaim Related to Road Easement: Espy sued for easement interference related to an underground irrigation system. Quinlan filed a permissive counterclaim, alleging that Espy had interfered with Quinlan's road easement over Espy's property. Following trial, the District Court concluded that: (1) Espy was successful on his claim because he had a valid easement over Quinlan's property for use and maintenance of the irrigation system; (2) Quinlan was successful on her counterclaim because she had a valid road easement over Espy's property; (3) both parties were entitled to a permanent order restraining the other party from interfering with their respective easements; and (4) Espy was entitled to attorney fees and costs as the successful party under 70-17-112. Quinlan appealed the award of attorney fees, contending that because she prevailed on the counterclaim, neither party could be considered a prevailing party. However, Quinlan's counterclaim was not raised in the context of 70-17-112, but was instead related to a road easement. Because Espy successfully prevailed on all claims raised pursuant to 70-17-112, he was entitled to attorney fees and costs regardless of the fact that he was not the prevailing party on the counterclaim. Espy v. Quinlan, 2000 MT 193, 300 M 441, 4 P3d 1212, 57 St. Rep. 764 (2000), distinguishing Knudsen v. Taylor, 211 M 459, 685 P2d 354 (1984). See also Gibson v. Paramount Homes, LLC, 2011 MT 112, 360 Mont. 421, 253 P.3d 903.

Award of Attorney Fees Under Foy Equitable Exception Limited to Defense of Frivolous Action: Absent contractual or statutory authority, attorney fees will generally not be awarded, but a court may, under its equity powers and pursuant to Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114, 35 St. Rep. 811 (1978), award attorney fees to make an injured party whole. However, the Foy equitable exception applies only to situations in which a party has been forced to defend against a wholly frivolous or malicious action and is not available for a party that initiates a legal action. Further, parties bringing actions for injunctive relief to protect their own rights are not entitled to attorney fees under the Foy exception. Braach v. Graybeal, 1999 MT 234, 296 M 138, 988 P2d 761, 56 St. Rep. 919 (1999), distinguishing Wilson v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 199 M 189, 648 P2d 766, 39 St. Rep. 1294 (1982). See also Erker v. Kester, 1999 MT 231, 296 M 123, 988 P2d 1221, 56 St. Rep. 912 (1999), Harland v. Anderson Ranch Co., 2004 MT 132, 321 M 338, 92 P3d 1160 (2004), Pankratz Farms, Inc. v. Axmen Propane, Inc., 2009 MT 448, 354 M 208, 223 P3d 845 (2009), Boehm v. Cokedale, LLC, 2011 MT 224, 362 Mont. 65, 261 P.3d 994, and Motta v. Granite County Comm'rs, 2013 MT 172, 370 Mont. 469, 304 P.3d 720, allowing attorney fees but not fees incurred in determining attorney fees.

Bond for Costs on Appeal May Not Include Attorney Fees: When allowed by law, attorney fees that a party incurs on appeal may be recovered by that party if that party prevails on appeal. Section 39-2-915 provides that if a party in a wrongful discharge proceeding declines an offer to arbitrate and then loses in court, the party that offered to arbitrate is entitled to reasonable attorney fees incurred after the offer was made, including those incurred on appeal. However, for purposes of determining the amount of a bond or security under former Rule 6, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), a District Court may not include anticipated attorney fees for the future defense of an appeal as part of the anticipated costs on appeal. Moore v. Imperial Hotels Corp., 285 M 188, 948 P2d 211, 54 St. Rep. 1104 (1997).

Attorney Fees Improperly Granted — Injunction Held Unlike Mandamus for Purposes of Fees: Wittmers purchased a manufactured home and moved it to a subdivision in Gallatin County. Newmans and others brought an action to restrain Wittmers from maintaining the home in the subdivision in violation of a restrictive covenant prohibiting mobile homes. The District Court issued the injunction and also awarded Newmans their fees and costs. The Supreme Court held that attorney fees were improperly granted because even though fees are awardable in a mandamus action, the remedy of injunction is unlike the remedy of mandamus. For that reason, no analogy can be made to mandamus cases awarding fees. Newman v. Wittmer, 277 M 1, 917 P2d 926, 53 St. Rep. 516 (1996).

Contract Overcharge and Negligence Claims Barred by Res Judicata When Other Party Had Already Sued for Failure to Pay: A trucker obtained default judgment in Justice's Court for the failure of Greenwood to pay the full amount that the trucker charged for hauling cattle. Greenwood had claimed that the amount charged was more than agreed upon and refused to pay the difference. He also deducted an amount for the trucker's alleged injury to two steers. Greenwood's later District Court action alleging that the contract was void for an overcharge and alleging the negligent injury of the two steers was barred by res judicata. The Supreme Court also ruled that the case was not one of those rare ones in which a court could use its equitable powers to award attorney fees, which were requested by the trucker. Greenwood v. Steve Nelson Trucking, Inc., 270 M 216, 890 P2d 765, 52 St. Rep. 151 (1995).

Attorney Fees Not Awardable on Affidavit of Counsel — Hearing Required: Even though a contract may provide for the award of reasonable attorney fees, it is improper to award attorney fees solely on the affidavit of counsel without holding an evidentiary hearing on the matter. Stark v. Borner, 234 M 254, 762 P2d 857, 45 St. Rep. 1885 (1988), followed in Rothing v. Kallestad, 2007 MT 109, 337 M 193, 159 P3d 222 (2007).

Attorney Fees as Element of Compensatory Damages — Limited to Contingent Fee Agreement: Jury awarded appellant attorney fees as an element of compensatory damages and deferred to the District Court to assess appropriate attorney fees and costs. The court arrived at a sum based on a contingent fee agreement entered into by appellant and his attorney rather than using a lodestar determination based on reasonable hours expended times a reasonable hourly fee. Appellant contended on appeal that this was an incorrect method of calculation. The Supreme Court held that: (1) the provisions of the contingent fee agreement were controlling in computing the amount of attorney fees; (2) the contract fixed the damages appellant sustained; and (3) to allow appellant to recover attorney fees based on an hourly fee would change the issue from what amount would compensate him for actual damages he sustained in the form of attorney fees to what amount would reasonably compensate his attorney for services rendered. Morris v. Nationwide Ins. Co., 222 M 399, 722 P2d 628, 43 St. Rep. 1363 (1986).

Award of Attorney Fees by Judge Who Did Not Try Case — No Abuse of Discretion: Parties had 2 months following judgment and prior to a change in jurisdiction to bring the matter of attorney fees before the judge who presided over a lien foreclosure action. Neither side did, and jurisdiction of the action was transferred from the 13th to the 16th Judicial District. Defendant later claimed the new judge abused his discretion by awarding fees in a case he did not try because he could not know all of the circumstances surrounding the foreclosure action. The Supreme Court held that a judge's jurisdiction over a case is a matter of law and that while it is preferable that the presiding trial judge consider the matter of attorney fees, it is not mandatory. Finding no abuse of discretion, judgment was affirmed. Donnes v. Orlando, 221 M 356, 720 P2d 233, 43 St. Rep. 890 (1986).

Contempt Order — Costs Award Proper — Attorney Fees Award Improper: In reviewing a contempt order that arose out of a water rights dispute, the Supreme Court ruled that an award of costs to the irrigation district as the prevailing party was proper, but that an award of attorney fees to the district was not proper. The court reasoned that no applicable statute or contractual provision provided for attorney fees and that the case did not fit within the exceptions recognized in Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114, 35 St. Rep. 811 (1978). State ex rel. Foss v. District Court, 216 M 327, 701 P2d 342, 42 St. Rep. 845 (1985).

Attorney Fees Not Recoverable as Costs Under Offer of Judgment Rule: The "costs incurred" that may be awarded to an offeror under former Rule 68, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), do not include attorney fees. Schillinger v. Brewer, 215 M 333, 697 P2d 919, 42 St. Rep. 408 (1985). The general rule that costs do not include attorney fees was distinguished with regard to attorney fees chargeable as costs under 39-3-214 in a wage protection case, Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999).

No Explicit Authority for Award of Attorney Fees in Disqualification Action: As there is no provision in 3-1-802 that allows a judge to award attorney fees to a party or damages to a nonparty, such award is improper. Unless a statute provides explicitly for an award of attorney fees to the prevailing party, a court cannot make such an award. In re Marriage of Gahr, 212 M 481, 689 P2d 257, 41 St. Rep. 1879 (1984).

Attorney Fees Not Included — List Exclusive: Attorney fees are not included in the 25-10-201 list of recoverable costs. This list of items is exclusive except for cases taken out of its operation by special statute, by stipulation of parties, or by rule of court. Masonovich v. School District & Teachers' Local 332, 178 M 138, 582 P2d 1234 (1978), followed in Glaspey v. Workman, 234 M 374, 763 P2d 666, 45 St. Rep. 1983 (1988); Kintner v. Harr, 146 M 461, 408 P2d 487 (1965); In re Mickich's Estate, 114 M 258, 136 P2d 223 (1943).

Attorney Fees — Not Included in Costs: There was substantial evidence to support the findings of the lower court in regard to award of attorney fees at the trial level. Furthermore, the wife was not entitled to attorney fees on appeal since they are not included in costs recoverable by the prevailing party on appeal. Allen v. Allen, 175 M 527, 575 P2d 74 (1978).

Fees Not Excessive: Attorney fees that amounted to only about 10% of the judgment recovered were not excessive or wrongfully awarded. Haggerty v. Selsco, 166 M 492, 534 P2d 874 (1975).

Divorce Action — No Fees on Execution: Attorney fees are not included as costs under this section, so that if such costs in a divorce action were not allowed under section 21-137, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), the wife was not entitled to them on execution under 25-10-503. State ex rel. Sowerwine v. District Court, 145 M 375, 401 P2d 568 (1965).

Unlawful Detainer: In an action by a landlord for unlawful detainer attorney's fees are not recoverable as damages or costs. Roseneau Foods, Inc. v. Coleman, 140 M 572, 374 P2d 87 (1962).

Condemnation Action: Attorney's fees incurred in the defense of a condemnation proceeding for a private road of necessity under 70-30-107 are not recoverable as an expense of such action under this section or 25-10-301. Tomten v. Thomas, 125 M 159, 232 P2d 723 (1951), overruled in Callant v. Fed. Land Bank of Spokane, 181 M 400, 593 P2d 1036 (1979).

Special Statute — No Stipulation: This section, enumerating the items which may be recovered as costs in an ordinary action, is exclusive except as to cases taken out of its operation by special statute, and in the absence of such statute, stipulation of the parties or rule of court, attorney's fees are not so recoverable. McBride v. School District, 88 M 110, 290 P 252 (1930), distinguished in Britt v. Cotter Butte Mines, 108 M 174, 89 P2d 266 (1939).

No Pleading or Proof Required: In an action to recover wages due, the plaintiff, if successful, is entitled to a reasonable attorney's fee as a part of the costs under 39-3-214 without being required to either plead or prove such item. Gardiner v. Eclipse Grocery Co., 72 M 540, 234 P 490 (1925), explained in Britt v. Cotter Butte Mines, 108 M 174, 89 P2d 266 (1939).

Section Exclusive: Since this section is exclusive, except so far as certain cases are taken out of its operation by special statutes, and does not mention an attorney's fee as one of the items which may be recovered as costs in ordinary actions, it is not recoverable as costs, independently of rule of court or stipulation of parties. Bovee v. Helland, 52 M 151, 156 P 416 (1916).

Stipulation — Fees as Special Damages: A stipulation in a promissory note, allowing recovery of attorney's fees in case action has to be brought to enforce collection, is a provision for special damages, recoverable, in addition to the principal sum claimed, upon appropriate allegation and proof; it affords no basis for an item in the plaintiff's memorandum of costs. Bovee v. Helland, 52 M 151, 156 P 416 (1916), distinguished in In re Mickich's Estate, 114 M 258, 136 P2d 223 (1943).

WITNESS FEES

Statute Not Applicable to Workers' Compensation Cases: Kloepfer appealed the Workers' Compensation Court's denial of her claim for $750 as cost for an expert medical witness. The Supreme Court held that this section does not apply to workers' compensation cases and that Kloepfer was entitled to recover her costs. Kloepfer v. Lumbermens Mut. Cas. Co., 272 M 78, 899 P2d 1081, 52 St. Rep. 663 (1995), overruling, as to the applicability of this section to workers' compensation cases, Baeta v. Don Tripp Trucking, 254 M 487, 839 P2d 566 (1992), and Stevens v. St. Fund, 268 M 460, 886 P2d 962 (1994).

Witness Fees to Be Paid Only for Witnesses Actually Appearing at Trial: Kearney sued KXLF for wrongful discharge and for damages for uncompensated overtime. Witness fees of $20 were paid for John Mizelle and Pat Burns. However, the record showed that neither of them appeared at trial. The Supreme Court held that the purpose of subsection (1) of this section is to allow the prevailing party to tax fees paid to witnesses who actually appear at trial. The Supreme Court also noted that the District Court awarded costs for subpoenas served on Mizelle and Burns and on another witness who was neither listed nor called as a witness during trial. The Supreme Court held that it was error for the District Court to tax these costs. Kearney v. KXLF Communications, Inc., 263 M 407, 869 P2d 772, 51 St. Rep. 119 (1994).

Costs — Expert Witness Fees: A District Court cannot award costs in excess of $10 a day per witness as costs for expert witnesses. The statute specifically limiting expert witness fees to $10 a day controls the general statute authorizing a District Court to award costs in accordance with the course and practice of the court. Witty v. Pluid, 220 M 272, 714 P2d 169, 43 St. Rep. 354 (1986), followed in Goodover v. Lindey's Inc., 255 M 430, 843 P2d 765, 49 St. Rep. 1059 (1992).

Burden of Proof on Appeal: Where defendant objected to an item of awarded costs (witness fees), the ruling of the trial judge on the item did not indicate on which of two grounds it was based, and defendant's raising of questions was thus not sufficient to carry defendant's burden of showing the item was not reasonable and necessary, the Supreme Court could not say whether the item was properly allowed and must therefore sustain the trial court's ruling. Swenson v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 141, 635 P2d 978, 38 St. Rep. 1588 (1981).

Parties Not Served as Witnesses: Persons named as defendants but who were not served with process and did not enter an appearance were not parties to the action, so were entitled to per diem and mileage for attendance as witnesses. Nelson v. Mont. Iron Min. Co., 140 M 331, 371 P2d 874 (1962).

Failure to Make Affidavit: The mere fact that witnesses of defendant entitled to his costs on dismissal of an action as to him failed to observe a rule of court requiring witnesses to make affidavit of attendance showing the per diem and mileage to which they were entitled did not affect his right to recover his necessary disbursements to them. Patterson v. Law, 78 M 221, 254 P 412 (1927).

Per Diem While Waiting: A material witness who resided outside the county in which the case was tried at a distance greater than 30 miles and voluntarily attended the trial at the request of the prevailing party and who after his arrival on the day set for trial had to wait for about a week before he was required to testify, on account of congestion of court business, was entitled to per diem for the whole time he was in attendance and not only for the day on which he gave his testimony, as well as to mileage, the service of a subpoena not being a prerequisite to their allowance. Helena Adjustment Co. v. Claflin, 75 M 317, 243 P 1063 (1926).

Dismissal Before Use of Witnesses: Where a nonsuit (abolished) is granted and defendant thus relieved of the necessity of placing his witnesses upon the stand, he is nevertheless entitled to their fees and mileage, under this section, as disbursements necessarily incurred in procuring their attendance. Berry v. Helena, 56 M 122, 182 P 117 (1919).

Travel Within State: The mileage of witnesses in civil actions allowed litigants under this section is limited to travel within the state. Chilcott v. Rea, 52 M 134, 155 P 1114 (1916).

Computation of Mileage: The mileage of his witnesses that a successful party to an action may recover, under this section and 26-2-501, is not limited to travel from and to their place of residence; whether the mileage shall be computed from the place of residence will depend upon the circumstances of each case. Lynes v. N. Pac. Ry., 43 M 317, 117 P 81 (1911).

Subpoena Unnecessary: A party to whom costs were awarded was entitled to mileage for witnesses who appeared and testified, regardless of whether they were legally subpoenaed. Lynes v. N. Pac. Ry., 43 M 317, 117 P 81 (1911); McGlauflin v. Wormser, 28 M 177, 72 P 428 (1903).

Types of Hearings: Fees paid a witness testifying on the hearing for an order of inspection and survey, fees paid a witness at the hearing of an order to show cause, fees for summoning such witness, and the expense of preparing a map, are prima facie proper items of costs. King v. Allen, 29 M 5, 73 P 1107 (1903).

STENOGRAPHIC FEES

Deposition of Witness — Partial Transcript of Trial: A deposition taken solely for a party's own convenience cannot be charged to the other party as part of the costs. Here, however, a copy was furnished to the other party and the other party used it at trial. The cost of the deposition is therefore properly includable in costs. A party cannot order a partial transcript of the trial for use at the trial and then charge it to the other party as part of the costs. Morrison-Maierle, Inc. v. Selsco, 186 M 180, 606 P2d 1085 (1980).

Exceptions: The cost of copies of stenographers' notes of the testimony, used in the preparation of bills of exceptions (abolished), is a proper item of disbursements under this section, which the successful party may recover, even though such copies were procured from day to day during the progress of the trial and prior to final decision. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co. v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 33 M 400, 84 P 706 (1905).

"Per Diem" and "Copies" Defined: In the phrase "the legal fees paid stenographers for per diem or for copies", the "per diem" refers to the fee required to be paid by each party at the beginning of the trial, while the word "copies" refers not to the copies ordered by the parties from day to day to be used only as an aid in the examination of witnesses but to such as are furnished for the purpose of making up bills of exceptions, either during or after the close of the trial, or statements on motion for new trial. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co. v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 33 M 400, 84 P 706 (1905).

Official Stenographers: The provision of this section, authorizing the taxation of legal fees paid stenographers for per diem or for copies, is limited to fees paid official stenographers and does not authorize the taxation of such disbursements to private stenographers who attended the trial of an action in the place of the official stenographer by the consent of the parties and of the court. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co. v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 27 M 288, 70 P 1114 (1902).

Dictation of Briefs: The fee paid stenographers for transcribing their notes into longhand is chargeable as part of the costs, but fees paid stenographers in taking dictation of briefs for the Supreme Court and typewriting them are not taxable to the defeated party. State ex rel. King v. District Court, 25 M 1, 63 P 402 (1901), explained in Gahagan v. Gugler, 103 M 521, 63 P2d 145 (1936).

PRINTING EXPENSES

Rate Charged: The going rate charged by the only printing establishments in Great Falls for printing the brief of a Great Falls lawyer, even though more than double other printing rates available in Helena, is not unreasonable. A. T. Klemens & Son v. Reber Plumbing & Heating Co., 139 M 433, 365 P2d 525 (1961).

Printing Appellate Briefs: The expense of printing briefs in the Supreme Court is chargeable as part of the costs. State ex rel. King v. District Court, 25 M 1, 63 P 402 (1900), explained in Gahagan v. Gugler, 103 M 521, 63 P2d 145 (1936); Waite v. Vinson, 18 M 410, 45 P 552 (1896); Ryan v. Maxey, 17 M 164, 42 P 760 (1895).

Briefs in Special Proceeding: The cost of printing briefs in a special proceeding in the Supreme Court, which was dismissed, will be allowed defendant on his application. State ex rel. Baker v. District Court, 24 M 425, 62 P 688 (1900).

1981 Amendment: Substituted "Whenever" for "In all cases where"; deleted "demurrer or" before "motion" in two places; made minor changes in grammar and phraseology.

Case Notes

Application to Voluntary Dismissal Before Demurrer: Where plaintiff dismissed case voluntarily before demurrer (abolished) heard, his argument that motion for dismissal amounted to a confession of the demurrer and that defendant was therefore foreclosed from obtaining any costs other than as provided in this section was untenable because demurrer was never passed upon and neither sustained, overruled, or withdrawn. Graham v. Superior Mines, 100 M 427, 49 P2d 443 (1935).

Other Costs on Motions Precluded: This section, by providing that the losing party upon all motions must pay the other $10 "as costs", precludes the court from allowing any other costs. Colusa Parrot Min. & Smelting Co. v. Barnard, 28 M 11, 72 P 45 (1903).

25-10-203. Costs of postponement.

Case Notes

Continuance for Absence of Evidence: This section, when construed with 25-4-501 and 25-4-503, confers jurisdiction upon the trial court to impose costs as a condition for a continuance, upon the ground of absence of evidence as well as other grounds. State ex rel. Congdon v. District Court, 10 M 456, 26 P 182 (1891).

GENERAL RULE

Entirety of Litigation to Be Considered to Determine Whether Insured Forced to Assume Burden of Legal Action: The plaintiff was involved in a collision with another driver who admitted liability for the accident and for the plaintiff's resulting injuries. The plaintiff recovered the policy limit from the other driver but sought underinsured motorist coverage from her insurer. Ultimately, the plaintiff filed an action against her insurer for amounts due under her policy. After a jury verdict in her favor, the plaintiff moved for nontaxable costs and attorney fees, which the District Court denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that while the "insurance exception" to the American rule on the recovery of attorney fees may apply when the insurer forces the insured to assume the burden of legal action to obtain the full benefit of the insurance contract, the District Court failed to make any factual findings that considered both parties' actions during the entire process leading up to the resolution of the claim. The Supreme Court reversed the District Court's order and remanded for further proceedings. Mlekush v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2015 MT 302, 381 Mont. 292, 358 P.3d 913.

Attorney Fees Improperly Denied in Declaratory Judgment Action — Necessary and Proper Under Tangible Parameter Test — Reversed and Remanded for Determination of Fees: The city brought suit against a homeowner for violating a local building code. The homeowner filed a claim for declaratory judgment that the code was invalid and unenforceable. The District Court agreed that the city did not have the authority to adopt the code, but it denied attorney fees to the homeowner. On appeal, the Supreme Court applied the test in Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum, 2003 MT 97, 315 Mont. 210, 69 P.3d 663, and determined that attorney fees were warranted because all three prongs of the Buxbaum test were satisfied. It therefore reversed the denial of attorney fees and remanded the case for a calculation of fees. Helena v. Svee, 2014 MT 311, 377 Mont. 158, 339 P.3d 32.

Violation of Open Meeting Laws — Attorney Fees Awarded — Prevailing Party Despite No Final Judgment: The plaintiffs sued the Fish, Wildlife, and Parks Commission for not providing adequate notice of a meeting at which the Commission voted to expedite the closing of the wolf hunting season. The District Court granted a temporary restraining order and ultimately awarded attorney fees. During litigation, the Legislature enacted a law prohibiting the Commission from implementing certain hunting closures, rendering the litigation moot. On appeal, the Commission argued that attorney fees were not appropriate because a final judgment was never issued. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that the plaintiffs were a prevailing party because the preliminary injunction produced the same result as a final judgment and there was no remaining underlying controversy to litigate. Citizens for Balanced Use v. Fish, Wildlife & Parks Comm'n, 2014 MT 214, 376 Mont. 202, 331 P.3d 844.

Agricultural Covenant — Fees Not Available to County: The defendant, a real estate developer, attempted to lift an agricultural covenant. The county required multiple conditions before any development could proceed. The county subsequently sued the developer, finding that some of the conditions had not been met. On appeal, the county sought attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that the Montana Subdivision and Platting Act did not authorize a civil penalty and fees were not available under the court's equitable powers because there was no clear prevailing party. Lewis & Clark County v. Hampton, 2014 MT 207, 376 Mont. 137, 333 P.3d 205.

Fees Incurred in Determining Attorney Fees Excluded From Award: The plaintiffs sued the subdivision property owners over amendments to the covenants. The District Court then ruled against the remaining defendant and awarded attorney fees, including fees the plaintiffs incurred in determining the amount of fees incurred. The Supreme Court remanded and held that the fees incurred in establishing the reasonable amount of fees should be excluded from the award. Houden v. Todd, 2014 MT 113, 375 Mont. 1, 324 P.3d 1157.

Statute-Based Holding — Private Attorney General Doctrine Inapplicable Absent Vindication of Constitutional Interests: The private attorney general doctrine for the award of attorney fees applies when the government fails to properly enforce interests that are significant to its citizens, but the doctrine only applies when constitutional interests are vindicated. When a holding is statute-based rather than a determination of constitutional interests, the award of fees under the private attorney general doctrine is not warranted. Baxter v. St., 2009 MT 449, 354 M 234, 224 P3d 1211 (2009). See also Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800 (1999), and Am. Cancer Soc'y v. St., 2004 MT 376, 325 M 70, 103 P3d 1085 (2004).

Attorney Fees Limited to Time Spent on Claim or Theory Allowing Fees: When attorney fees related to a contract claim and a negligence claim were not separated by the prevailing party, it was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to limit the award. In a lawsuit involving multiple claims or multiple theories, an award of attorney fees must be based on the time spent by the prevailing party's attorney on the claim or theory under which attorney fees are allowable. DiMarzio v. Crazy Mtn. Constr., Inc., 2010 MT 231, 358 Mont. 119, 243 P.3d 718, following Emmerson v. Walker, 2010 MT 167, 357 Mont. 166, 236 P.3d 598.

Proper Award of Reasonable Attorney Fees in Water Rights Case: Defendant contended that the District Court erred in awarding attorney fees to plaintiffs because plaintiffs were not awarded all water rights they had sought in litigation and thus could not be considered to have been the prevailing party. The District Court considered testimony on the amount and character of the attorney services and the labor, time, and trouble involved and noted that the water rights litigation was of extreme importance to both parties and justified significant work performed by the attorneys. The court concluded that plaintiffs' attorney had secured a valuable result for plaintiffs and that the attorney's fee statements were sufficiently detailed and reasonable. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in awarding plaintiffs' attorney fees and affirmed. Kruer v. Three Creeks Ranch of Wy., L.L.C., 2008 MT 315, 346 M 66, 194 P3d 634 (2008). See also Plath v. Schonrock, 2003 MT 21, 314 M 101, 64 P3d 984 (2003). Plath was followed in Bitterroot River Protective Ass'n v. Bitterroot Conserv. District, 2011 MT 51, 359 Mont. 393, 251 P.3d 131.

Attorney Fees Improperly Awarded to Insurer in Declaratory Judgment Action — Not Necessary and Proper Under Tangible Parameter Test: In Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum, 2003 MT 97, 315 M 210, 69 P3d 663 (2003), the Supreme Court held that 27-8-313 provides a statutory basis for awarding attorney fees in declaratory judgment actions if the award is necessary and proper and determined in Renville v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2004 MT 366, 324 M 509, 105 P3d 280 (2004), that the award may be considered necessary and proper under a tangible parameter test when: (1) an insurance company possesses what the plaintiffs sought in the declaratory judgment action; (2) it is necessary to seek a declaratory judgment showing that plaintiffs are entitled to the relief sought; and (3) the declaratory relief sought was necessary in order to change the status quo. In this case, plaintiff Martin sought a declaratory judgment seeking a declaration that Montana law rather than Oregon law controlled in a workers' compensation subrogation case. The District Court granted summary judgment to the defendant insurer, dismissed the declaratory judgment claim, and awarded attorney fees to the insurer. The Supreme Court held that the insurer could not meet even the first prong of the tangible parameter test because it actually sought proceeds from Martin's third-party settlement. The District Court's reliance on the fact that the insurer prevailed and was entitled to attorney fees did not comport with the Buxbaum necessary and proper requirement. In fact, neither party was entitled to attorney fees, so the award was vacated. Martin v. SAIF Corp., 2007 MT 234, 339 M 167, 167 P3d 916 (2007). See also Horace Mann Ins. Co. v. Hanke, 2013 MT 320, 372 Mont. 350, 312 P.3d 429.

No Prevailing Party Under Offer of Judgment — No Attorney Fees Under General Rule: Defendant entered a 3-year commercial lease with plaintiff but vacated the premises shortly after taking possession. Plaintiff sued for breach of the lease, and defendant counterclaimed for fraud and breach of contract. Ultimately, defendant's offer of judgment was accepted and entered by the court. Plaintiff moved for attorney fees as the prevailing party, but the District Court determined that neither party prevailed and denied the motion. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Under the offer of judgment, plaintiff gave up about 80% of its damage claims, while defendant gave up its counterclaim but paid only 20% of plaintiff's damages. Thus, the District Court did not err in holding that neither party prevailed and that attorney fees were not owing under the general rule. Whipps, L.L.C. v. Kaufman, Vidal, Hileman & Ramlow, P.C., 2007 MT 66, 336 M 386, 156 P3d 11 (2007).

Attorney Fees Through Fee-Shifting, but Limited Fees-for-Fees, Recoverable for Defendants Under Declaration of Covenants: A declaration of covenants provided that the applicant for relief was entitled to recover attorney fees in any action for enforcement of the covenants. Plaintiffs applied for relief, but defendants were granted summary judgment and sought attorney fees. Plaintiffs contended that defendants were not allowed attorney fees under the declaration because defendants were not the applicant for relief. However, 28-3-704 renders contractual fee-shifting provisions reciprocal, so as the prevailing party, defendants were entitled to reasonable attorney fees, including fees-for-fees to the extent that attorney fees were incurred in establishing defendants' entitlement to fees under the contract. Defendants' claim for attorney fees for fees incurred in establishing the amount of attorney fees was not compensable under the contract, and the District Court erred in awarding attorney fees to defendants incurred in establishing the amount of fees. In addition, the court erred in awarding defendants' attorney fees incurred in securing the withdrawal of plaintiffs' attorney because of a conflict of interest because that cost was not a necessary expense of enforcement of the declaration. Because the District Court erred by awarding defendants all legal costs without making an effort to ascertain the specific source of the costs, the issue was remanded for a proper determination of fees, particularly fees-for-fees, that defendants could recover. Chase v. Bearpaw Ranch Ass'n, 2006 MT 67, 331 M 421, 133 P3d 190 (2006).

Hearing Not Required Before Decision Made to Award Attorney Fees: Plaintiffs contended that because the District Court awarded but did not hold a hearing to set a specific amount for attorney fees within 60 days after granting summary judgment to defendants, the court lost jurisdiction to amend the judgment to award attorney fees. The Supreme Court noted that there is a distinction between a court's decision to award attorney fees and a court's determination of the proper measure of fees. An evidentiary hearing must be held before attorney fees may be awarded in any specific amount, but a hearing need not be held before a court may decide to award attorney fees. Thus, 51 days after defendants filed their motion, the District Court had authority to grant defendant's request for attorney fees. Chase v. Bearpaw Ranch Ass'n, 2006 MT 67, 331 M 421, 133 P3d 190 (2006), following Plath v. Schonrock, 2003 MT 21, 314 M 101, 64 P3d 984 (2003). See also Assoc. Press v. Crofts, 2004 MT 120, 321 M 193, 89 P3d 971 (2004), and In re Estate of Burrell, 2010 MT 280, 358 Mont. 460, 245 P.3d 1106.

No Equitable Exception to American Rule for Parties Forced to Bring Suit to Determine Legal Rights Against Party Presenting Frivolous Defense in Bad Faith: Plaintiffs in a forcible detainer action contended that they should be granted attorney fees as an exception to the American Rule that a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory grant of those fees because plaintiffs were forced to bring a lawsuit to determine their legal property rights against a defendant who presented a frivolous defense asserted in bad faith. The District Court declined to award attorney fees, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that a malicious or bad faith equitable exception to the American Rule has consistently been denied and that the exception in Langemeier v. Kuehl, 2001 MT 306, 307 M 499, 40 P3d 343 (2001), did not apply. Harding v. Savoy, 2004 MT 280, 323 M 261, 100 P3d 976 (2004).

Insurer's Breach of Duty to Indemnify — Recovery of Attorney Fees by Injured Third-Party Claimant Who Prevails in Insurance Coverage Action Against Motor Vehicle Liability Insurer — Modification of Insurance Exception — Standard of Review of Question of Law: Following remand in Christensen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 2000 MT 378, 303 M 493, 22 P3d 624 (2000), the Christensens requested attorney fees incurred in the declaratory judgment action. The District Court denied the request, and the Christensens appealed. Generally, under the American rule, a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory provision, although equitable exceptions are recognized. Here, the parties agreed that there was no contractual authority to support an award of attorney fees, although the Supreme Court held in Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum, 2003 MT 97, 315 M 210, 69 P3d 663 (2003), that 27-8-313 authorizes a District Court to award attorney fees when the court, in its discretion, considers such an award to be necessary or proper. The Christensens submitted that the defendant insurer was obligated to reimburse them based on the insurance exception rationale articulated in Home Ins. Co. v. Pinski Bros., Inc., 160 M 219, 500 P2d 945 (1972), which approved an award of attorney fees in cases in which an insurer breaches its obligation to defend an insured. The Supreme Court noted that the issue presented a question of law, so the standard of review was whether the District Court's interpretation of law was correct. The Supreme Court held that an insurer that breaches its duty to indemnify is liable for attorney fees when an insured is forced to assume the burden of legal action to obtain the full benefit of the insurance contract, regardless of whether the insurer's duty to defend is at issue. However, in this case, the Christensens were third-party beneficiaries, and the Supreme Court declined to extend the insurance exception to third-party claimants because that would sanction attorney fee awards for simply demonstrating the existence of any insurance contract from which a third-party claimant successfully established coverage, which would undermine the American rule. Thus, although the Christensens were precluded from recovering attorney fees under the obligatory insurance exception, the case was remanded for a determination of whether attorney fees were necessary or proper under 27-8-313 and Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Brewer, 2003 MT 98, 315 M 231, 69 P3d 652 (2003), followed in Hernandez v. Yellowstone County Comm'rs, 2008 MT 251, 345 M 1, 189 P3d 638 (2008), with regard to award of attorney fees only to a prevailing party under the private attorney general theory, and overruling Yovish v. United Serv. Auto. Ass'n, 243 M 284, 794 P2d 682 (1990).

No Waiver of Attorney Fees by Injured Third-Party Claimant Who Prevails in Insurance Coverage Action on Remand: Following remand in Christensen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 2000 MT 378, 303 M 493, 22 P3d 624 (2000), the Christensens requested attorney fees incurred in the declaratory judgment action. The District Court denied the request, and the Christensens appealed. Defendant insurer argued that because the Christensens never requested attorney fees in their motion for summary judgment or in their first appeal, their right to attorney fees was waived. Former Rule 8(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), requires that a party give notice of facts that the party expects to prove, and the facts must disclose the presence of all elements necessary to make out a claim. In this case, the defendant insurer had notice of the Christensens' desire to seek attorney fees because that relief was specifically prayed for in the initial petition for declaratory judgment, and defendant successfully defended against that request in District Court. However, the Christensens did not prevail until the case was remanded, so waiting to file a motion for attorney fees until prevailing on appeal was proper. Thus, the Christensens did not waive their entitlement to attorney fees. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Brewer, 2003 MT 98, 315 M 231, 69 P3d 652 (2003), following Kunst v. Pass, 1998 M 71, 288 M 264, 957 P2d 1 (1998).

Attorney Fees Not Considered Costs — Declaratory Judgment Equitable Exception to Rule That Attorney Fees Not Awarded Absent Contractual or Statutory Provision: The District Court initially awarded costs and attorney fees to defendants for defending a declaratory judgment action. Plaintiff moved under former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), to strike the award of attorney fees. The District Court then concluded that it lacked authority to award attorney fees because plaintiff did not force defendants to defend against a frivolous or malicious action, so the court struck the award of attorney fees, and defendants appealed. Generally, under the American rule, a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory provision, although equitable exceptions are recognized. Section 27-8-311 provides that in any proceeding under Title 27, ch. 8, equitable and just costs may be awarded, but attorney fees are not, in any proper sense, considered part of the costs in a case and thus are not allowed as costs under 27-8-311. However, 27-8-313 draws no distinction between declaratory judgment actions adjudicating the rights of an insured against an insurer and actions adjudicating rights outside the confines of an insurance policy, so a court may award attorney fees pursuant to 27-8-313 when the court, in its discretion, considers such an award necessary or proper. Therefore, after finding that the District Court erred in concluding that it lacked authority to award attorney fees, the Supreme Court reversed for a determination of whether an award of attorney fees was necessary or proper in this case. Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum, 2003 MT 97, 315 M 210, 69 P3d 663 (2003), overruling State ex rel. Swart v. Casne, 172 M 302, 564 P2d 983 (1977), State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Lincoln County, 178 M 410, 584 P2d 1293

(1978), State ex rel. Leach v. Visser, 234 M 438, 767 P2d 858 (1988), McKamey v. St., 268 M 137, 885 P2d 515 (1994), and Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121 (1998), to the extent that those cases hold that a District Court has no discretionary authority to award attorney fees in a declaratory judgment action.

Award of Attorney Fees Under Private Attorney General Doctrine Inapplicable to Legislative Actions: Plaintiffs, including several individuals and cities, prevailed in an action declaring as unconstitutional a statutory process for designating a county building code jurisdictional area and eliminating municipal jurisdictional areas by an election procedure limited to record owners of real property instead of the general constituency. Plaintiffs sought attorney fees from defendants, including several counties and the state, under the private attorney general doctrine exception established in Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800 (1999). The Supreme Court found that although it might be equitable to award attorney fees to plaintiffs under the doctrine, the inequity of imposing those fees against the defendant counties who neither fashioned nor passed the unconstitutional law was overriding. Thus, the only entity remaining against whom fees could be assessed was the state, for the actions of the Legislature, but under 2-9-111, the Legislature is immune from suit for any action or omission, so there was no avenue whereby attorney fees could be assessed, and the request for fees was denied. Finke v. State ex rel. McGrath, 2003 MT 48, 314 M 314, 65 P3d 576 (2003).

Prevailing on State Claim but Not on Federal Section 1983 Claim — No Attorney Fees Under Federal Law Rule for Section 1983 Claim: The city approved a preliminary application for plat approval, subject to 26 conditions imposed by the city, and the developer sued the city for imposing the conditions. Although the developer prevailed on its claims under state law, it did not prevail on its federal section 1983 claim that the city acted arbitrarily and capriciously in imposing conditions when the city conditionally approved the preliminary plat application. Therefore, the developer was not entitled to attorney fees under the rule that a prevailing section 1983 plaintiff should ordinarily recover attorney fees unless special circumstances would render an award unjust. Kiely Constr. v. Red Lodge, 2002 MT 241, 312 M 52, 57 P3d 836 (2002).

No Attorney Fees for Plaintiffs Whose State Constitutional Rights Local Peace Officers Violated: Brothers filed a civil action against the Sheriff and two deputies for damages for violation of the brothers' Montana constitutional rights to privacy, due process, and freedom from unreasonable searches and seizures. The peace officers had used writs of execution upon judgments against one brother, who lived with the other brother, to enter the house that the other brother owned and to search for and seize personal property to satisfy the judgments. The court held that neither the writs nor the statutes that they were issued under authorized the entry, search, and seizure, that the three rights are self-executing, and that the brothers were entitled to damages. However, the brothers were not entitled to attorney fees because there was neither a contractual agreement nor a statute providing for payment of the fees. Dorwart v. Caraway, 2002 MT 240, 312 M 1, 58 P3d 128 (2002).

Calculation of Attorney Fees Under Federal Fee-Shifting Law: In Ihler I, a class action suit by patients at the state hospital, the case was remanded for recomputation of the lodestar amount. On remand, the District Court eliminated the 50% enhancement for contingency, added fees for representation by the state-employed attorney, did not reassess hourly rates or compensable hours, and denied the request for attorney fees on appeal. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in denying out-of-state hourly rates for out-of-state attorneys. A prevailing party in a section 1988 action does not have the burden of proving that resort to out-of-forum counsel was necessary; instead, a prevailing party has the burden of proving that resort to out-of-forum counsel was reasonable. The Supreme Court further held that: (1) the District Court erred in awarding certain in-state attorney fees that were below the lowest end of the prevailing range; (2) the District Court erred in reducing the patients' requested hours, stating that because it was reasonable to seek out-of-state representation, it also was reasonable to incur the extra expenses associated with out-of-state representation, including travel time; and (3) the District Court erred in denying the patients' attorney fees incurred on appeal. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in refusing to enhance the lodestar figure for undesirability because that was subsumed in the lodestar figure. Ihler v. Chisholm, 2000 MT 37, 298 M 254, 995 P2d 439, 57 St. Rep. 163 (2000).

Guardian Entitled to Award of Attorney Fees for Appointment as Guardian — Award in Nonadversarial Proceeding Held Not to Violate General Rule for Award of Attorney Fees — Award Approved Though Not Requested in Original Petition for Appointment: Appellant contested the payment of $30,000 in legal fees from the estate of a ward to the attorney representing the guardian appointed by the District Court, arguing that the general rule is that attorney fees are not payable to a prevailing party without special statutory provisions to the contrary and that the original petition for appointment of the guardian did not include a request for payment of attorney fees. The Supreme Court affirmed the order of the District Court awarding the fees. The Supreme Court pointed out, citing opinions from other states, that the general rule regarding payment of fees applies to adversarial proceedings and that the appointment of a guardian is not an adversarial proceeding but is a proceeding in rem to promote the bests interests of the ward and to protect the ward's estate. The Supreme Court also held that under former Rule 54(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the District Court may grant relief to which a party is entitled regardless of whether the party has specifically requested the relief granted. The Supreme Court noted that the payment of the guardian's legal fees by the estate of the ward is relief to which the guardian would be entitled under 72-5-428(1) if the petition for appointment was brought in good faith and the appointment was in the bests interests of the ward. In re Estate of Bayers, 1999 MT 154, 295 M 89, 983 P2d 339, 56 St. Rep. 607 (1999).

Special Circumstances Precluding Award of Attorney Fees in Section 1983 Claim — Award Against Police Officers Fulfilling Statutory Duties Unjust: Police officers searched Dorwart's home pursuant to writs of execution and seized his personal property, but without Dorwart's permission or a search warrant. Dorwart brought a claim, pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 1983, against the county and the Sheriff. Qualified immunity was extended to the officers concerning their personal liability, but Dorwart prevailed on the claim that the county's action violated his right to be free from unreasonable search and seizure and sought attorney fees. Under Jackson v. Galan, 868 F2d 165 (5th Cir. 1989), a successful section 1983 claimant may be awarded attorney fees regardless of the fact that qualified immunity prevents liability for monetary damages. However, in this case, special circumstances precluded the award because the officers were enforcing the public policy of Montana regarding postjudgment execution statutes, thereby effectuating state rather than county policy, and the award of attorney fees against the county would have been unjust. Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121, 55 St. Rep. 777 (1998).

American Rule — No Entitlement to Attorney Fees Absent Contractual or Statutory Provision: Montana adheres to the "American Rule" regarding attorney fees, namely that a party in a civil action is generally not entitled to fees absent a specific contractual or statutory provision forming the basis for the award. First Nat'l Bank of Glasgow v. First Sec. Bank of Mont., 260 M 38, 857 P2d 726, 50 St. Rep. 931 (1993). See also In re Marriage of Hereford, 223 M 31, 723 P2d 960 (1986), Dept. of Fish, Wildlife, and Parks v. Mont. Stockgrowers Ass'n, Inc., 240 M 39, 782 P2d 898 (1989), and Erker v. Kester, 1999 MT 231, 296 M 123, 988 P2d 1221, 56 St. Rep. 912 (1999).

No Enhancement of Attorney Fees for Contingency Under Federal Fee-Shifting Law: In adjusting the amount awarded for attorney fees, the District Court ordered an increase in the lodestar amount by 50% for risk of contingency. Following the order, the U.S. Supreme Court decided in City of Burlington v. Dague, 505 US 557, 120 L Ed 2d 449, 112 S Ct 2638 (1992), that enhancement of attorney fee awards for contingency was not permitted under federal fee-shifting statutes. The change in law between the trial court decision and the appellate decision required the appellate court to apply the new law. Under Dague, the risk of contingency in a particular case depends on: (1) the legal and factual merits of the claim, which is not reflected in the lodestar and should play no part in the calculation of attorney fees; and (2) the difficulty in establishing the merits of the claim, which is ordinarily reflected in the lodestar, either in the higher number of hours expended to overcome the difficulty or in the higher hourly rate of the attorney skilled and experienced enough to do so. Taking into account the difficulty of the case again through contingency enhancement resulted in double counting. The case at bar was remanded for recomputation of the lodestar amount in light of the Dague principles. Ihler v. Chisholm, 259 M 240, 855 P2d 1009, 50 St. Rep. 775 (1993). On remand, the District Court eliminated the 50% enhancement for contingency and added the fees incurred by the patients while represented by the state-employed attorney. The court did not reassess the reasonable hourly rates or compensable hours and denied the patients' request for attorney fees incurred on appeal. The patients appealed, contending that the District Court erred by refusing to enhance the lodestar figure for undesirability. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to enhance the lodestar figure for undesirability because the reluctance of Montana attorneys to represent these types of claims was subsumed in the lodestar figure. Ihler v. Chisholm, 2000 MT 37, 298 M 254, 995 P2d 439, 57 St. Rep. 163 (2000). See also Davis v. San Francisco, 976 F2d 1536 (9th Cir. 1992).

When Attorney Fees Payable in ERISA Action: Under 29 U.S.C. 1132(g) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA), the award of attorney fees is discretionary in most actions. However, in actions by a fiduciary for or on behalf of a plan to collect delinquent contributions under 29 U.S.C. 1145, attorney fees are mandatory if judgment is awarded in favor of the plan. Audit Serv., Inc. v. Frontier-West, Inc., 252 M 142, 827 P2d 1242, 49 St. Rep. 186 (1992).

Award of Attorney Fees by Judge Who Did Not Try Case — No Abuse of Discretion: Parties had 2 months following judgment and prior to a change in jurisdiction to bring the matter of attorney fees before the judge who presided over a lien foreclosure action. Neither side did, and jurisdiction of the action was transferred from the 13th to the 16th Judicial District. Defendant later claimed the new judge abused his discretion by awarding fees in a case he did not try because he could not know all of the circumstances surrounding the foreclosure action. The Supreme Court held that a judge's jurisdiction over a case is a matter of law and that while it is preferable that the presiding trial judge consider the matter of attorney fees, it is not mandatory. Finding no abuse of discretion, judgment was affirmed. Donnes v. Orlando, 221 M 356, 720 P2d 233, 43 St. Rep. 890 (1986).

Attorney Fees in Divorce Actions — Contingency Fees Impermissible — Findings Required: The District Court order entered in a proceeding to enforce a decree of dissolution of marriage awarded attorney fees to the respondent. The court made findings as to the reasonableness of the amount of the award of attorney fees but made no findings as to the wife's need for the award. The court awarded the respondent $6,506 for maintenance arrearages and then found that one-third of the recovery, or $2,146, was a reasonable attorney fee. Noting that the Rules of Professional Conduct prohibit contingency fees in domestic relations actions, the Supreme Court vacated the award for attorney fees and remanded the case for reconsideration and entry of findings by the District Court on the fee issue. In re Marriage of Jones, 218 M 441, 709 P2d 158, 42 St. Rep. 1722 (1985).

Liability Dispute Between Insurers — Costs and Fees: In a proceeding that was essentially between two insurers to determine which of two overlapping policies covered auto accident, the winner was not entitled to costs and attorney fees. Bill Atkin Volkswagen, Inc. v. McClafferty, 213 M 99, 689 P2d 1237, 41 St. Rep. 1981 (1984).

No Provision in Property Settlement for Attorney Fees — Fees Improperly Awarded: Where the parties to a dissolution proceeding agreed to a property settlement that did not provide for payment of attorney fees and the District Court later issued an order providing for the attorney fees to be paid by the husband if he did not comply with the agreement, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in issuing the order for the payment of fees by the husband. The property settlement agreement was approved by the District Court but never incorporated by reference into the decree and therefore has the status of a private contract, and the remedies for enforcement of a judgment are unavailable. Absent a statute or contractual provision, attorney fees are generally not recoverable, and since neither is involved here, there was no right to those fees. Lorge v. Lorge, 207 M 423, 675 P2d 115, 41 St. Rep. 50 (1984).

Release Applicable to Claims for Attorney Fees and Bad Faith in Settlement: Where the plaintiff retained counsel to force the defendant insurance company to settle an automobile liability claim and later signed a release of the company when it settled the claim, the District Court did not err in granting summary judgment to the insurance company on the issue of the company's liability for the plaintiff's attorney fees and bad faith in settlement of the claim. The plaintiff's obligation to pay the attorney fees arose prior to the signing of the release, and recovery is therefore precluded by the release. Moreover, while the plaintiff claims it was not his intent to release the company from his claim for bad faith, the release applies to all claims arising out of the occurrence and the plaintiff's intent, unknown to the defendant, therefore is not controlling. Richardson v. Safeco Ins. Co., 206 M 73, 669 P2d 1073, 40 St. Rep. 1515 (1983).

Tort of "Bad Faith" — No Attorney's Fees: Plaintiffs brought a "bad faith" tort action against their insurance company and requested attorney's fees. Because they failed to plead the existence of a contract provision or statutory grant allowing recovery of fees, their request was denied. Bostwick v. Foremost Ins. Co., 539 F. Supp. 517, 39 St. Rep. 980 (D.C. Mont. 1982).

Recovery of Fees Absent Contract or Statute: Attorney fees are not generally recoverable in the absence of a contractual or statutory provision for recovery. Sliter's v. Lee, 197 M 182, 641 P2d 475, 39 St. Rep. 453 (1982).

Fees Disallowed on Good Faith Appeal: Where the State Compensation Insurance Fund, in good faith, raised significant issues on appeal of a decision of the Workers' Compensation Court, attorney fees for the appellate proceedings would not be awarded to the claimant, who prevailed. Hock v. Lienco Cedar Prod., 194 M 131, 634 P2d 1174, 38 St. Rep. 1598 (1981).

Attorney Fees Not Allowed Unless Final Judgment: The award of attorney fees in this case is premature as no final judgment has been entered on the merits of the underlying controversy in favor of respondents. No permanent injunction was awarded. No Writ of Mandate was issued. All other considerations aside, respondents are not entitled to a judgment for attorney fees without a final determination of the underlying controversy in their favor. Dreyer v. Bd. of Trustees of Mid-Rivers Tel. Co-op, Inc., 193 M 95, 630 P2d 226, 38 St. Rep. 972 (1981).

EXCEPTION — CONTRACT PROVIDING FEES

Mandatory Fees Pursuant to Contract — Waiver of Hearing — District Court Award Undisturbed: The Burrell grandchildren entered into a settlement agreement awarding attorney fees but, when fees were awarded against them, appealed the award. Citing In re Marriage of Szafryk, 2010 MT 90, 356 Mont. 141, 232 P.3d 361, the Supreme Court held that when a conscionable contract requires payment of fees, the District Court lacks discretion to deny them. The court also held that no evidentiary hearing on the amount of fees was necessary because the grandchildren had failed to request a hearing and therefore, under the court's ruling in JTL Group, Inc. v. New Outlook, LLP, 2010 MT 1, 355 Mont. 1, 223 P.3d 912, waived the hearing. The Supreme Court also held, citing Talon Plumbing v. St., 2008 MT 376, 346 Mont. 499, 198 P.3d 213, that it will not reverse an award of fees based upon competent evidence absent an abuse of discretion. In re Estate of Burrell, 2010 MT 280, 358 Mont. 460, 245 P.3d 1106, followed in Boyne USA, Inc. v. Spanish Peaks Dev., LLC, 2013 MT 1, 368 Mont. 143, 292 P.3d 432, in which the Supreme Court concluded that a contractual provision that provides for attorney fees includes attorney fees on appeal.

Suit Necessary to Obtain Delivery of Escrow Documents — Award of Attorney Fees Under Contract Proper: A section of a contractual stock sales agreement provided for payment of attorney fees to the prevailing party enforcing the agreement. The District Court awarded attorney fees to plaintiff, but defendants contested the award on grounds that plaintiff's declaratory judgment action was not initiated in an effort to enforce the terms of the agreement. However, plaintiff was forced to bring the action to obtain the delivery of the escrow documents when defendants refused to release the documents upon plaintiff's full payment of the sale amount. The action was thus undertaken to enforce a provision of the contract, so an award of attorney fees under the contract was not improper. The Supreme Court affirmed the award. Lewistown Propane Co. v. Moncur, 2002 MT 349, 313 M 368, 61 P3d 780 (2002).

Provision for Fees by Contract or Statute: Attorney fees are allowed when they are provided for by statute or contractual provision. Poulsen's, Inc. v. Wood, 232 M 411, 756 P2d 1162, 45 St. Rep. 1154 (1988), followed in Wise v. Sebena, 248 M 32, 808 P2d 494, 48 St. Rep. 309 (1991), and in Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. Hill, 266 M 258, 879 P2d 1158, 50 St. Rep. 726 (1993).

Attorney Fees as Element of Compensatory Damages — Limited to Contingent Fee Agreement: Jury awarded appellant attorney fees as an element of compensatory damages and deferred to the District Court to assess appropriate attorney fees and costs. The court arrived at a sum based on a contingent fee agreement entered into by appellant and his attorney rather than using a lodestar determination based on reasonable hours expended times a reasonable hourly fee. Appellant contended on appeal that this was an incorrect method of calculation. The Supreme Court held that: (1) the provisions of the contingent fee agreement were controlling in computing the amount of attorney fees; (2) the contract fixed the damages appellant sustained; and (3) to allow appellant to recover attorney fees based on an hourly fee would change the issue from what amount would compensate him for actual damages he sustained in the form of attorney fees to what amount would reasonably compensate his attorney for services rendered. Morris v. Nationwide Ins. Co., 222 M 399, 722 P2d 628, 43 St. Rep. 1363 (1986).

Award of Attorney Fees for Time Spent Obtaining Judgment for Specific Performance: Appellant claimed District Court erred in awarding attorney fees on respondent's counterclaim for specific performance of the parties' agreement concerning buy-out of respondent's interest in a business, contending that the court failed to award relief on the contract claim. The Supreme Court found substantial evidence that appellant failed to perform the required acts and that relief was awarded by way of specific performance. The District Court properly limited recovery to the number of hours spent by respondent's attorney in obtaining the judgment for specific performance. Proto v. Elliot, 222 M 393, 722 P2d 625, 43 St. Rep. 1358 (1986).

Costs of Suit Provided for in Subdivision Declaration of Restrictions: A declaration of restrictions governing subdivision tracts provided that costs of suit be awarded against a person found guilty of a breach of the provisions of the declaration. The trial court's conclusion that defendant unlawfully and unreasonably restricted plaintiff's right of access in derogation of the declaration meant that plaintiff was entitled to attorney fees under the contract. Shors v. Branch, 221 M 390, 720 P2d 239, 43 St. Rep. 919 (1986).

Attorney Fees — Not Costs — Timeliness: The defendants signed a contract to purchase a tract of land from plaintiffs. The contract provided for attorney fees to the prevailing party in an action commenced on the contract. Plaintiffs filed suit alleging that under the contract and various oral agreements, defendants had agreed to pay a real estate commission to plaintiffs. The trial court granted summary judgment to defendants, holding that written evidence of an agreement to pay a commission did not exist. No notice of entry of judgment was ever filed. Defendants later moved to set an attorney fee award. The trial court ruled that under Title 25, ch. 10, attorney fees were not recoverable costs and that the motion for costs was not timely, as it was not filed within 5 days of judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that attorney fees were awardable under the contract and that defendants' motion was essentially a motion to amend judgment under former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The motion was timely made since no notice of entry of judgment was ever filed. Cook v. Harrington, 203 M 479, 661 P2d 1287, 40 St. Rep. 580 (1983), followed in In re Estate of Lande, 1999 MT 179, 295 M 277, 983 P2d 316, 56 St. Rep. 701 (1999).

Persons Not Parties to Contract — Right to Attorney Fees Under Contract Granting Them: When suit is brought under a contract providing for attorney fees to the prevailing party, persons who are not parties to the contract are not entitled to attorney fees, either under the contract or a statutory attorney fees provision. Where persons who were not parties to a contract by which a business was sold guaranteed payment of the purchase price, a guarantee which they had no intention of honoring, it was error to award them attorney fees upon finding that they were not liable under the guarantee because they received no consideration from plaintiff seller of the business for their guarantee. Rudio v. Yellowstone Merchandising Corp., 200 M 537, 652 P2d 1163, 39 St. Rep. 1923 (1982).

EXCEPTION — FRIVOLOUS CASE

Attorney Fees Properly Awarded — Exception to American Rule Appropriate: The District Court awarded the defendants attorney fees following summary judgment denying the plaintiffs' claims of an express easement over the defendants' property. The plaintiffs argued that attorney fees should not have been awarded since their proposed amended complaint would have cured all procedural and pleading defects. However, since the request to amend was sought nearly a year and a half after the original complaint was filed and following the defendants' request for summary judgment, the District Court denied the request and awarded attorney fees to the plaintiffs. The Supreme Court affirmed the award on appeal, holding that the equitable exception to the American rule for attorney fees applied since the defendants failed to offer a reasonable explanation for why they litigated a meritless legal theory for nearly a year and a half. Bardsley v. Pluger, 2015 MT 301, 381 Mont. 284, 358 P.3d 907, following Motta v. Granite County Comm'rs, 2013 MT 172, 370 Mont. 469, 304 P.3d 720.

Attorney Fees Proper to Defend Untimely and Inappropriate Nonmeritorious Action: An award of attorney fees to plaintiff was within the District Court's discretion when plaintiff, as a wholly innocent party, was forced to employ counsel to defend a nonmeritorious motion that was both untimely and inappropriate. Connell v. Dept. of Social and Rehabilitation Services, 2003 MT 361, 319 M 69, 81 P3d 1279 (2003), following Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114 (1978). Federal Civil Rights Claim Resulting From Clerical Error Considered Vexatious — Attorney Fees Awarded to Prevailing Party: Shepherd held an assignment of the tax sale certificate on real property in Red Lodge. A few days before the redemption period was to expire, the owner of record redeemed the property by paying $4,407.28, but the County Treasurer unintentionally overlooked an additional $56.30 in interest that had accrued between the date that notice was given that a tax deed would be issued and the date of redemption. Shepherd then filed a complaint under 42 U.S.C. 1983, alleging that the county's failure to collect the statutorily required amount for redemption deprived him of a property interest without due process of law. Shepherd sought $250,000 in general damages, punitive damages, and attorney fees and costs. Shortly thereafter, the county tendered Shepherd $56.30 plus interest, but Shepherd rejected the money and added a negligence claim to the complaint, based on the County Treasurer's improper extinguishment of the lien. The District Court summarily dismissed the negligence claim, and the county sought attorney fees, citing Hughes v. Rowe, 449 US 5 (1980), for the proposition that the prevailing party in a section 1983 case is entitled to attorney fees if plaintiff continued to litigate after it became apparent that the action lacked factual or legal substance. The District Court found that Shepherd's action was not unreasonable or vexatious, and declined to award attorney fees to the county. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that Shepherd's civil rights claim, resulting from a clerical error amounting to $56.30 in damages, was groundless, meritless, and vexatious. Even when Shepherd was tendered the full amount owed, he proceeded to cavalierly engage in litigation that required the county to defend the meritless claim. The case was remanded for a determination of the amount to which the county was entitled in attorney fees and costs associated with the motion to dismiss the federal civil rights claim. Shepherd v. Carbon County Bd. of Comm'rs, 2002 MT 98, 309 M 391, 46 P3d 634 (2002).

Award of Attorney Fees Under Foy Equitable Exception Limited to Defense of Frivolous Action: Absent contractual or statutory authority, attorney fees will generally not be awarded, but a court may, under its equity powers and pursuant to Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114, 35 St. Rep. 811 (1978), award attorney fees to make an injured party whole. However, the Foy equitable exception applies only to situations in which a party has been forced to defend against a wholly frivolous or malicious action and is not available for a party that initiates a legal action. Further, parties bringing actions for injunctive relief to protect their own rights are not entitled to attorney fees under the Foy exception. Braach v. Graybeal, 1999 MT 234, 296 M 138, 988 P2d 761, 56 St. Rep. 919 (1999), distinguishing Wilson v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 199 M 189, 648 P2d 766, 39 St. Rep. 1294 (1982). Legitimate Disputes as to Law Not Within Exception to General Rule: Wilson brought an action against the defendant Department to prevent it from adjudicating his water rights as being subject to the prior existing right of Walton. The District Court erred in awarding attorney fees to be paid by Wilson to Walton on the theory that it was Wilson's unlawful appropriation which forced Walton to intervene in Wilson's legal action against the Department in order to protect his (Walton's) interest. Generally, attorney fees are not to be allowed absent statutory authorization or an agreement between the parties. The exception for frivolous legal action was inapplicable because a thorough examination of the basis for Wilson's claim to Walton's water rights shows that there was a legitimate basis for Wilson's claim, even though it was ultimately unsuccessful, and a legitimate dispute. Wilson v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 199 M 189, 648 P2d 766, 39 St. Rep. 1294 (1982), distinguished in Braach v. Personal Defense of Frivolous Action Against Official: Justice of the Peace was properly granted attorney fees where, through no fault of her own, she was forced to personally defend a frivolous action seeking to hold her personally liable for action she took in her official capacity. EXCEPTION — COURT'S EQUITY POWER

Attorney Fees Properly Awarded — Exception to American Rule Appropriate: The District Court awarded the defendants attorney fees following summary judgment denying the plaintiffs' claims of an express easement over the defendants' property. The plaintiffs argued that attorney fees should not have been awarded since their proposed amended complaint would have cured all procedural and pleading defects. However, since the request to amend was sought nearly a year and a half after the original complaint was filed and following the defendants' request for summary judgment, the District Court denied the request and awarded attorney fees to the plaintiffs. The Supreme Court affirmed the award on appeal, holding that the equitable exception to the American rule for attorney fees applied since the defendants failed to offer a reasonable explanation for why they litigated a meritless legal theory for nearly a year and a half. Bardsley v. Pluger, 2015 MT 301, 381 Mont. 284, 358 P.3d 907, following Motta v. Granite County Comm'rs, 2013 MT 172, 370 Mont. 469, 304 P.3d 720.

Award of Attorney Fees Based on Party's Deception, Contradiction, and Fraud and Party's Attorney's Needless Protraction of Litigation: The appellant in a probate and guardianship case was found to have employed deception, contradiction, and fraud, resulting in the expenditure of considerable time, effort, and expense in the attempt to arrive at a reasonable understanding of the condition of the guardianship estate and the ownership of estate property. The appellant's attorney was found to have taken every opportunity to obstruct and avoid a resolution of the issues by filing questionable motions for dismissal and sanctions, taking positions that were not supported by law or facts, and failing to mediate in good faith, thereby protracting the litigation at considerable expense to the respondents. The District Court ordered appellant to pay 80% of the respondents' attorney fees and costs and ordered appellant's attorney to pay the remaining 20%. There was substantial evidence in the record to support the award, which the Supreme Court affirmed. The court declined to address the reasonableness of the award because appellant did not object to the bill of expenses when given the opportunity to challenge the amount, instead challenging the reasonableness of the award for the first time on appeal. In re Estate of McDermott, 2002 MT 164, 310 M 435, 51 P3d 486 (2002).

Doctrine of Private Attorney General Applied — Three-Part Test for Awarding Attorney Fees: The District Court concluded that under 25-10-711, attorney fees were not available to plaintiff in this case because the action involved "neither frivolous conduct, extreme conduct, nor bad faith by the State". Plaintiff argued that it was entitled to attorney fees under the doctrine of private attorney general, which is an equitable exception to the American rule that a party is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory provision. Under Serrano v. Priest, 569 P2d 1303 (Calif. 1977), there are three basic factors to be considered in awarding attorney fees based on the doctrine of private attorney general: (1) the strength or societal importance of the public policy vindicated by the litigation; (2) the necessity of private enforcement and the magnitude of the resultant burden on plaintiff; and (3) the number of people standing to benefit from the decision. Here, plaintiff prevailed in a challenge to the constitutionality of numerous statutes regarding the state's administration of school trust lands. The litigation involved important public policies grounded in the constitution, requiring private constitutional enforcement, and benefited a large class of citizens interested in Montana's public schools. The District Court ignored recognized principles in denying plaintiff's reasonable attorney fees, resulting in substantial injustice. The Supreme Court applied the Serrano test and reversed for an award of attorney fees to plaintiff under the doctrine of private attorney general. Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800, 56 St. Rep. 1065 (1999), following In re Porter, 156 M 190, 478 P2d 866 (1970), distinguishing School District v. Bitterroot Conserv. District, 2011 MT 51, 359 Mont. 393, 251 P.3d 131.

State Conduct Not So Extreme as to Warrant Award of Costs and Attorney Fees: Weber contended that he was equitably entitled to costs and attorney fees because he had been constructively discharged by intolerable working conditions created by his state agency employers, claiming that he was harassed, treated unfairly, and finally demoted for his actions involving a fraudulent claim submitted to his Department, which he refused to pay. However, Weber failed to convince the trial court that the state's conduct was so extreme as to entitle him to costs and attorney fees or to provide evidence that the court abused its discretion in reaching that determination. Weber v. St., 253 M 148, 831 P2d 1359, 49 St. Rep. 397 (1992).

Exception to General Rule That Attorney Fees Not Recoverable: While the general rule in Montana is that attorney fees are not recoverable as costs by a successful litigant, absent a special agreement between the parties or statutory authorization, a narrow exception has been developed by the Supreme Court in cases in which the court has recognized the District Courts' general equity powers to make an injured party whole and the award will not be overturned absent a showing of abuse of discretion. EXCEPTION — COMMON FUND

Common Fund Not Created by Stavenjord I — No Recovery of Attorney Fees From Nonparticipating Claimants: On remand to the Workers' Compensation Court of Stavenjord v. Mont. St. Fund, 2003 MT 67, 314 M 466, 67 P3d 229 (2003) (Stavenjord I), the State Fund paid Stavenjord's additional benefits, and Stavenjord then sought recovery of common fund attorney fees for Stavenjord-type benefits secured by nonparticipating claimants. The Workers' Compensation Court concluded that Stavenjord I created a common fund and that Stavenjord's counsel was entitled to collect common fund fees from nonparticipating claimants who benefited from Stavenjord I. On appeal, the Supreme Court disagreed. Applying the elements of a common fund set out in Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Hall, 2001 MT 314, 308 M 29, 38 P3d 825 (2001), the court determined that Stavenjord I did not create an identifiable monetary fund or benefit, so the first element in creation of a common fund was not satisfied and Stavenjord's counsel was not entitled to collect common fund fees from nonparticipating claimants. The case was remanded to the Workers' Compensation Court for a determination of an appropriate procedure by which potential Stavenjord beneficiaries would be identified and notified of their interests related to increased Stavenjord-type benefits. Stavenjord v. Mont. St. Fund, 2006 MT 257, 334 M 117, 146 P3d 724 (2006).

Authority of Workers' Compensation Court to Award Common Fund Attorney Fees: At the beginning of Schmill's workers' compensation claim, her attorneys pleaded for statutory attorney fees. However, following the decision in Schmill v. Liberty NW. Ins. Corp., 2003 MT 80, 315 M 51, 67 P3d 290 (2003) (Schmill I), Schmill's attorneys pleaded for, and the Workers' Compensation Court awarded, common fund attorney fees on remand. Defendant contended that the court did not have the authority to award common fund attorney fees because Schmill's attorneys failed to plead common fund attorney fees in their initial petition. The Supreme Court held that the timing for pleading common fund attorney fees was appropriate because the common fund did not arise until after the issuance of Schmill I, so it was appropriate for Schmill's attorneys to wait until postremand proceedings to request common fund attorney fees, and it was within the discretion of the Workers' Compensation Court to award the fees pursuant to 39-71-2905. Schmill v. Liberty NW. Ins. Corp., 2005 MT 144, 327 M 293, 114 P3d 204 (2005). See also Kunst v. Pass, 1998 M 71, 288 M 264, 957 P2d 1 (1998).

American Rule, Rather Than Common Fund Rule, Applicable to Counsel Who Does Not Directly Create Common Fund: Intervenors in this case, who created the common fund at issue, filed suit on behalf of their individual clients and all others similarly situated. Ruhd was a similarly situated beneficiary and hired separate counsel, but rather than join the suit filed by the intervenors, Ruhd filed a separate suit, making the same statutory claims against Liberty Northwest Insurance Corporation (Liberty). The intervenors were ultimately successful in Rausch v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 2002 MT 203, 311 M 210, 54 P3d 25 (2002), and were awarded common fund attorney fees from the State Fund. The Workers' Compensation Court subsequently ordered that Ruhd's attorney was entitled to common fund attorney fees with respect to all relevant impairment awards payable by Liberty. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The intervenors were solely responsible for the creation of the Rausch common fund, and Ruhd's counsel was not entitled to attorney fees for work that did not contribute to that common fund. Rather, the court applied the American Rule, requiring Ruhd's counsel to look to Ruhd for remuneration. Ruhd v. Liberty NW. Ins. Corp., 2004 MT 236, 322 M 478, 97 P3d 561 (2004), followed in Schmill v. Liberty NW. Ins. Corp., 2005 MT 144, 327 M 293, 114 P3d 204 (2005).

State Fund Required to Bear Proportion of Attorney Fees of Claimant Who Recovers Social Security Disability Benefits — Applicability of Common Fund Doctrine: Flynn was diagnosed with an occupational disease, and the State Fund accepted liability and tendered medical and disability benefits. Flynn also sought Social Security disability benefits, but the claim was initially denied. The claim was later accepted, and Flynn was awarded retroactive Social Security benefits, at which point the State Fund notified Flynn that his biweekly benefits would be reduced and that it intended to recoup overpaid benefits by an additional offset against Flynn's state benefits. Flynn filed a petition requesting that the State Fund pay a proportionate share of the attorney fees incurred in recovering the Social Security benefits, but the Workers' Compensation Court denied the petition. On appeal, the Supreme Court found no statutory preemption on the issue of attorney fee apportionment following benefit recoupment and thus applied the common fund doctrine, which authorizes the assignment of responsibility for fees among those individuals who benefit from litigation that created the common fund. With the aid of counsel but without the assistance of the State Fund, Flynn recovered Social Security benefits that resulted in a reduction of Flynn's state benefits to the substantial benefit of the State Fund. Therefore, pursuant to the common fund doctrine, the State Fund was required to contribute to the cost of Flynn's litigation, including reasonable attorney fees, in proportion to the benefits that it actually received. The Workers' Compensation Court committed reversible error when it denied Flynn's request for reasonable apportionment of attorney fees. Flynn v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 2002 MT 279, 312 M 410, 60 P3d 397 (2002).

Workers' Compensation Claimants Entitled to Common Fund Attorney Fees: Attorneys for several workers' compensation claimants asserted that they were entitled to attorney fees pursuant to the common fund doctrine for all similarly situated permanently totally disabled claimants who were denied immediate impairment awards by the State Fund and who would now be able to obtain those benefits as a result of the decision in this case. The Supreme Court noted that to be awarded attorney fees based on the common fund doctrine, a party must satisfy three elements: (1) a party, typically referred to as the active beneficiary, must create, reserve, increase, or preserve a common fund; (2) the active beneficiary must incur legal fees in establishing the common fund; and (3) the common fund must benefit ascertainable nonparticipating beneficiaries. The attorneys in this case were entitled to common fund attorney fees because they engaged in litigation that preserved the benefit of immediate impairment awards to permanently totally disabled workers' compensation claimants and incurred legal costs and fees in the preservation of that right and because the common fund will benefit an ascertainable class of workers who were previously denied immediate payment of an impairment award that they were legally entitled to receive. Rausch v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 2002 MT 203, 311 M 210, 54 P3d 25 (2002), following Murer v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 283 M 210, 942 P2d 69 (1997), and followed, to the extent that the Rausch common fund for attorneys includes fees culled from all claimants regardless of insurer, in Ruhd v. Liberty NW. Ins. Corp., 2004 MT 236, 322 M 478, 97 P3d 561 (2004). See also Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Hall, 2001 MT 314, 308 M 29, 38 P3d 825 (2001), and Schmill v. Liberty NW. Ins. Corp., 2009 MT 430, 354 M 88, 223 P3d 842 (2009).

Common Fund Doctrine Equitable Exception to American Rule Regarding Award of Attorney Fees Applicable to Medical Services Lien — Elements of Doctrine: Kilmer suffered severe injuries as a passenger in a vehicle driven by Hall. Kilmer received medical attention from a North Dakota hospital, which subsequently perfected a lien for the value of its services in the amount of $309,000. Hall had no insurance, but the co-owner of the vehicle had a $500,000 policy with Mountain West Farm Bureau (Mountain West). The policy had a step-down provision limiting Mountain West's liability to $25,000 for passengers other than the insured or a relative of the insured, so Mountain West initially found that Kilmer was entitled to only $25,000. However, after negotiating with Kilmer's attorney, Mountain West agreed to proffer the policy limit of $500,000, plus $30,000 in no-fault coverage. Mountain West then filed a complaint for interpleader, the hospital cross-claimed against Kilmer for satisfaction of its lien, and Kilmer cross-claimed against the hospital for a reduction in the hospital's recovery for a pro rata portion of Kilmer's attorney fees incurred in negotiating the settlement with Mountain West. The District Court applied Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont. v. Nichols, 157 M 106, 483 P2d 279 (1971), and held that the hospital was not liable for a pro rata portion of Kilmer's attorney fees. Kilmer appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Under the 1999 version of 71-3-1114 applicable to this case, the hospital had a valid lien for its medical services; however, the statute was silent on the issue of attorney fee apportionment (see, however, 2001 amendments addressing a hospital's pro rata liability for an injured person's attorney fees). Generally, Montana follows the American rule that a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory grant of those fees. There are exceptions to the American rule, one of which is the common fund doctrine authorizing the spread of fees among the individuals who benefit from the litigation that created the common fund. The three elements necessary to establish a common fund, as set out in Means v. Mont. Power Co., 191 M 395, 625 P2d 32 (1981), and Murer v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 283 M 210, 942 P2d 69 (1997), are: (1) one party, known as the active beneficiary, must create, reserve, or increase a common fund; (2) the active beneficiary must incur legal fees in establishing the common fund; and (3) the common fund must benefit ascertainable, nonparticipating beneficiaries. To the extent that there are inequities in the contributions of participating counsel, the court may then intervene to allocate fees accordingly. Because the common fund doctrine was not raised in Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont. v. Nichols, the Supreme Court held that that case did not preclude application of the doctrine in the present case. Thus, the District Court erred as a matter of law in relying on Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont. v. Nichols to grant the hospital's partial summary judgment. Although the Supreme Court declined to rule on the applicability of the common fund doctrine here because the parties did not present arguments in District Court as to whether Kilmer could satisfy the elements of the doctrine, the case was remanded to allow Kilmer to present arguments on the applicability of the common fund doctrine. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Hall, 2001 MT 314, 308 M 29, 38 P3d 825 (2001).

Attorney Fees Not Allowable — No Common Fund Created or Benefits Derived: The District Court properly denied recovery of attorney fees under the common fund doctrine after finding that no common fund was created from which attorney fees and expert witness fees could be paid and that no substantial benefit resulted from the court's opinion. School District v. St., 236 M 44, 769 P2d 684, 46 St. Rep. 169 (1989), distinguishing Means v. Mont. Power Co., 191 M 395, 625 P2d 32, 38 St. Rep. 351 (1981).

Payment Out of "Common Fund": Private organization that won suit seeking to have state barred from denying certain state aid money to high school district was, under the "common fund" doctrine, entitled to recover attorney fees and costs from the common fund, that is, from the state aid money ordered to be paid. Under the common fund doctrine, if a party, through active litigation, creates or increases a fund, others sharing in the fund must bear a portion of the litigation costs, including reasonable attorney fees. Missoula High School Legal Defense Ass'n v. Supt. of Pub. Instruction, 196 M 106, 637 P2d 1188, 38 St. Rep. 2164 (1981).

Duty of State Agency to Compensate Lead Counsel in Consolidated Cases Upheld: In an action against the defendant for damages caused by a range fire in which numerous cases were consolidated and lead counsel appointed for all consolidated cases, the District Court did not err in requiring the plaintiff state agency to compensate lead counsel. There is no basis, either in Disciplinary Rule 2-107 of the Canons of Professional Ethics or elsewhere, for treating the plaintiff differently from any other beneficiary of the litigation because payment for the litigation is founded upon principles of equity and equity demands that all parties receiving a benefit contribute to payment of the expenses. Disciplinary Rule 2-107, regarding the splitting of fees between two lawyers, has no application to court-appointed lead counsel who is paid under the supervision of the court. Means v. Mont. Power Co., 191 M 395, 625 P2d 32, 38 St. Rep. 351 (1981).

Payment of Lead Counsel for Consolidated Cases — "Common Fund" Exception for Unequal Contributions: In an action against the defendant for damages caused by a range fire in which numerous cases were consolidated and lead counsel appointed for all consolidated cases, the trial court did not err in requiring the plaintiff to compensate lead counsel even in the absence of any contract or statutory authority for the compensation. Where a party through active litigation creates a common fund shared by other parties, those parties must bear a portion of the litigation costs, including reasonable attorney fees, if their contribution to the litigation was unequal to the contribution of the active party. Because the record shows that the plaintiff contributed only half or less of the legal services necessary to the cases, the District Court properly ordered compensation. Means v. Mont. Power Co., 191 M 395, 625 P2d 32, 38 St. Rep. 351 (1981), followed in Murer v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 283 M 210, 942 P2d 69, 54 St. Rep. 566 (1997) (Murer III). See also Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. EXCEPTION — STATUTE AWARDING
FEES TO PREVAILING PARTY

Charge-Back Funds From Defendant's Account — Fees and Costs: Plaintiff was entitled to that portion of its attorney fees and costs related to enforcement of a statutory charge-back right as a matter of law. Because plaintiff prevailed on the charge-back claim and received a net judgment, plaintiff was considered the prevailing party and the award of attorney fees and costs to the other party was reversed. Avanta Fed. Credit Union v. Shupak, 2009 MT 458, 354 M 372, 223 P3d 863 (2009), followed in Total Indus. Plant Serv., Inc. v. Turner Indus. Group, LLC, 2013 MT 5, 368 Mont. 189, 294 P.3d 363.

Award of Attorney Fees and Costs Allowed Both for Sanction and as Statutory Fees — Conditions of Dual Award: The District Court awarded attorney fees and costs to defendants as a sanction for plaintiffs' violation of former Rule 11, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Defendants also prevailed on a ditch encroachment claim against plaintiffs and were thus entitled to attorney fees and costs as the prevailing party pursuant to 70-17-112. The Supreme Court noted that in this case, the conduct being punished was distinct under each respective authority, so the District Court was allowed to award attorney fees and costs both for a former Rule 11 violation and pursuant to the statute. However, if attorney fees and costs are awarded as a former Rule 11 sanction, the District Court must ensure that the conduct being sanctioned is not the same conduct for which attorney fees and costs are awarded under the statute because litigants are not entitled to duplicate awards for the same conduct. Byrum v. Andren, 2007 MT 107, 337 M 167, 159 P3d 1062 (2007).

Recovery of Attorney Fees, Including Appeal Costs, Based on Indemnification Provision in Underlying Contract: Four people decided to start a business, but ultimately three decided to opt out and exchange their respective corporate shares of stock for cash. The release agreement also held the three harmless from all causes of action relating to the incorporation and provided an indemnification clause that held each party harmless from and against all liability, claim, loss, damage, or expense, including attorney fees, incurred or required to be paid by the other parties by reason of any breach or failure of observance or performance of any representation, warranty, or covenant or other provision of the agreement. Nevertheless, the corporation subsequently sued one of the three resigning members for breach of fiduciary duty, conversion, actual and constructive fraud, and negligent misrepresentation, seeking $110,000 in general damages and also punitive damages. Defendant counterclaimed that by filing a claim that was barred by the release agreement, the corporation had breached its contract. Following trial, the District Court awarded only $3,673.53 for constructive fraud, but also concluded that all claims based on the parties' contractual relationship were barred. Each party then requested attorney fees as the prevailing party pursuant to the indemnification clause, but the court denied the motions, holding that there was no prevailing party because each party had gained a victory but also suffered a loss. The corporation appealed, seeking attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that pursuant to the reciprocal right under 28-3-704, the corporation had the statutory right to recover attorney fees, but only the fees incurred in defending the breach of contract counterclaim as the prevailing party, pursuant to the contractual indemnification provision. Under the same reasoning, the Supreme Court awarded attorney fees for costs of appeal as well, remanding for a determination of fees. Transaction Network, Inc. v. Wellington Technologies, Inc., 2000 MT 223, 301 M 212, 7 P3d 409, 57 St. Rep. 920 (2000), followed in Peschel Family Trust v. Colonna, 2003 MT 216, 317 M 127, 75 P3d 793 (2003).

Prevailing Party on Ditch Easement Claim Entitled to Attorney Fees and Costs Despite Loss of Separate Counterclaim Related to Road Easement: Espy sued for easement interference related to an underground irrigation system. Quinlan filed a permissive counterclaim, alleging that Espy had interfered with Quinlan's road easement over Espy's property. Following trial, the District Court concluded that: (1) Espy was successful on his claim because he had a valid easement over Quinlan's property for use and maintenance of the irrigation system; (2) Quinlan was successful on her counterclaim because she had a valid road easement over Espy's property; (3) both parties were entitled to a permanent order restraining the other party from interfering with their respective easements; and (4) Espy was entitled to attorney fees and costs as the successful party under 70-17-112. Quinlan appealed the award of attorney fees, contending that because she prevailed on the counterclaim, neither party could be considered a prevailing party. However, Quinlan's counterclaim was not raised in the context of 70-17-112, but was instead related to a road easement. Because Espy successfully prevailed on all claims raised pursuant to 70-17-112, he was entitled to attorney fees and costs regardless of the fact that he was not the prevailing party on the counterclaim. Espy v. Quinlan, 2000 MT 193, 300 M 441, 4 P3d 1212, 57 St. Rep. 764 (2000), distinguishing Knudsen v. Taylor, 211 M 459, 685 P2d 354 (1984). See also Gibson v. Calculation of Attorney Fees Under Federal Fee-Shifting Law: In Ihler I, a class action suit by patients at the state hospital, the case was remanded for recomputation of the lodestar amount. On remand, the District Court eliminated the 50% enhancement for contingency, added fees for representation by the state-employed attorney, did not reassess hourly rates or compensable hours, and denied the request for attorney fees on appeal. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in denying out-of-state hourly rates for out-of-state attorneys. A prevailing party in a section 1988 action does not have the burden of proving that resort to out-of-forum counsel was necessary; instead, a prevailing party has the burden of proving that resort to out-of-forum counsel was reasonable. The Supreme Court further held that: (1) the District Court erred in awarding certain in-state attorney fees that were below the lowest end of the prevailing range; (2) the District Court erred in reducing the patients' requested hours, stating that because it was reasonable to seek out-of-state representation, it also was reasonable to incur the extra expenses associated with out-of-state representation, including travel time; and (3) the District Court erred in denying the patients' attorney fees incurred on appeal. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in refusing to enhance the lodestar figure for undesirability because that was subsumed in the lodestar figure. Ihler v. Chisholm, 2000 MT 37, 298 M 254, 995 P2d 439, 57 St. Rep. 163 (2000).

Award of Fees Under 42 U.S.C. 1988 Upheld — "Lodestar" Method of Fee Calculation Approved: Klock brought an action under 42 U.S.C. 1983 and 42 U.S.C. 1985 against various county, town, and bank officials for violating his civil rights. The defendants filed a motion for summary judgment and a request for attorney fees. The motion was granted, and attorney fees were awarded pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 1988. The Supreme Court upheld the grant of summary judgment, finding that Klock had the burden of responding to the motion with affidavits or other showing of a factual nature and did not meet his burden of proof. Therefore, the Supreme Court also affirmed the District Court on the issue of attorney fees because the lack of facts shown by Klock also showed his claims to be groundless and frivolous. Concerning the amount of the fees, the Supreme Court approved the "lodestar" method applied by the District Court and previously approved by the Supreme Court in Audit Serv., Inc. v. Frontier-West, Inc., 252 M 142, 827 P2d 1224 (1992), and awarded the defendants 25% of their total fees. Klock v. Cascade, 284 M 167, 943 P2d 1262, 54 St. Rep. 829 (1997).

Counterclaim — Party With Net Judgment Prevailing Party: While no one factor should be considered in determining the prevailing party, the party that survives an action involving a counterclaim with the net judgment should generally be considered the successful party. Rustics of Lindbergh Lake, Inc. v. Lease, 213 M 246, 690 P2d 440, 41 St. Rep. 2092 (1984).

"Prevailing Party" When Usury Penalty Assessed Against Party Exceeds That Party's Recovery: Appellants filed an action to recover money due on a promissory note that was usurious on its face. The District Court assessed a usury penalty against appellants which exceeded the balance due on the note. Thus, the net judgment was in favor of respondents. The court then assessed attorney fees against the appellants. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that respondents had been properly found to be the prevailing party. E.C.A. Envtl. Management Serv., Inc. v. Toenyes, 208 M 336, 679 P2d 213, 41 St. Rep. 388 (1984), followed in Doig v. Cascaddan, 282 M 105, 935 P2d 268, 54 St. Rep. 263 (1997).

REASONABLENESS

Mandatory Fees Pursuant to Contract — Waiver of Hearing — District Court Award Undisturbed: The Burrell grandchildren entered into a settlement agreement awarding attorney fees but, when fees were awarded against them, appealed the award. Citing In re Marriage of Szafryk, 2010 MT 90, 356 Mont. 141, 232 P.3d 361, the Supreme Court held that when a conscionable contract requires payment of fees, the District Court lacks discretion to deny them. The court also held that no evidentiary hearing on the amount of fees was necessary because the grandchildren had failed to request a hearing and therefore, under the court's ruling in JTL Group, Inc. v. New Outlook, LLP, 2010 MT 1, 355 Mont. 1, 223 P.3d 912, waived the hearing. The Supreme Court also held, citing Talon Plumbing v. St., 2008 MT 376, 346 Mont. 499, 198 P.3d 213, that it will not reverse an award of fees based upon competent evidence absent an abuse of discretion. In re Estate of Burrell, 2010 MT 280, 358 Mont. 460, 245 P.3d 1106, and followed in Boyne USA, Inc. v. Spanish Peaks Dev., LLC, 2013 MT 1, 368 Mont. 143, 292 P.3d 432, in which the Supreme Court concluded that a contractual provision that provides for attorney fees includes attorney fees on appeal.

Federal Claims Against City Council Members Acting in Individual Capacities — No Attorney Fees for Prevailing City Council Members: In a federal suit based on 42 U.S.C. 1983, plaintiff sued City Council members in their individual capacities. The District Court held that plaintiff should have known that 2-9-305(5) shielded the City Council members from suit, summarily dismissed plaintiff's claim, and awarded the City Council members' attorney fees pursuant to the frivolous claim provisions of 42 U.S.C. 1988. On appeal, plaintiff relied on Martinez v. Calif., 444 US 277 (1980), and Miller v. Red Lodge, 2003 MT 44, 314 M 278, 65 P3d 562 (2003) (citing Reisdorff v. Yellowstone County, 1999 MT 280, 296 M 525, 989 P2d 850 (1999)), for the proposition that state law cannot immunize federal claims. The Supreme Court distinguished those cases as too broad a recitation of the immunity proposition, citing instead Felder v. Casey, 487 US 131 (1988), for the holding that when state courts entertain a federally created cause of action, the federal right cannot be defeated by the forms of local practice and that any assessment of the applicability of state law to federal civil rights litigation must be made in light of the purpose and nature of the federal right. The main objective of 42 U.S.C. 1983 is to ensure that individuals who have suffered a deprivation of constitutional or statutory rights are afforded relief through damages or injunction. Although affording immunity to the City Council members would not have thwarted the objective of the federal law, the Supreme Court nevertheless declined to conclude that plaintiff should have known that 2-9-305(5) shielded the City Council members from suit or to consider as unreasonable plaintiff's federal claims against the City Council members in their individual capacities. Plaintiff's claim was therefore not frivolous, and the City Council members were not entitled to attorney fees pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 1988. Germann v. Stephens, 2006 MT 130, 332 M 303, 137 P3d 545 (2006), clarifying Kiely Constr. v. Red Lodge, 2002 MT 241, 312 M 52, 57 P3d 836 (2002).

Proper Calculation of Fractional Partnership Interest — Attorney Fees Based on Fractional Interest Affirmed: Six brothers had equal interests in a farming operation. Four of the brothers sought to buy out the interests of the other two. One brother, Marvin, refused to sell, but the other, Larry, agreed, so Larry's interest was divided between the four participating brothers, giving each an additional 4% ownership interest. The four then mortgaged the partnership's interest without Marvin's consent. In winding up the partnership, the District Court found that Marvin still had a one-sixth interest and that because he was aware of Larry's buyout but declined to participate, Marvin was not entitled to any portion of the buyout. Marvin appealed on grounds that the District Court miscalculated his fractional interest because mortgaging the partnership interest without his consent was a breach of duty and the partnership agreement, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Marvin could not demonstrate that he was damaged by the breach of duty and the partnership agreement. Marvin's interest was not mortgaged, nor did Marvin become obligated to Larry through the buyout. Thus, the District Court properly calculated Marvin's fractional partnership interest. Further, because Marvin retained a one-sixth interest, the District Court correctly charged Marvin with one-sixth of the attorney fees incurred in the dissolution. Pankratz Farms, Inc. v. Pankratz, 2004 MT 180, 322 M 133, 95 P3d 671 (2004).

Attorney Fees in Excess of Damages — Not Unreasonable: In light of the complexity of the litigation and the time spent in preparing the case, the District Court did not err in awarding attorney fees in a contract case in an amount approximately four times the amount of damages recovered. Morning Star Enterprises, Inc. v. R.H. Grover, Inc., 247 M 105, 805 P2d 553, 48 St. Rep. 112 (1991).

No Clear Segregation of Time — Reasonable Fee: The Supreme Court, recalling its decision in St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Cumiskey, 204 M 350, 665 P2d 223, 40 St. Rep. 891 (1983), held that when an attorney's time cannot clearly be segregated, he is entitled to a reasonable fee for the entire case. Donnes v. Orlando, 221 M 356, 720 P2d 233, 43 St. Rep. 890 (1986), followed in Blue Ridge Homes, Inc. v. Thein, 2008 MT 264, 345 M 125, 191 P3d 374 (2008).

Award of Fees Reasonable — Appeal to Clarify Alternative Judgment Not Frivolous: In an original judgment of October 31, 1979, plaintiffs were given the alternatives of either repairing a damaged irrigation ditch or paying damages of $5,500. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court, and in Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981), the court found substantial evidence to support the District Court's findings. This became the law of the case. The case was remanded for a determination of attorney fees to be awarded to defendant. On remand, attorneys for defendant requested fees of $11,000. The District Court awarded fees of $2,000 based on testimony received. The Supreme Court found that this finding was not clearly erroneous. The court also declined to award attorney fees for the appeal under former Rule 32, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), because plaintiffs were justified in bringing the appeal to clarify the alternative judgment. Marta v. Smith, 200 M 414, 650 P2d 1387, 39 St. Rep. 1839 (1982).

Reasonableness of Attorney Fees for Lead Counsel in Consolidated Cases Upheld: In an action against the defendant for damages caused by a range fire in which numerous cases were consolidated and lead counsel appointed for the consolidated cases, the trial court did not err in awarding lead counsel $47,222.22 in attorney fees to be paid by the plaintiff. In determining the reasonableness of a fee, the Supreme Court, in First Sec. Bank of Bozeman v. Tholkes, 169 M 422, 547 P2d 1328 (1976), established the guidelines to be considered by the trial court. The fee awarded was 11.1% of the plaintiff's recovery and was awarded only after extensive testimony relating to the guidelines to be considered. Under these circumstances, no abuse of discretion was found. Means v. Mont. Power Co., 191 M 395, 625 P2d 32, 38 St. Rep. 351 (1981), followed in Murer v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 283 M 210, 942 P2d 69, 54 St. Rep. 566 (1997) (Murer III).

GENERAL

Attorney Fees — Rates for Kalispell Attorneys Working in Lincoln County Properly Awarded: The plaintiff sued Lincoln County and several of its Commissioners regarding the resignation and appointment process for Commissioners. After the District Court granted summary judgment to the defendants, they requested and were awarded attorney fees. The plaintiff claimed that the District Court had erred in awarding fees for rates for attorneys from Kalispell instead of rates for an attorney from Lincoln County. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the award of attorney fees at the hourly rate of the Kalispell attorneys, agreeing that it was reasonable for them to perform work in Lincoln County. Swapinski v. Lincoln County, 2015 MT 275, 381 Mont. 138, 357 P.3d 329.

Fees-for-Fees Improper Absent Exceptional Circumstances — Fee Award Vacated to Remove Additional Fees: The plaintiff sued Lincoln County and several of its Commissioners regarding the resignation and appointment process for Commissioners. After the District Court granted summary judgment to the defendants, they requested and were awarded attorney fees. The plaintiff opposed the award of fees, and the District Court held a hearing on the amount of the fees, awarding the defendants additional attorney fees for proving the reasonableness of the underlying fee award. On appeal, the Supreme Court vacated the fee award, holding that no exceptional circumstances warranted the additional fees. Swapinski v. Lincoln County, 2015 MT 275, 381 Mont. 138, 357 P.3d 329.

Attorney Fees on Prior Appeal: The plaintiffs sued the city related to the widening of a city road and the taking of their property for that purpose. The city lost in District Court and appealed the decision to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court affirmed in part and reversed in part and remanded the case to the District Court to recalculate the amount of damages owed to the plaintiffs. The city claimed that the plaintiffs were not entitled to fees and costs incurred during the appeal because they did not prevail on their cross-appeal. The plaintiffs argued that they were the prevailing party and thus were entitled to fees and costs incurred during both the underlying litigation and the appeal. The District Court agreed and awarded fees and costs as requested by the plaintiffs. The city appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed the award, noting that the plaintiffs had a constitutional right to be made whole in a condemnation case in which the landowner prevails. Wohl v. Missoula, 2014 MT 310, 377 Mont. 148, 339 P.3d 58.

Award Based On Hourly Fee Upheld Even Though Defendants Signed Contingency Agreement — Fee Amount Within District Court's Discretion: The defendants prevailed on a counterclaim for specific performance under a lease that included an option to purchase the land. At the hearing on attorney fees, the defendants provided testimony that they had signed a contingent fee agreement and that the $585,966 in attorney fees claimed was based on the contingent share of the fair market value of the land minus the lease's purchase option price for the land. The District Court rejected the total fee claim as unreasonable and instead awarded attorney fees on an hourly basis in the amount of $98,431. The defendants cross-appealed the District Court's action, but the Supreme Court denied the claim. Concluding that the District Court had properly assessed the reasonableness of the claim based on the factors outlined in Plath v. Schonrock, 2003 MT 21, 314 Mont. 101, 64 P.3d 984, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion and therefore upheld the hourly award. Shephard v. Widhalm, 2012 MT 276, 367 Mont. 166, 290 P.3d 712.

Attorney Fees Limited to Time Spent on Claim or Theory Allowing Fees: When attorney fees related to a contract claim and a negligence claim were not separated by the prevailing party, it was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to limit the award. In a lawsuit involving multiple claims or multiple theories, an award of attorney fees must be based on the time spent by the prevailing party's attorney on the claim or theory under which attorney fees are allowable. DiMarzio v. Crazy Mtn. Constr., Inc., 2010 MT 231, 358 Mont. 119, 243 P.3d 718, following Emmerson v. Walker, 2010 MT 167, 357 Mont. 166, 236 P.3d 598.

No Prejudgment Interest When Damages Uncertain or Disputed: The District Court correctly interpreted the law when it refused to award prejudgment interest when there were issues as to: (1) whether a contract existed; (2) if there was a contract, whether there was a breach; and (3) if there was a breach, the extent of damages. A party is not entitled to prejudgment interest when the amount of that party's damages is uncertain or disputed. DiMarzio v. Crazy Mtn. Constr., Inc., 2010 MT 231, 358 Mont. 119, 243 P.3d 718, following Mont. Petroleum Tank Release Comp. Bd. v. Crumleys, Inc., 2008 MT 2, 341 Mont. 33, 174 P.3d 948.

No Abuse of Discretion in Award of Attorney Fees: A wage claimant was properly awarded his attorney fees by the District Court for defending and ultimately prevailing in his wage claim. Talon Plumbing & Heating, Inc. v. Dept. of Labor & Industry, 2008 MT 376, 346 M 499, 198 P3d 213 (2008).

Proper Award of Reasonable Attorney Fees in Water Rights Case: Defendant contended that the District Court erred in awarding attorney fees to plaintiffs because plaintiffs were not awarded all water rights they had sought in litigation and thus could not be considered to have been the prevailing party. The District Court considered testimony on the amount and character of the attorney services and the labor, time, and trouble involved and noted that the water rights litigation was of extreme importance to both parties and justified significant work performed by the attorneys. The court concluded that plaintiffs' attorney had secured a valuable result for plaintiffs and that the attorney's fee statements were sufficiently detailed and reasonable. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in awarding plaintiffs' attorney fees and affirmed. Kruer v. Three Creeks Ranch of Wy., L.L.C., 2008 MT 315, 346 M 66, 194 P3d 634 (2008). See also Plath v. Schonrock, 2003 MT 21, 314 M 101, 64 P3d 984 (2003). Plath was followed in Bitterroot River Protective Ass'n v. Bitterroot Conserv. District, 2011 MT 51, 359 Mont. 393, 251 P.3d 131.

Method for Resolving Fee Disputes in Contingency Fee Cases When Attorney Dissociates From Firm and Continues to Represent Clients: Attorney Halverson worked on plaintiff's case for 6 months before resigning from the firm. Plaintiff decided to remain with Halverson and discharged the firm. Halverson accepted the representation and reimbursed the firm upon transfer of the case. The firm then filed a lien on any potential attorney fees recovered in plaintiff's case. Plaintiff was ultimately awarded nearly $4 million in damages and moved to determine the amount that the firm was entitled to pursuant to the lien. Based on Halverson's affidavit of hours spent on the case while Halverson was at the firm, the District Court calculated quantum meruit by multiplying the number of hours Halverson worked on the case while at the firm by Halverson's proposed hourly rate and awarded the firm $3,750. The firm appealed on grounds that quantum meruit was an inequitable way to apportion fees under these circumstances. The Supreme Court adopted the methodology in Phil Watson, P.C. v. Peterson, 650 NW 2d 562 (Iowa 2002), to resolve fee disputes in contingency fee cases when an attorney dissociates from a firm and continues to represent clients originally represented by the firm. The court agreed that quantum meruit provided the proper measure of fees to the firm awarded after Halverson left the firm and represented the original firm's entitlement. A court shall award to the original firm a fee based on a percentage of total time that the firm spent on the case while the departing attorney worked at the firm compared to the time that the departing attorney worked on the case after leaving the firm. However, the court disagreed on the method of calculation based only on Halverson's affidavit. The court remanded for an evidentiary hearing to allow Halverson and the firm to present evidence regarding the amount of time that Halverson spent on the case while employed by the firm compared to the amount of time spent on the case after Halverson left the firm and directed the District Court to then recalculate the firm's award based on that percentage. Pumphrey v. Empire Lath & Plaster, 2006 MT 255, 334 M 102, 144 P3d 813 (2006).

Improper Premise for Award of Plaintiff's Attorney Fees Based on Defendant's Affidavit — Abuse of Discretion Warranting Reversal: Plaintiff sought attorney fees on a Construction lien foreclosure. The District Court agreed that reasonable attorney fees were owed, but the court premised the amount on an affidavit submitted by defendant 19 months after the hearing without allowing plaintiff the opportunity to hear testimony and cross-examine. The Supreme Court held that the affidavit was not competent evidence. Because the District Court abused its discretion in awarding attorney fees in this manner, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded for a hearing in which both parties would have equal opportunity to present and hear relevant testimony and undertake necessary cross-examination. The court also affirmed that plaintiff was entitled to postjudgment interest on its legal fees from the date of the original judgment in which the District Court determined that plaintiff was entitled to its then-undetermined fees and costs. James Talcott Constr., Inc. v. P&D Land Enterprises, 2006 MT 188, 333 M 107, 141 P3d 1200 (2006), following Glaspey v. Workman, 234 M 374, 763 P2d 666 (1988).

Attorney Fees Through Fee-Shifting, but Limited Fees-for-Fees, Recoverable for Defendants Under Declaration of Covenants: A declaration of covenants provided that the applicant for relief was entitled to recover attorney fees in any action for enforcement of the covenants. Plaintiffs applied for relief, but defendants were granted summary judgment and sought attorney fees. Plaintiffs contended that defendants were not allowed attorney fees under the declaration because defendants were not the applicant for relief. However, 28-3-704 renders contractual fee-shifting provisions reciprocal, so as the prevailing party, defendants were entitled to reasonable attorney fees, including fees-for-fees to the extent that attorney fees were incurred in establishing defendants' entitlement to fees under the contract. Defendants' claim for attorney fees for fees incurred in establishing the amount of attorney fees was not compensable under the contract, and the District Court erred in awarding attorney fees to defendants incurred in establishing the amount of fees. In addition, the court erred in awarding defendants' attorney fees incurred in securing the withdrawal of plaintiffs' attorney because of a conflict of interest because that cost was not a necessary expense of enforcement of the declaration. Because the District Court erred by awarding defendants all legal costs without making an effort to ascertain the specific source of the costs, the issue was remanded for a proper determination of fees, particularly fees-for-fees, that defendants could recover. Chase v. Bearpaw Ranch Ass'n, 2006 MT 67, 331 M 421, 133 P3d 190 (2006).

Hearing Not Required Before Decision Made to Award Attorney Fees: Plaintiffs contended that because the District Court awarded but did not hold a hearing to set a specific amount for attorney fees within 60 days after granting summary judgment to defendants, the court lost jurisdiction to amend the judgment to award attorney fees. The Supreme Court noted that there is a distinction between a court's decision to award attorney fees and a court's determination of the proper measure of fees. An evidentiary hearing must be held before attorney fees may be awarded in any specific amount, but a hearing need not be held before a court may decide to award attorney fees. Thus, 51 days after defendants filed their motion, the District Court had authority to grant defendant's request for attorney fees. Chase v. Bearpaw Ranch Ass'n, 2006 MT 67, 331 M 421, 133 P3d 190 (2006), following Plath v. Schonrock, 2003 MT 21, 314 M 101, 64 P3d 984 (2003). See also Assoc. Press v. Crofts, 2004 MT 120, 321 M 193, 89 P3d 971 (2004), and In re Estate of Burrell, 2010 MT 280, 358 Mont. 460, 245 P.3d 1106.

Proper Calculation of Fractional Partnership Interest — Attorney Fees Based on Fractional Interest Affirmed: Six brothers had equal interests in a farming operation. Four of the brothers sought to buy out the interests of the other two. One brother, Marvin, refused to sell, but the other, Larry, agreed, so Larry's interest was divided between the four participating brothers, giving each an additional 4% ownership interest. The four then mortgaged the partnership's interest without Marvin's consent. In winding up the partnership, the District Court found that Marvin still had a one-sixth interest and that because he was aware of Larry's buyout but declined to participate, Marvin was not entitled to any portion of the buyout. Marvin appealed on grounds that the District Court miscalculated his fractional interest because mortgaging the partnership interest without his consent was a breach of duty and the partnership agreement, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Marvin could not demonstrate that he was damaged by the breach of duty and the partnership agreement. Marvin's interest was not mortgaged, nor did Marvin become obligated to Larry through the buyout. Thus, the District Court properly calculated Marvin's fractional partnership interest. Further, because Marvin retained a one-sixth interest, the District Court correctly charged Marvin with one-sixth of the attorney fees incurred in the dissolution. Pankratz Farms, Inc. v. Pankratz, 2004 MT 180, 322 M 133, 95 P3d 671 (2004).

Attorney Fees Proper to Defend Untimely and Inappropriate Nonmeritorious Action: An award of attorney fees to plaintiff was within the District Court's discretion when plaintiff, as a wholly innocent party, was forced to employ counsel to defend a nonmeritorious motion that was both untimely and inappropriate. Connell v. Dept. of Social and Rehabilitation Services, 2003 MT 361, 319 M 69, 81 P3d 1279 (2003), following Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114 (1978). Pro Rata Calculation of Attorney Fees Based on Percentage of Plaintiff's Successful Claims Rejected: The District Court awarded plaintiff attorney fees for a breach of warranty claim against a siding installer and a siding manufacturer, which was the only theory based on contract for which plaintiff received a verdict against both defendants. To calculate the award, the court allocated the total amount of time expended by plaintiff's attorneys among the seven claims that existed prior to summary judgment and the three claims that existed thereafter on a pro rata basis, awarding plaintiff one-seventh of the attorneys' time expended prior to summary judgment and one-third of their time after summary judgment. Plaintiff contended that the pro rata calculation was in error, and the Supreme Court agreed. A similar mathematical approach was rejected by the U.S. Supreme Court in Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 US 424 (1983), as providing little aid in determining what is a reasonable fee in light of all relevant factors. The award was also inconsistent with the guidelines established in Swenson v. Janke, 274 M 354, 908 P2d 678 (1995), for determining a reasonable fee award, and because the District Court failed to consider the Swenson factors, the award was remanded for recalculation. Insurer's Breach of Duty to Indemnify — Recovery of Attorney Fees by Injured Third-Party Claimant Who Prevails in Insurance Coverage Action Against Motor Vehicle Liability Insurer — Modification of Insurance Exception — Standard of Review of Question of Law: Following remand in Christensen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 2000 MT 378, 303 M 493, 22 P3d 624 (2000), the Christensens requested attorney fees incurred in the declaratory judgment action. The District Court denied the request, and the Christensens appealed. Generally, under the American rule, a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory provision, although equitable exceptions are recognized. Here, the parties agreed that there was no contractual authority to support an award of attorney fees, although the Supreme Court held in Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum, 2003 MT 97, 315 M 210, 69 P3d 663 (2003), that 27-8-313 authorizes a District Court to award attorney fees when the court, in its discretion, considers such an award to be necessary or proper. The Christensens submitted that the defendant insurer was obligated to reimburse them based on the insurance exception rationale articulated in Home Ins. Co. v. Pinski Bros., Inc., 160 M 219, 500 P2d 945 (1972), which approved an award of attorney fees in cases in which an insurer breaches its obligation to defend an insured. The Supreme Court noted that the issue presented a question of law, so the standard of review was whether the District Court's interpretation of law was correct. The Supreme Court held that an insurer that breaches its duty to indemnify is liable for attorney fees when an insured is forced to assume the burden of legal action to obtain the full benefit of the insurance contract, regardless of whether the insurer's duty to defend is at issue. However, in this case, the Christensens were third-party beneficiaries, and the Supreme Court declined to extend the insurance exception to third-party claimants because that would sanction attorney fee awards for simply demonstrating the existence of any insurance contract from which a third-party claimant successfully established coverage, which would undermine the American rule. Thus, although the Christensens were precluded from recovering attorney fees under the obligatory insurance exception, the case was remanded for a determination of whether attorney fees were necessary or proper under 27-8-313 and Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Brewer, 2003 MT 98, 315 M 231, 69 P3d 652 (2003), followed in Hernandez v. Yellowstone County Comm'rs, 2008 MT 251, 345 M 1, 189 P3d 638 (2008), with regard to award of attorney fees only to a prevailing party under the private attorney general theory, and overruling Yovish v. United Serv. Auto. Ass'n, 243 M 284, 794 P2d 682 (1990).

No Waiver of Attorney Fees by Injured Third-Party Claimant Who Prevails in Insurance Coverage Action on Remand: Following remand in Christensen v. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co., 2000 MT 378, 303 M 493, 22 P3d 624 (2000), the Christensens requested attorney fees incurred in the declaratory judgment action. The District Court denied the request, and the Christensens appealed. Defendant insurer argued that because the Christensens never requested attorney fees in their motion for summary judgment or in their first appeal, their right to attorney fees was waived. Former Rule 8(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), requires that a party give notice of facts that the party expects to prove, and the facts must disclose the presence of all elements necessary to make out a claim. In this case, the defendant insurer had notice of the Christensens' desire to seek attorney fees because that relief was specifically prayed for in the initial petition for declaratory judgment, and defendant successfully defended against that request in District Court. However, the Christensens did not prevail until the case was remanded, so waiting to file a motion for attorney fees until prevailing on appeal was proper. Thus, the Christensens did not waive their entitlement to attorney fees. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Brewer, 2003 MT 98, 315 M 231, 69 P3d 652 (2003), following Kunst v. Pass, 1998 M 71, 288 M 264, 957 P2d 1 (1998).

Attorney Fees Not Considered Costs — Declaratory Judgment Equitable Exception to Rule That Attorney Fees Not Awarded Absent Contractual or Statutory Provision: The District Court initially awarded costs and attorney fees to defendants for defending a declaratory judgment action. Plaintiff moved under former Rule 59(g), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), to strike the award of attorney fees. The District Court then concluded that it lacked authority to award attorney fees because plaintiff did not force defendants to defend against a frivolous or malicious action, so the court struck the award of attorney fees, and defendants appealed. Generally, under the American rule, a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory provision, although equitable exceptions are recognized. Section 27-8-311 provides that in any proceeding under Title 27, ch. 8, equitable and just costs may be awarded, but attorney fees are not, in any proper sense, considered part of the costs in a case and thus are not allowed as costs under 27-8-311. However, 27-8-313 draws no distinction between declaratory judgment actions adjudicating the rights of an insured against an insurer and actions adjudicating rights outside the confines of an insurance policy, so a court may award attorney fees pursuant to 27-8-313 when the court, in its discretion, considers such an award necessary or proper. Therefore, after finding that the District Court erred in concluding that it lacked authority to award attorney fees, the Supreme Court reversed for a determination of whether an award of attorney fees was necessary or proper in this case. Trustees of Ind. Univ. v. Buxbaum, 2003 MT 97, 315 M 210, 69 P3d 663 (2003), overruling State ex rel. Swart v. Casne, 172 M 302, 564 P2d 983 (1977), State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Lincoln County, 178 M 410, 584 P2d 1293 (1978), State ex rel. Leach v. Visser, 234 M 438, 767 P2d 858 (1988), McKamey v. St., 268 M 137, 885 P2d 515 (1994), and Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121 (1998), to the extent that those cases hold that a District Court has no discretionary authority to award attorney fees in a declaratory judgment action.

Prevailing on State Claim but Not on Federal Section 1983 Claim — No Attorney Fees Under Federal Law Rule for Section 1983 Claim: The city approved a preliminary application for plat approval, subject to 26 conditions imposed by the city, and the developer sued the city for imposing the conditions. Although the developer prevailed on its claims under state law, it did not prevail on its federal section 1983 claim that the city acted arbitrarily and capriciously in imposing conditions when the city conditionally approved the preliminary plat application. Therefore, the developer was not entitled to attorney fees under the rule that a prevailing section 1983 plaintiff should ordinarily recover attorney fees unless special circumstances would render an award unjust. Kiely Constr. v. Red Lodge, 2002 MT 241, 312 M 52, 57 P3d 836 (2002).

No Attorney Fees for Plaintiffs Whose State Constitutional Rights Local Peace Officers Violated: Brothers filed a civil action against the Sheriff and two deputies for damages for violation of the brothers' Montana constitutional rights to privacy, due process, and freedom from unreasonable searches and seizures. The peace officers had used writs of execution upon judgments against one brother, who lived with the other brother, to enter the house that the other brother owned and to search for and seize personal property to satisfy the judgments. The court held that neither the writs nor the statutes that they were issued under authorized the entry, search, and seizure, that the three rights are self-executing, and that the brothers were entitled to damages. However, the brothers were not entitled to attorney fees because there was neither a contractual agreement nor a statute providing for payment of the fees. Dorwart v. Caraway, 2002 MT 240, 312 M 1, 58 P3d 128 (2002).

No Breach or Loss — Attorney Fees to Prevailing Party: Both parties claimed to be the prevailing party in a contract action and sought attorney fees. The District Court acknowledged that defendant was the net prevailing party by winning a counterclaim for breach of contract and an award of lost profits, but found that defendant was the initial breaching party and denied attorney fees to either party. Defendant appealed. The Supreme Court noted that in the underlying case, Grenfell v. Anderson, 1999 MT 272, 296 M 474, 989 P2d 818 (1999), defendant did not receive either actual or constructive notice from plaintiff that defendant was in default on the agreement, so the 10-day period for defendant to cure the default did not commence. Therefore, the District Court erred in concluding that defendant was the initial breaching party by merely being in default on the agreement. Because defendant was not a breaching party and did not suffer a loss as a result of the litigation, the District Court did not have discretion to deny defendant attorney fees as the only prevailing party in the action. The case was remanded for an award of attorney fees to defendant. Grenfell v. Anderson, 2002 MT 225, 311 M 385, 56 P3d 326 (2002), distinguishing Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390 (1999).

Award of Attorney Fees Based on Party's Deception, Contradiction, and Fraud and Party's Attorney's Needless Protraction of Litigation: The appellant in a probate and guardianship case was found to have employed deception, contradiction, and fraud, resulting in the expenditure of considerable time, effort, and expense in the attempt to arrive at a reasonable understanding of the condition of the guardianship estate and the ownership of estate property. The appellant's attorney was found to have taken every opportunity to obstruct and avoid a resolution of the issues by filing questionable motions for dismissal and sanctions, taking positions that were not supported by law or facts, and failing to mediate in good faith, thereby protracting the litigation at considerable expense to the respondents. The District Court ordered appellant to pay 80% of the respondents' attorney fees and costs and ordered appellant's attorney to pay the remaining 20%. There was substantial evidence in the record to support the award, which the Supreme Court affirmed. The court declined to address the reasonableness of the award because appellant did not object to the bill of expenses when given the opportunity to challenge the amount, instead challenging the reasonableness of the award for the first time on appeal. In re Estate of McDermott, 2002 MT 164, 310 M 435, 51 P3d 486 (2002).

Federal Civil Rights Claim Resulting From Clerical Error Considered Vexatious — Attorney Fees Awarded to Prevailing Party: Shepherd held an assignment of the tax sale certificate on real property in Red Lodge. A few days before the redemption period was to expire, the owner of record redeemed the property by paying $4,407.28, but the County Treasurer unintentionally overlooked an additional $56.30 in interest that had accrued between the date that notice was given that a tax deed would be issued and the date of redemption. Shepherd then filed a complaint under 42 U.S.C. 1983, alleging that the county's failure to collect the statutorily required amount for redemption deprived him of a property interest without due process of law. Shepherd sought $250,000 in general damages, punitive damages, and attorney fees and costs. Shortly thereafter, the county tendered Shepherd $56.30 plus interest, but Shepherd rejected the money and added a negligence claim to the complaint, based on the County Treasurer's improper extinguishment of the lien. The District Court summarily dismissed the negligence claim, and the county sought attorney fees, citing Hughes v. Rowe, 449 US 5 (1980), for the proposition that the prevailing party in a section 1983 case is entitled to attorney fees if plaintiff continued to litigate after it became apparent that the action lacked factual or legal substance. The District Court found that Shepherd's action was not unreasonable or vexatious, and declined to award attorney fees to the county. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that Shepherd's civil rights claim, resulting from a clerical error amounting to $56.30 in damages, was groundless, meritless, and vexatious. Even when Shepherd was tendered the full amount owed, he proceeded to cavalierly engage in litigation that required the county to defend the meritless claim. The case was remanded for a determination of the amount to which the county was entitled in attorney fees and costs associated with the motion to dismiss the federal civil rights claim. Shepherd v. Carbon County Bd. of Comm'rs, 2002 MT 98, 309 M 391, 46 P3d 634 (2002).

Test for Determining Prevailing Party in Mixed Motive Employment Discrimination Case: Laudert suffered liver failure while employed by the Richland County Sheriff's Department (RCSD) and had to resign. Following Laudert's full recovery, his former position came open again and he applied but was not rehired. He filed a discrimination charge on grounds of age and disability. The hearings examiner found that questions asked by the RCSD interview panel constituted direct evidence that RCSD had unlawfully considered Laudert's disability, but did not award damages because Laudert would not have been hired even in the absence of any unlawful consideration of his disability. The District Court held that Laudert was not entitled to attorney fees because he did not prevail on the ultimate basis for his petition. Laudert appealed the denial of attorney fees, asserting that because the hearings examiner found that his disability had been unlawfully considered and because affirmative relief was awarded against RCSD in the form of an injunctive order requiring RCSD to submit a written policy regarding hiring procedures, including guidelines regarding future inquiry into applicant disabilities, he was the prevailing party. The Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in applying the "central issue" and "primary relief sought" tests for determining the prevailing party, analyses expressly repudiated in Tex. St. Teachers Ass'n v. Garland Independent School District, 489 US 782 (1989). Requiring plaintiff to prevail on the ultimate basis for a petition is an inappropriate test for determining whether attorney fees should be awarded under 49-2-505. Under Farrar v. Hobby, 506 US 103 (1992), a plaintiff prevails when actual relief on the merits of the claim materially alters the legal relationship between the parties by modifying the defendant's behavior in a way that directly benefits the plaintiff. Here, the order of affirmative injunctive relief clearly modified RCSD's behavior. However, the Supreme Court rejected the Farrar requirement that a plaintiff secure a direct benefit at the time of the judgment in order to be a prevailing party because that requirement would not further the purpose of awarding attorney fees under Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act. Complaints of civil rights abuses that successfully establish a finding of discrimination and an order of injunctive relief are the type of meritorious litigation that should be encouraged. The District Court's determination that Laudert did not prevail because RCSD proved it would have made the same hiring decision, despite its consideration of Laudert's disability, was reversible error. Laudert v. Richland County Sheriff's Dept., 2000 MT 218, 301 M 114, 7 P3d 386, 57 St. Rep. 872 (2000). Following remand for determination of a reasonable fee award under 49-2-505, the District Court noted that Laudert was the prevailing party in the 2000 case, even though Laudert's request for damages was denied, and awarded Laudert's counsel fees for all time expended. The RCSD appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The Supreme Court cited Pa. v. Del. Valley Citizens' Council for Clean Air, 478 US 546 (1986), for the strong presumption, given the rationale behind fee-shifting provisions, that the lodestar amount is a reasonable fee, noting that fee-shifting statutes were not designed to be windfalls for attorneys or to replicate the amount that an attorney would receive in other types of litigation, but rather to enable private parties to retain the legal assistance necessary to seek redress when their rights are violated. The court also applied the two-step approach in Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 US 424 (1983), to address other considerations that may lead to a fee adjustment in cases when attorney fees are recoverable by a partially prevailing plaintiff in pursuit of unsuccessful claims. Under Hensley, an attorney should receive fees for the full services provided when plaintiff has obtained excellent results, even if plaintiff does not prevail on every claim. In this case, Laudert achieved the level of success necessary to support the award of the full amount of fees claimed, and the District Court did not err in awarding the full amount. No Attorney Fees Awarded Absent Prevailing Party: H-D Irrigating, Inc., bought land and irrigation equipment from Hobble Diamond Cattle Company and Kimble Properties, Inc., respectively, then sued both companies for constructive fraud when the land eroded and caused damage to the irrigation system. The District Court held that neither party was the prevailing party and that each party was responsible for its own attorney fees and costs. The Supreme Court agreed. Generally, attorney fees are not recoverable absent a statutory or contractual provision. Here, both parties gained a victory but also suffered a loss, and the District Court did not abuse its discretion when it did not award attorney fees. H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000). See also McCauley v. Thompson-Nistler, 2000 MT 215, 301 M 81, 10 P3d 794, 57 St. Rep. 855 (2000).

Payment for Attorney Who Voluntarily Withdraws From Contingent Fee Case Before Occurrence of Contingency Based on Good Cause for Withdrawal — Modern Majority Rule: Sullivan retained plaintiff Bell & Marra, pllc, to represent him in an employment termination case, entering a contingent fee agreement for payment. Plaintiff represented Sullivan through two trials and settlement negotiations, after which it sent Sullivan a letter stating that it could not continue under the written 40% contingent arrangement and demanding that, in order to continue representation, Sullivan deposit $2,000 to cover costs of appeal transcripts and agree to pay plaintiff a percentage of all settlement proceeds, judgment damages, and other consideration recovered from the employer in the amount of 50% for appeal and subsequent trial for discrimination or wrongful discharge and an additional 5% for each appeal thereafter. Sullivan declined the ultimatum and hired new counsel. Upon settlement of Sullivan's employment claim, plaintiff filed: (1) a lien foreclosure action for payment of fees involving the employment claim, including advanced costs plus 40% of the recovery or the quantum meruit value of the legal services performed computed on an hourly basis; (2) a contract action related to fees incurred during representation of Sullivan's dissolution proceedings; and (3) a claim against Sullivan's employer requesting that settlement proceeds be held or paid to plaintiff according to the lien against Sullivan. Sullivan asserted affirmative defenses, including fraud, unavailability of quantum meruit damages because of plaintiff's repudiation of the fee agreement, and breach of fiduciary duty, as well as counterclaims for breach of contract, conversion, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and breach of fiduciary duty. The District Court concluded that whether plaintiff withdrew or was fired was irrelevant and that the parties simply terminated the attorney-client relationship. The court then denied Sullivan's motions and counterclaims and granted summary judgment to plaintiff on all issues, awarding plaintiff attorney fees for the employment-related litigation at the contract rate of 40% minus the amount in the fee arrangement with Sullivan's subsequent attorney; fees and costs incurred during Sullivan's dissolution action; outstanding costs for the employment litigation; prejudgment interest on the damage awards; and plaintiff's attorney fees and costs incurred in pursuing the foreclosure action. Sullivan appealed the summary judgment. In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court adopted the modern majority rule, which holds that an attorney who voluntarily withdraws from a contingency fee case without good cause forfeits recovery of compensation for services performed, but if withdrawal was for good cause or was justified, the attorney may recover based on quantum meruit. Whether good cause exists depends on the facts and circumstances of each case. Good cause exists when a client has engaged in culpable conduct, when continued representation would violate an attorney's ethical obligations, or when an attorney lacks the resources to pursue litigation. However, a client's refusal to accept a settlement offer does not constitute good cause, nor is it justifiable for an attorney to withdraw if the attorney does not believe that the negotiated contract is sufficiently compensatory. In the present case, plaintiff withdrew because continued representation had become a financial burden, which is a good cause for withdrawal under the Montana Rules of Professional Conduct, but not necessarily one entitling an attorney to compensation. Faced with being forced to enter into a new and unacceptable fee agreement when the time for pursuing an appeal was running, Sullivan's decision to reject plaintiff's ultimatum resulted in plaintiff's voluntary withdrawal. In light of the modern majority rule, plaintiff did not have good cause to withdraw that would justify compensation, so the District Court's summary judgment was reversed. Bell & Marra, pllc v. Sullivan, 2000 MT 206, 300 M 530, 6 P3d 965, 57 St. Rep. 810

Prevailing Party on Ditch Easement Claim Entitled to Attorney Fees and Costs Despite Loss of Separate Counterclaim Related to Road Easement: Espy sued for easement interference related to an underground irrigation system. Quinlan filed a permissive counterclaim, alleging that Espy had interfered with Quinlan's road easement over Espy's property. Following trial, the District Court concluded that: (1) Espy was successful on his claim because he had a valid easement over Quinlan's property for use and maintenance of the irrigation system; (2) Quinlan was successful on her counterclaim because she had a valid road easement over Espy's property; (3) both parties were entitled to a permanent order restraining the other party from interfering with their respective easements; and (4) Espy was entitled to attorney fees and costs as the successful party under 70-17-112. Quinlan appealed the award of attorney fees, contending that because she prevailed on the counterclaim, neither party could be considered a prevailing party. However, Quinlan's counterclaim was not raised in the context of 70-17-112, but was instead related to a road easement. Because Espy successfully prevailed on all claims raised pursuant to 70-17-112, he was entitled to attorney fees and costs regardless of the fact that he was not the prevailing party on the counterclaim. Espy v. Quinlan, 2000 MT 193, 300 M 441, 4 P3d 1212, 57 St. Rep. 764 (2000), distinguishing Knudsen v. Taylor, 211 M 459, 685 P2d 354 (1984). See also Gibson v. Calculation of Attorney Fees Under Federal Fee-Shifting Law: In Ihler I, a class action suit by patients at the state hospital, the case was remanded for recomputation of the lodestar amount. On remand, the District Court eliminated the 50% enhancement for contingency, added fees for representation by the state-employed attorney, did not reassess hourly rates or compensable hours, and denied the request for attorney fees on appeal. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in denying out-of-state hourly rates for out-of-state attorneys. A prevailing party in a section 1988 action does not have the burden of proving that resort to out-of-forum counsel was necessary; instead, a prevailing party has the burden of proving that resort to out-of-forum counsel was reasonable. The Supreme Court further held that: (1) the District Court erred in awarding certain in-state attorney fees that were below the lowest end of the prevailing range; (2) the District Court erred in reducing the patients' requested hours, stating that because it was reasonable to seek out-of-state representation, it also was reasonable to incur the extra expenses associated with out-of-state representation, including travel time; and (3) the District Court erred in denying the patients' attorney fees incurred on appeal. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in refusing to enhance the lodestar figure for undesirability because that was subsumed in the lodestar figure. Ihler v. Chisholm, 2000 MT 37, 298 M 254, 995 P2d 439, 57 St. Rep. 163 (2000).

Payment Required by Contract Not Considered Loss — Attorney Fees and Costs to Prevailing Party: An agreement in a real property transaction provided for attorney fees to the prevailing party. Plaintiff brought an action to determine ownership of the property and was awarded summary judgment, part of which required plaintiff to pay one of the defendants $100,000 pursuant to a profit sweep provision of the agreement. Defendants cited Parcel v. Myers, 214 M 220, 697 P2d 89, 41 St. Rep. 2426 (1984), claiming that plaintiff could not be considered the prevailing party because plaintiff may have gained a victory but had also suffered a loss. However, the payment could not be considered a loss to plaintiff because it was an obligation required to satisfy the agreement, so attorney fees and costs should have been awarded plaintiff as prevailing party. Kennedy v. Dawson, 1999 MT 265, 296 M 430, 989 P2d 390, 56 St. Rep. 1078 (1999).

Attorney Fees Not Generally Allowed: The general rule on attorney fees, adopted by the Supreme Court, is that in the absence of contractual agreement or specific statutory authority, attorney fees are not recoverable as costs by the prevailing party. Award of Attorney Fees Under Foy Equitable Exception Limited to Defense of Frivolous Action: Absent contractual or statutory authority, attorney fees will generally not be awarded, but a court may, under its equity powers and pursuant to Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114, 35 St. Rep. 811 (1978), award attorney fees to make an injured party whole. However, the Foy equitable exception applies only to situations in which a party has been forced to defend against a wholly frivolous or malicious action and is not available for a party that initiates a legal action. Further, parties bringing actions for injunctive relief to protect their own rights are not entitled to attorney fees under the Foy exception. Braach v. Discharge of Attorney Not Breach of Contract — Quantum Meruit Recovery for Services Rendered: The discharge of an attorney by a client is not a breach of contract and does not give rise to contract damages. However, regardless of whether an attorney is discharged with or without cause, that attorney is entitled to a quantum meruit recovery for the reasonable value of services rendered to the time of discharge. In the present case, the District Court set forth 10 specific instances in the record evidencing the attorney's work prior to discharge and then applied those facts to the guidelines set out in First Sec. Bank of Bozeman v. Tholkes, 169 M 422, 547 P2d 1328 (1976), in determining the amount to be awarded as reasonable attorney fees. The court did not act arbitrarily, exceed the bounds of reason, or ignore recognized principles in determining the amount, and the award was affirmed. Campbell v. Bozeman Investors of Duluth, 1998 MT 204, 290 M 374, 964 P2d 41, 55 St. Rep. 868 (1998), following Martin v. Camp, 114 NE 46 (N.Y. 1916), Rosenberg v. Levin, 409 S2d 1016 (Fla. 1982), and Olsen v Englewood, 889 P2d 673 (Colo. 1995). See also Bell & Marra, pllc v. Sullivan, 2000 MT 206, 300 M 530, 6 P3d 965, 57 St. Rep. 810 (2000), in which the voluntary withdrawal of an attorney without good cause precluded quantum meruit payment.

Special Circumstances Precluding Award of Attorney Fees in Section 1983 Claim — Award Against Police Officers Fulfilling Statutory Duties Unjust: Police officers searched Dorwart's home pursuant to writs of execution and seized his personal property, but without Dorwart's permission or a search warrant. Dorwart brought a claim, pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 1983, against the county and the Sheriff. Qualified immunity was extended to the officers concerning their personal liability, but Dorwart prevailed on the claim that the county's action violated his right to be free from unreasonable search and seizure and sought attorney fees. Under Jackson v. Galan, 868 F2d 165 (5th Cir. 1989), a successful section 1983 claimant may be awarded attorney fees regardless of the fact that qualified immunity prevents liability for monetary damages. However, in this case, special circumstances precluded the award because the officers were enforcing the public policy of Montana regarding postjudgment execution statutes, thereby effectuating state rather than county policy, and the award of attorney fees against the county would have been unjust. Dorwart v. Caraway, 1998 MT 191, 290 M 196, 966 P2d 1121, 55 St. Rep. 777 (1998).

Attorney Fees Payable Under Clear Language of Contract — Costs Awarded as Matter of Course: It was error for the trial court to order the parties to pay their own attorney fees and costs when the clear and unambiguous language of the property sale contract in question provided that plaintiffs, as the successful party, were entitled to recover fees. Further, under 25-10-101, plaintiffs were entitled to the award of court costs, as a matter of course, by virtue of receiving judgment in their favor. Quigley v. Acker, 1998 MT 72, 288 M 190, 955 P2d 1377, 55 St. Rep. 295 (1998).

What Constitute Reasonable Attorney Fees: In determining what constitute reasonable attorney fees, the following factors should be used as guidelines: (1) the amount and character of the services rendered; (2) the labor, time, and trouble involved; (3) the character and importance of the litigation in which the services were rendered; (4) the amount of money or the value of the property to be affected; (5) the professional skill and experience called for; (6) the character and standing in their profession of the attorneys; and (7) the result secured by the services of the attorneys. Attorney Fees Not Available if Action for Tort and Not Contract Breach: Saville, the seller, and her realtor were sued by the purchasers of her property. The suit was based on negligent misrepresentation of the boundaries of the property by the realtor. Saville cross-claimed for indemnification against the realtor for any judgment obtained against her by the plaintiffs and was awarded indemnification by the jury. However, she was denied attorney fees by the District Court Judge, even though Saville's buy-sell agreement with the realtor contained an attorney fee clause. The Supreme Court affirmed on the basis that Saville's action was based on the misrepresentation claim of the plaintiffs and was therefore necessarily based on the plaintiffs' claims that sounded in tort and not contract law. Cechovic v. Hardin & Associates, Inc., 273 M 104, 902 P2d 520, 52 St. Rep. 854 (1995). See also Walters v. Luloff, 2008 MT 17, 341 M 158, 176 P3d 1034 (2008).

Contract Overcharge and Negligence Claims Barred by Res Judicata When Other Party Had Already Sued for Failure to Pay: A trucker obtained default judgment in Justice's Court for the failure of Greenwood to pay the full amount that the trucker charged for hauling cattle. Greenwood had claimed that the amount charged was more than agreed upon and refused to pay the difference. He also deducted an amount for the trucker's alleged injury to two steers. Greenwood's later District Court action alleging that the contract was void for an overcharge and alleging the negligent injury of the two steers was barred by res judicata. The Supreme Court also ruled that the case was not one of those rare ones in which a court could use its equitable powers to award attorney fees, which were requested by the trucker. Greenwood v. Steve Nelson Trucking, Inc., 270 M 216, 890 P2d 765, 52 St. Rep. 151 (1995).

Denial of Attorney Fees for State-Employed Attorney Improper: Several patients at a state institution were represented by an attorney employed by the Montana Advocacy Program, which received a federally funded grant from the National Institute of Mental Health, which in turn was administered through the Montana Mental Disabilities Board of Visitors, a state agency. The patients prevailed, but the District Court denied award of attorney fees on the grounds that the attorney was a state employee and therefore not entitled to an award of fees from the state. Citing Shadis v. Beal, 685 F2d 824 (3d Cir. 1982), the Supreme Court noted that Congress contemplated that states and state officials would often be the targets of civil rights actions and intended that legal service programs receive fees under 42 U.S.C. 1988 and that attorney fees be collected from the funds of the state agency. The fact that the attorney's wages were disbursed through the state or paid by public funds was irrelevant in determining whether an award was proper. The District Court abused its discretion by inappropriately relying on the source of the attorney's wages in its decision to deny fees, and remand was proper. Ihler v. Chisholm, 259 M 240, 855 P2d 1009, 50 St. Rep. 775 (1993). On remand, the District Court awarded fees for the state attorney at $75 an hour, her historic rate. The patients appealed, requesting $80 an hour based on the state attorney's current rate of $100. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion by not awarding the current rate because direct evidence of that rate was not presented to the District Court. The Supreme Court instructed that the rate should be recomputed at $80 an hour, a rate at the very lowest end of the prevailing range, which reasonably reflects the inexperience of the attorney. Ihler v. Chisholm, 2000 MT 37, 298 M 254, 995 P2d 439, 57 St. Rep. 163 (2000). See also Dennis v. Chang, 611 F2d 1302 (9th Cir. 1980), and Leeds v. Watson, 630 F2d 674 (9th Cir. 1980).

No Enhancement of Attorney Fees for Contingency Under Federal Fee-Shifting Law: In adjusting the amount awarded for attorney fees, the District Court ordered an increase in the lodestar amount by 50% for risk of contingency. Following the order, the U.S. Supreme Court decided in City of Burlington v. Dague, 505 US 557, 120 L Ed 2d 449, 112 S Ct 2638 (1992), that enhancement of attorney fee awards for contingency was not permitted under federal fee-shifting statutes. The change in law between the trial court decision and the appellate decision required the appellate court to apply the new law. Under Dague, the risk of contingency in a particular case depends on: (1) the legal and factual merits of the claim, which is not reflected in the lodestar and should play no part in the calculation of attorney fees; and (2) the difficulty in establishing the merits of the claim, which is ordinarily reflected in the lodestar, either in the higher number of hours expended to overcome the difficulty or in the higher hourly rate of the attorney skilled and experienced enough to do so. Taking into account the difficulty of the case again through contingency enhancement resulted in double counting. The case at bar was remanded for recomputation of the lodestar amount in light of the Dague principles. Ihler v. Chisholm, 259 M 240, 855 P2d 1009, 50 St. Rep. 775 (1993). On remand, the District Court eliminated the 50% enhancement for contingency and added the fees incurred by the patients while represented by the state-employed attorney. The court did not reassess the reasonable hourly rates or compensable hours and denied the patients' request for attorney fees incurred on appeal. The patients appealed, contending that the District Court erred by refusing to enhance the lodestar figure for undesirability. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to enhance the lodestar figure for undesirability because the reluctance of Montana attorneys to represent these types of claims was subsumed in the lodestar figure. Ihler v. Chisholm, 2000 MT 37, 298 M 254, 995 P2d 439, 57 St. Rep. 163 (2000). See also Davis v. San Francisco, 976 F2d 1536 (9th Cir. 1992).

Determination of Amount of Attorney Fees Payable in ERISA Action — Lodestar/Multiplier Method: D'Emanuele v. Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc., 904 F2d 1379 (9th Cir. 1990), held that the correct method for calculating the amount of attorney fees under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) is the lodestar/multiplier approach adopted in Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 US 424, 76 L Ed 2d 40, 103 S Ct 1933 (1983). The approach contains essentially two parts. First, the court must determine a "lodestar" amount by multiplying the number of hours reasonably expended on the litigation by a reasonable hourly rate. Factors the court should consider in determining the number of hours expended include the novelty and complexity of the issues, the special skills and experience of counsel, the quality of representation, the results obtained, the superior performance of counsel, and other factors appropriate under the circumstances. Once the number of hours has been set, the hourly rate is established by taking into consideration the experience, skill, and reputation of counsel in reference to the market rate in the community for similar services of lawyers of reasonably comparable skill, experience, and reputation. Once the lodestar amount has been determined, the second part of the approach allows the court to increase or decrease that amount based on the factors used in calculating the lodestar amount that are not subsumed in the initial calculation. However, the initial lodestar amount is presumed to constitute a reasonable fee, so adjustments to that amount are rare. Audit Serv., Inc. v. Frontier-West, Inc., 252 M 142, 827 P2d 1242, 49 St. Rep. 186 (1992), followed in Head v. Cent. Reserve Life of N. America Ins. Co., 256 M 188, 845 P2d 735, 50 St. Rep. 20 (1993), and followed, with regard to reduction for limited success but contingency enhancement denied, in Ihler v. Chisholm, 259 M 240, 855 P2d 1009, 50 St. Rep. 775 (1993), in conformity with City of Burlington v. Dague, 505 US 557, 120 L Ed 2d 449, 112 S Ct 2638 (1992), and Davis v. San Francisco, 976 F2d 1536 (9th Cir. 1992). Audit Serv., Inc. was also followed in Klock v. Cascade, 284 M 167, 943 P2d 1262, 54 St. Rep. 829 (1997).

Attorney Fees in Class Action: An attorney appealed from the District Court's order reducing its original award of attorney fees to him in a class action suit. The Supreme Court upheld the reduction, stating that attorney fees in a class action are contingent upon success and upon the existence of a fund from which the fees can be paid and that the fees must be fair and in the best interests of all affected. The court reiterated its disapproval of contingent and hourly fee agreements. Ass'n of Unit Owners of Deer Lodge Condominium, Inc. v. Big Sky of Mont., Inc., 242 M 358, 790 P2d 967, 47 St. Rep. 733 (1990).

Lessors Entitled to Attorney Fees: Under a lease agreement that specifically provided that either party could recover attorney fees incurred in connection with enforcing the agreement, the lessors are entitled to such fees incurred while pursuing their rights against the lessees in bankruptcy court after the lessees filed for bankruptcy. Ruegsegger v. Welborn, 237 M 317, 773 P2d 305, 46 St. Rep. 833 (1989).

Attorney Fees Not Awardable on Affidavit of Counsel — Hearing Required: Even though a contract may provide for the award of reasonable attorney fees, it is improper to award attorney fees solely on the affidavit of counsel without holding an evidentiary hearing on the matter. Stark v. Borner, 234 M 254, 762 P2d 857, 45 St. Rep. 1885 (1988), followed in Rothing v. Kallestad, 2007 MT 109, 337 M 193, 159 P3d 222 (2007).

Costs Provided by Contract Allowable Despite Tortious Nature of Claim: In an action by plaintiff to rescind a contract for sale of real property because of alleged fraud, misrepresentation, undue influence, and unconscionability, the award of attorney fees and costs that the contract provided to the successful defendant, relating to his defense and counterclaim of wrongful occupation by the plaintiff, was proper notwithstanding the contention that the action sounded in tort and not in contract (citing Winer v. Jonal Corp., 169 M 247, 545 P2d 1094 (1976)). The underlying action was based on a contract dispute. Westlake v. Osborne, 230 M 364, 750 P2d 444, 45 St. Rep. 277 (1988).

Attorney Fees Awarded Under Equity Powers:

Because the wife's petition to hold the husband in contempt of court was so unfounded as to constitute harassment, the trial court awarded attorney fees to the husband. Although the provisions in the uniform marriage and divorce laws do not empower the court to award attorney fees, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by awarding the fees under general powers of equity. In re Marriage of Hereford, 223 M 31, 723 P2d 960, 43 St. Rep. 1508 (1986).

While a District Court may award attorney fees under its equity powers, such an award must be documented in the record. The Supreme Court reversed an award of attorney fees which was based on the theory that the award stemmed from the equity powers of the District Court since the record provided no language indicating that the award was based on equitable principles. Brueggemann v. Billings, 221 M 375, 719 P2d 768, 43 St. Rep. 905 (1986).

Attorney Fees as Element of Compensatory Damages — Limited to Contingent Fee Agreement: Jury awarded appellant attorney fees as an element of compensatory damages and deferred to the District Court to assess appropriate attorney fees and costs. The court arrived at a sum based on a contingent fee agreement entered into by appellant and his attorney rather than using a lodestar determination based on reasonable hours expended times a reasonable hourly fee. Appellant contended on appeal that this was an incorrect method of calculation. The Supreme Court held that: (1) the provisions of the contingent fee agreement were controlling in computing the amount of attorney fees; (2) the contract fixed the damages appellant sustained; and (3) to allow appellant to recover attorney fees based on an hourly fee would change the issue from what amount would compensate him for actual damages he sustained in the form of attorney fees to what amount would reasonably compensate his attorney for services rendered. Morris v. Nationwide Ins. Co., 222 M 399, 722 P2d 628, 43 St. Rep. 1363 (1986).

Award of Attorney Fees for Time Spent Obtaining Judgment for Specific Performance: Appellant claimed District Court erred in awarding attorney fees on respondent's counterclaim for specific performance of the parties' agreement concerning buy-out of respondent's interest in a business, contending that the court failed to award relief on the contract claim. The Supreme Court found substantial evidence that appellant failed to perform the required acts and that relief was awarded by way of specific performance. The District Court properly limited recovery to the number of hours spent by respondent's attorney in obtaining the judgment for specific performance. Proto v. Elliot, 222 M 393, 722 P2d 625, 43 St. Rep. 1358 (1986).

Attorney Fees for Time Spent Determining Attorney Fees: Defendant argued that District Court erred in awarding attorney fees for time spent collecting attorney fees. The Supreme Court noted that while this argument may be correct, it was not applicable here. The court previously held in Ring v. Hoselton, 197 M 414, 643 P2d 1165 (1982), that a judgment is not final until all issues, including determination of attorney fees, have been decided. In this case, 8 hours were spent by plaintiff's counsel at a hearing in determining attorney fees, not in collecting those fees. Time spent determining attorney fees is an integral part of a case, and the District Court did not abuse its discretion in awarding fees for the time so spent. Donnes v. Orlando, 221 M 356, 720 P2d 233, 43 St. Rep. 890 (1986), followed in James Talcott Constr., Inc. v. P&D Land Enterprises, 2006 MT 188, 333 M 107, 141 P3d 1200 (2006), and Bugger v. McGough, 2006 MT 248, 334 M 77, 144 P3d 802 (2006).

Award of Attorney Fees by Judge Who Did Not Try Case — No Abuse of Discretion: Parties had 2 months following judgment and prior to a change in jurisdiction to bring the matter of attorney fees before the judge who presided over a lien foreclosure action. Neither side did, and jurisdiction of the action was transferred from the 13th to the 16th Judicial District. Defendant later claimed the new judge abused his discretion by awarding fees in a case he did not try because he could not know all of the circumstances surrounding the foreclosure action. The Supreme Court held that a judge's jurisdiction over a case is a matter of law and that while it is preferable that the presiding trial judge consider the matter of attorney fees, it is not mandatory. Finding no abuse of discretion, judgment was affirmed. Donnes v. Orlando, 221 M 356, 720 P2d 233, 43 St. Rep. 890 (1986).

No Clear Segregation of Time — Reasonable Fee: The Supreme Court, recalling its decision in St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Cumiskey, 204 M 350, 665 P2d 223, 40 St. Rep. 891 (1983), held that when an attorney's time cannot clearly be segregated, he is entitled to a reasonable fee for the entire case. Donnes v. Orlando, 221 M 356, 720 P2d 233, 43 St. Rep. 890 (1986), followed in Blue Ridge Homes, Inc. v. Thein, 2008 MT 264, 345 M 125, 191 P3d 374 (2008).

Contract for Deed Providing for Attorney Fees:

When the written contract for deed provided for attorney fees to the prevailing party in a suit to enforce the terms of the contract, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in awarding attorney fees. Given the complex circumstances of the litigation, it was not unreasonable to award fees in excess of $21,000 when the purchase price of the real property was only $28,000. Krone v. McCann, 219 M 353, 711 P2d 1367, 43 St. Rep. 5 (1986).

Attorney fees were properly granted sellers under a contract for deed where buyer defaulted and the contract specifically provided for them. Hares v. Nelson, 195 M 463, 637 P2d 19, 38 St. Rep. 2036 (1981).

Summary Judgment Granting Attorneys Amount Billed Under Retainer Agreement: On appeal from summary judgment granting attorneys amount billed under retainer agreement, the Supreme Court held that when an attorney entered into a contingent fee arrangement based on a percentage of the judgment or award recovered by the client, there was no genuine issue of material fact as to the amount owing. The total amount recovered properly included interest, and the attorney was entitled not only to a percentage of the actual damages recovered but also to a percentage of the prejudgment and postjudgment interest recovered. Although the court agreed to treat appellants' counterclaim as an affirmative defense, it held that the affirmative defense did not foreclose a summary judgment determination of attorney fees. Smith v. Howery, 217 M 23, 701 P2d 1381, 42 St. Rep. 995 (1985).

Attorney Fees — General Rules for Determining Prevailing Party: No single factor solely determines the prevailing party for the purpose of attorney fees. The party awarded a money judgment is not necessarily the successful or prevailing party, though such a judgment is an important factor in deciding who prevailed. A party surviving an action involving a counterclaim, setoff, refund, or penalty and who has the net judgment should generally be considered the prevailing party. If a counterclaiming defendant receives only a portion of his requested relief, but the plaintiff's claim is totally denied, the defendant should receive his attorney fees. If plaintiff and defendant both seek relief and each is awarded part of the requested relief, the party prevailing on the main issue in controversy must be allowed attorney fees. Schmidt v. Colonial Terrace Associates, 215 M 62, 694 P2d 1340, 42 St. Rep. 182 (1985).

Reformation of Contract — No Prevailing Party — Denial of Costs and Attorney Fees: In suit for reformation of contract for deed and for negligent misrepresentation, the District Court reduced the sales contract by $1,500 but denied plaintiff's damage claims and refused to award plaintiff costs and attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying costs and attorney fees in absence of a statute or contract provision. Plaintiff was not entitled to costs under 25-10-101 because the action did not involve title to property and plaintiff did not receive a "judgment in his favor". There is no prevailing party when both parties gain a victory but also suffer a loss. Parcel v. Myers, 214 M 220, 697 P2d 89, 41 St. Rep. 2426 (1984).

Contractual Attorney Fees — "At Fault" Party Offering to Pay Prior to Trial Prevailing on Appeal: The parties entered into a 5-year lease for office space. Defendant failed to make a monthly rental payment, and plaintiff sent a notice of default followed by a notice to quit. An unlawful detainer action followed. The lease contained a clause providing that in the event of breach, the party "at fault" was liable for the other party's reasonable costs and attorney fees. Defendant admitted fault and, on September 14, offered to pay back rent, interest, attorney fees, and costs. Plaintiff refused and proceeded to trial. Plaintiff prevailed at the District Court, but defendant prevailed on appeal to the extent that it was found entitled to access to the protective statutes. The Supreme Court held that under these circumstances, defendant was "at fault" only until September 14 and was liable only for attorney fees through that date. The Grand Co. v. Jim Slack & Assoc., Inc., 212 M 149, 687 P2d 683, 41 St. Rep. 1654 (1984).

Award of Attorney Fees in Contribution Action Held Unlawful: Where the plaintiff guarantors of a note brought an action against another guarantor for failing to contribute when the maker of the note defaulted, the District Court erred in awarding attorney fees to the plaintiffs. Absent statutory authority or an agreement among the parties, there was no authority for the award of attorney fees. Bossard v. Sullivan, 206 M 392, 670 P2d 1389, 40 St. Rep. 1733 (1983).

Fees Awarded in Action for Rescission of Contract: Contention that contract provision allowing attorney fees and costs to the prevailing party applied only to actions to enforce the contract and not to the instant action for rescission of the contract lacked merit, particularly when parties making that claim amended their complaint to seek attorney fees and only objected to such an award after the other party prevailed in the action and was granted attorney fees and costs. Preston v. McDonnell, 203 M 64, 659 P2d 276, 40 St. Rep. 297 (1983).

Award of Fees to Insurance Beneficiary Reversed: Defendant insurer contested and appealed in good faith an action for larger life insurance benefit payment than that granted by insurer. The trial court awarded attorney fees to plaintiff, who prevailed on the merits. In the absence of a specific statute or insurance contract provision allowing beneficiary attorney fees, either as costs or as an element of damages in her suit, they were improperly awarded and their grant was reversed. Martin v. Crown Life Ins. Co., 202 M 461, 658 P2d 1099, 40 St. Rep. 216 (1983).

Error in Grant of Fees — Waiver of Claim Not Raised Below: Plaintiff waived the right to claim error in the procedure by which attorney fees for defendant were determined and awarded, since he did not submit the matter of attorney fees to the jury during trial. Plaintiff argued that as the case was tried to a jury, the jury, not the judge, should have determined the attorney fees. Schmidt v. Colonial Terrace Associates, 202 M 46, 656 P2d 807, 39 St. Rep. 2318 (1982).

Award of Costs and Attorney Fees — Use of Contingency Agreement: Defendants defaulted on a promissory note. The bank and defendants negotiated a new note and executed a security agreement. This note provided the debtor would be liable for collection costs, including reasonable attorney fees, upon default. Defendants defaulted, and the bank repossessed and sold the security. A deficiency remained. The bank retained an attorney under a contingency fee agreement to collect the deficiency, and suit was filed. Defendants' answer raised defenses necessitating research and investigation. The attorney discovered defendants owned unmortgaged land, which they were attempting to transfer. The bank attached the land and acted as its own surety and purchased a separate surety bond. The trial court included the bond in allowable costs and awarded $5,000 in attorney fees to the bank. The bond was required under 27-18-204, and under the note was clearly a cost of collection. The attorney estimated 50 hours of work. The trial court followed the guidelines of Crncevich v. Georgetown Recreation Corp., 168 M 113, 541 P2d 56 (1975), for awarding attorney fees and found that since he would be entitled to more under the contingency agreement, which was not binding on the court, the award was reasonable. The Supreme Court found that the trial court's findings and conclusions adequately supported the award. First Nat'l Bank v. Beckstrom, 200 M 323, 651 P2d 45, 39 St. Rep. 1778 (1982).

Award of Attorney Fees Under Promissory Note Provision: Where the plaintiff bank was given judgment on four promissory notes executed by the defendant, the District Court did not err in awarding the plaintiff 10% of the unpaid principal and interest of each note as attorney fees. This was the minimum amount agreed upon in each of the notes and was supported by an hourly documentation of attorney time by the plaintiff's counsel. The determination of reasonable attorney fees is within the sound discretion of the District Court. First Nat'l Bank & Trust of Wibaux v. Sec. Bank, 199 M 168, 648 P2d 1166, 39 St. Rep. 1270 (1982).

Legitimate Disputes as to Law Not Within "Frivolous Case" Exception to General Rule on Recovery of Attorney Fees: Wilson brought an action against the defendant Department to prevent it from adjudicating his water rights as being subject to the prior existing right of Walton. The District Court erred in awarding attorney fees to be paid by Wilson to Walton on the theory that it was Wilson's unlawful appropriation which forced Walton to intervene in Wilson's legal action against the Department in order to protect his (Walton's) interest. Generally, attorney fees are not to be allowed absent statutory authorization or an agreement between the parties. The exception for frivolous legal action was inapplicable because a thorough examination of the basis for Wilson's claim to Walton's water rights shows that there was a legitimate basis for Wilson's claim, even though it was ultimately unsuccessful, and a legitimate dispute. Wilson v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 199 M 189, 648 P2d 766, 39 St. Rep. 1294 (1982), distinguished in Braach v. Graybeal, 1999 MT 234, 296 M 138, 988 P2d 761, 56 St. Rep. 919 (1999). See also Goodover v. Lindey's Inc., 255 M 430, 843 P2d 765, 49 St. Rep. 1059 (1992), Tanner v. Tort of "Bad Faith" — Attorney's Fees: Plaintiffs brought a "bad faith" tort action against their insurance company and requested attorney's fees. Because they failed to plead the existence of a contract provision or statutory grant allowing recovery of fees, their request was denied. Bostwick v. Foremost Ins. Co., 539 F. Supp. 517, 39 St. Rep. 980 (D.C. Mont. 1982).

Payee-Assignor's Right to Attorney Fees Provided for by Note: Maker gave payee a promissory note which provided that maker would pay reasonable attorney fees incurred in collection of the note. Payee assigned it to corporation which sued maker on the note, maker in turn filing a third-party complaint against payee-assignor for fraudulent inducement for the note, wrongful assignment of it, and lack of consideration for it. Payee-assignor had no right to attorney fees as against maker, either under the note or under 28-3-704, which provides that when a contract grants the right to recover attorney fees to one party to the contract, then all parties to the contract have that right in any action on the contract. He had assigned all his rights under the note, and the complaint against him was not a collection action under the note. Sliter's v. Lee, 197 M 182, 641 P2d 475, 39 St. Rep. 453 (1982).

Recovery of Fees Absent Contract or Statute: Attorney fees are not generally recoverable in the absence of a contractual or statutory provision for recovery. Sliter's v. Lee, 197 M 182, 641 P2d 475, 39 St. Rep. 453 (1982).

Exception to General Rule That Attorney Fees Not Recoverable: While the general rule in Montana is that attorney fees are not recoverable as costs by a successful litigant, absent a special agreement between the parties or statutory authorization, a narrow exception has been developed by the Supreme Court in cases in which the court has recognized the District Courts' general equity powers to make an injured party whole and the award will not be overturned absent a showing of abuse of discretion. Martin v. Randono, 191 M 266, 623 P2d 959 (1981). See also Small v. Good, 284 M 159, 943 P2d 1258, 54 St. Rep. 825 (1997); In re Support of K.F., 232 M 326, 756 P2d 460, 45 St. Rep. 1087 (1988); Wilson v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 199 M 189, 648 P2d 766, 39 St. Rep. 1294 (1982); Stickney v. St., 195 M 415, 636 P2d 860 (1981); Joseph Russell Realty Co. v. Kenneally, 185 M 496, 605 P2d 1107 (1980); Holmstrom Land Co. v. Hunter, 182 M 43, 595 P2d 360 (1979); and Zier v. Lewis, 2009 MT 266, 352 M 76, 218 P3d 465 (2009).

Attorney Fees Security Agreement Entered Into Long After Initiation of Attorney-Client Relationship: Attorney fees security arrangement, by which client executed quitclaim deed as security for fee and which was entered into long after initiation of attorney-client relationship, was fair and equitable. The per hour charge for attorney's services was established by earlier agreement, and papers executed before trial merely established method of payment. Matthews v. Berryman, 196 M 49, 637 P2d 822, 38 St. Rep. 2112 (1981).

Fees Made Necessary by Bad Faith Litigation Disallowed: On appeal in a breach of contract action, the seller argued that the buyer was not entitled to attorney fees. The buyer admitted that attorney fees could be granted only pursuant to express statutory or contractual provisions but argued that when a party acted in bad faith during litigation and discovery, attorney fees should have been awarded to cover the other party's unnecessary expenses in dealing with the bad faith. In his complaint the buyer sought damages for breach of contract. As there was no contract or statute authorizing attorney fees in this case, attorney fees could not be awarded. Miller v. Titeca, 192 M 357, 628 P2d 670, 38 St. Rep. 853 (1981).

Indemnity Suit — No Reciprocal Right to Attorney Fees: Section 28-3-704 grants a reciprocal right to attorney fees only when the party from whom one is requesting fees has an express right to attorney fees. Thus, where plaintiff in a suit for indemnity did not have an express right to attorney fees and no agreement existed between plaintiff and defendant, the alleged indemnitor, defendant, even though a successful party, has no right to recover attorney fees under 28-3-704. Town Pump v. Diteman, 191 M 98, 622 P2d 212, 38 St. Rep. 54 (1981).

Fees on Appeal — Judicial Discretion: When the defendant puts the plaintiff to the expense of an appeal and the judgment of the District Court is not reversed, the District Court may not deny the plaintiff's request for fees incurred by the appeal. Hollinger v. McMichael, 182 M 86, 594 P2d 1120 (1979).

Award of Attorneys' Fees — Spurious Litigation: If a suit to challenge water apportionment expenses is without merit, it is only proper that the costs should be borne by the water user instituting the action. Holmstrom Land Co., Inc. v. Hunter, 182 M 43, 595 P2d 360 (1979).

Award of Attorney Fees — Competent Evidence: The method used to substantiate the amount of the attorney fees awarded under 40-4-110 was not sufficient to uphold the award. The only evidence supporting the $1,000 fee was the wife's acknowledgment in testimony that a $1,000 fee was reasonable under the circumstances. Houtchens v. Houtchens, 181 M 70, 592 P2d 158 (1979).

Award Based on Affidavit Improper: To award attorney fees on the basis of an affidavit alone is improper. An award must be based on a hearing allowing for oral testimony, the introduction of exhibits, and an opportunity to cross-examine in which the reasonableness of the attorney fees claimed is demonstrated. Audit Serv., Inc. v. Haugen, 181 M 9, 591 P2d 1105 (1979).

Reasonableness — Effect of Stipulation: The reasonableness of the attorney fee must be shown by evidence, and an award must be based on a hearing. A contingent fee contract is not controlling in demonstrating reasonableness. The parties may waive their right to introduce evidence through stipulation, but the Supreme Court is not thereby bound to accept the reasonableness of the fees awarded. Fillbach v. Inland Constr. Corp., 178 M 374, 584 P2d 1274 (1978).

Award of Attorney Fees Unsupported: There was a lack of evidence that would satisfy the requirements of Crncevich v. Georgetown Recreation Corp., 168 M 113, 541 P2d 56 (1975), and First Sec. Bank of Bozeman v. Tholkes, 169 M 422, 547 P2d 1328 (1976), to support the award of attorney fees in the judgment. Barron v. Barron, 177 M 161, 580 P2d 936 (1978).

Rules Not Designed to Promote Litigation: When defendant in a personal injury accident attempted to compel a potential litigant to appear and bring suit by naming her a defendant in a third-party declaratory judgment action, the trial court properly dismissed the complaint since the third-party defendant was not an indispensable party or compelled to litigate a claim that she had no intention of pursuing. If equity was to be done in a situation such as this, attorney fees were properly awarded the third-party defendant. Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114 (1978), distinguished in Tanner v. Dream Island, Inc., 275 M 414, 913 P2d 641, 53 St. Rep. 208 (1996).

Appeal of Prior Issue — Dismissed: The Supreme Court dismissed an appeal raising the same issue of attorney fees that was addressed in a prior determination of the court that constituted a final adjudication. Belgrade St. Bank v. Swainson, 176 M 444, 578 P2d 1166 (1978).

Attorney Fees Award — Disposition: Attorney fees awarded on appeal of Fair Labor Standards Act claim must be paid into the Cascade County general fund and not given to the County Attorney as private attorney fees because Cascade County is in excess of 30,000 people, prohibiting profits by the County Attorney from private practice of law. St. v. Holman Aviation Co., 176 M 31, 575 P2d 919 (1978).

Attorney Fees — Not Included in Costs: There was substantial evidence to support the findings of the lower court in regard to award of attorney fees at the trial level. Furthermore, the wife was not entitled to attorney fees on appeal since they are not included in costs recoverable by the prevailing party on appeal. Allen v. Allen, 175 M 527, 575 P2d 74 (1978).

Award of Attorney Fees — Hearing to Be Held: An award of attorney fees must be based on a hearing allowing for oral testimony, the introduction of exhibits, and an opportunity to cross-examine in which the reasonableness of the attorney fees claimed is demonstrated. Such an award may not be based solely on a contingent fee contract between attorney and client. St. v. Marsh, 175 M 460, 575 P2d 38 (1978).

Attorney Fees — Vexatious Litigation: The Supreme Court affirmed a trial court award of attorney fees based on a finding that the modification of custody action was vexatious and constituted harassment. Easton v. Easton, 175 M 416, 574 P2d 989 (1978).

Guidelines for Award of Fees — Guidelines Not Followed: The court erred when it awarded plaintiff $1,500 in attorney fees after plaintiff's counsel submitted to the court an affidavit representing plaintiff's claim for attorney fees in the amount of $1,057. The criteria to be followed are set forth in First Sec. Bank of Bozeman v. Tholkes, 169 M 422, 547 P2d 1328 (1976); Crncevich v. Georgetown Recreation Corp., 168 M 113, 541 P2d 56 (1975); and Forrester & MacGinniss v. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co., 29 M 397, 74 P 1088 (1904). Mont. Williams Double Diamond Corp. v. Hill, 175 M 248, 573 P2d 649 (1978). (First Sec. Bank followed in Talmage v. Gruss, 202 M 410, 658 P2d 419, 40 St. Rep. 176 (1983).)

Fee Agreement Negotiations — Effect: The result of the negotiations between an attorney and his client as to their fee agreement is not controlling in fixing a reasonable attorney fee to assess against the opposing party. Such an award must be determined in accordance with the guidelines enumerated in Crncevich v. Georgetown Recreation Corp., 168 M 113, 541 P2d 56 (1975). Olson v. Carter, 175 M 105, 572 P2d 1238 (1977); Engebretson v. Putnam, 174 M 409, 571 P2d 368 (1977).

Attorney Fees for Action to Collect Damages for Blocked Ditch: When plaintiffs built an apartment house on property through which ran an irrigation ditch to which defendants had a water right, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court and awarded attorney fees and damages to defendant for costs incurred in renting a sprinkler to compensate for the blocked ditch. Boz-Lew Builders v. Smith, 174 M 448, 571 P2d 389 (1977).

Amount of Award of Attorney Fees: When a senior member of the county bar association testified that fees in a breach of contract case should be from $15,000 to $27,000, the court's award of $7,500, approximately 10% of the judgment, was proper, and $1,000 in attorney fees was allowed on appeal. Haggerty v. Selsco, 166 M 492, 534 P2d 874 (1975).

Condemnation Proceedings: Attorney's fees incurred in the defense of a condemnation proceeding for a private road of necessity under 70-30-107 are not recoverable as an expense of such action under this section or 25-10-201. Tomten v. Thomas, 125 M 159, 232 P2d 723 (1951), overruled in Callant v. Fed. Land Bank of Spokane, 181 M 400, 593 P2d 1036 (1979).

Contribution of Coparties for Fees Required: Where one of several litigants has borne the burden and expense of a successful litigation which has created and brought into court a fund in which the others share with him, it is only just and equitable that the latter should contribute to the payment of the services of the attorney whose labors resulted in the creation or preservation of such common fund. Hardware Mut. Cas. Co. v. Butler, 116 M 73, 148 P2d 563 (1944).

Attorney Fee Incurred Before Action for Breach of Contract: The general rule excluding attorney fees if not stipulated in contract does not apply to nominal amount incurred in attempt to gain possession of land under contract before action for breach of contract instigated. Such small amount is not for attorney fees in the sense in which that term is used in the above rule. It is but an amount paid out incidentally in plaintiff's attempt to get possession and under a proper showing is treated as one of the legal consequences of the original wrongful act. Smith v. Fergus Co., 98 M 377, 39 P2d 193 (1934), distinguished in Ehly v. Cady, 212 M 82, 687 P2d 687, 41 St. Rep. 1611 (1984), and in Martin Dev. Co. v. Keeney Constr. Co., 216 M 212, 703 P2d 143, 42 St. Rep. 752 (1985).

Contract for Fees — Attorney-Client Relationships: While under 37-61-420 and this section, an attorney may contract with his client freely as to his compensation before the fiduciary relation commences, as respects such a contract made after the relation began he has the burden of showing that the contract was fair and reasonable and entered into freely by the client, and that the latter fully knew and understood its provisions; in the absence of such allegations, the complaint is insufficient. Coleman v. Sisson, 71 M 435, 230 P 582 (1924).

PROBATE PROCEEDINGS

Obstructive Attorney — Additional Fees for Other Attorney: The attorney for the estate rendered extraordinary services in response to the objectors' obstreperous, obstructive, and groundless objections to all the steps and proceedings undertaken by the personal representative. Therefore, the attorney was entitled to an additional fee to be paid by the objectors, personally, and by their attorney because they were responsible for the detrimental objections to the progress of an ordinary estate. The personal representative of an estate may contract for an attorney's services, but the contract does not preclude the award of additional fees if the services rendered to the estate by the attorney are extraordinary and reasonably necessary for the good of the estate, as in this case. In re Estate of Barber, 239 M 129, 779 P2d 477, 46 St. Rep. 1565 (1989).

Will Contest: Attorneys' fees incurred by a devisee under a will to defend a contest thereof are not allowable as costs and disbursements within the purview of this chapter or under 72-10-111 and 72-12-206 out of the assets of the estate. In re Baxter's Estate, 94 M 257, 22 P2d 182 (1933), explained in In re Mickich's Estate, 114 M 258, 136 P2d 223 (1943).

Fees for Extra Services: An attorney who makes claim to compensation for extra services has the burden of showing that the allowance of fees by the court under its rules does not provide adequate compensation for all services rendered the estate, particularly so where the services for which compensation was allowed required a minimum of effort and time and the claim for extra compensation was not advanced, by way of amended petition, until after the administratrix had dispensed with the attorney's services. In re Culver's Estate, 91 M 475, 8 P2d 662 (1932).

Time of Allowance of Fees: The statute not providing otherwise, there appears no valid reason why, where an estate is in condition to be closed, the District Court may not allow the fees of the estate's attorney after his dismissal from further service and before final settlement, for the services rendered by him prior to his discharge. In re Culver's Estate, 91 M 475, 8 P2d 662 (1932).

Notice Prior to Fixing of Fees: Persons interested in an estate are entitled to notice before the court fixes the compensation of the administrator or his attorney's fees so they may object if they desire to do so; therefore where such fees were not included in the administrator's final account of the hearing of which the heirs had notice but were fixed without notice to them, the court committed error. In re Jennings' Estate, 74 M 468, 241 P 655 (1925).

Attorney's Claim Against Estate: Under this section, the jurisdiction of the court was enlarged to the extent of empowering it to determine and fix the amount due an attorney for services rendered an administrator and order that the amount so fixed be set apart out of the funds of the estate for his use, the effect of the amendment being to constitute the attorney a "person interested in the estate" and to make his claim for reasonable compensation a legal debt against the estate to be paid as a part of the necessary expenses of administration. In re McLure's Estate, 68 M 556, 220 P 527 (1923).

Fees for Probate Proceedings — Constitutionality: The provision authorizing the District Court sitting in probate to fix and allow the compensation of attorneys representing executors, administrators, etc., is not unconstitutional as denying a jury trial. In re McLure's Estate, 68 M 556, 220 P 527 (1923).

Case Notes

Issue of Whether Attorney Fees Are "Costs" Not Addressed by Statute: This statute does not say attorney fees are costs, only that fees may be excluded from the bill of costs if made a part of the judgment in specified actions in which attorney fees are allowed. Schillinger v. Brewer, 215 M 333, 697 P2d 919, 42 St. Rep. 408 (1985), followed in In re Estate of Lande, 1999 MT 179, 295 M 277, 983 P2d 316, 56 St. Rep. 701 (1999). The general rule that costs do not include attorney fees was distinguished with regard to attorney fees chargeable as costs under 39-3-214 in a wage protection case, Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999).

Case Notes

No Reciprocal Right to Attorney Fees: The Valeos sued Tabish for damage to the Valeos' road allegedly caused by Tabish's trucks. Tabish answered, alleging contributory negligence and requesting attorney fees pursuant to this section. The Valeos moved for partial summary judgment on the issue of fees, and the District Court denied the motion. The jury returned a verdict for Tabish, and the District Court awarded Tabish attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that there is no reciprocal right to attorney fees under this section because that statute grants only a plaintiff the right to attorney fees. Granting fees to a defendant pursuant to this section would require the Supreme Court to insert language into that statute that isn't there, an act prohibited by 1-2-101. The Supreme Court dismissed Tabish's argument that fees are authorized by 25-10-101 and 25-10-102, pointing out that those statutes authorize the payment of only costs, not attorney fees. The Supreme Court also analyzed numerous cases cited by Tabish as authority for his claim that the payment of fees is reciprocal, holding that in each previous Supreme Court opinion cited by Tabish, the Supreme Court relied upon a different statute other than this section. For that reason, those cases were inapplicable to the issue before the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court therefore reversed the District Court and denied the defendant payment of his attorney fees. Valeo v. Tabish, 1999 MT 146, 295 M 34, 983 P2d 334, 56 St. Rep. 579 (1999).

Purpose: The purpose of this section is to encourage good faith negotiation. It acts, when property damages only are involved, as an additional remedy to remedies resulting from violation of obligations owed under 33-18-201. If no judgment has been obtained in the underlying case, this section has no application. Fode v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 221 M 282, 719 P2d 414, 43 St. Rep. 814 (1986), followed in Valeo v. Tabish, 1999 MT 146, 295 M 34, 983 P2d 334, 56 St. Rep. 579 (1999), and distinguished in Peris v. Safeco Ins. Co., 276 M 486, 916 P2d 780, 53 St. Rep. 481 (1996).

Recovery Sought Only for Damages to Motor Vehicle: The award to plaintiff of attorney fees under this statute was proper as the only issues presented in the bench trial were those of the recovery of damages arising out of ownership of a motor vehicle. Round v. Reikofski, 216 M 54, 699 P2d 72, 42 St. Rep. 634 (1985).

Clerk's Refusal to File Until Fee Paid: It was proper for the Clerk of the District Court to hold proffered answer in suspense and not file it until the officially required filing fee had been paid. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982).

2013 Amendment: Chapter 344 in (1) at end of last sentence inserted exception clause. Amendment effective July 1, 2013.

1997 Amendment: Chapter 475 at end of exception clause in first and second sentence in (1) inserted reference to subsection (6); inserted (5) requiring prisoner who files complaint or appeal without prepaying fees to submit trust fund account statement with affidavit; inserted (6) requiring prisoner to pay partial or total cost of filing fee; inserted (7) allowing prisoner to file complaint or appeal despite lack of assets to pay partial fee, but requiring court to dismiss action if fee not paid; inserted (8) defining prisoner; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective May 1, 1997.

Severability: Section 6, Ch. 475, L. 1997, was a severability clause.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 447 at beginning of first sentence of (1) inserted exception clause and near beginning, after "person", substituted "may request a waiver of fees by filing an affidavit, supported by a financial statement" for "who will file an affidavit" and at beginning of second sentence inserted "Except as provided in subsection (2), upon issuance of an order of the court or administrative tribunal approving a request for waiver of fees, the person"; inserted (2) regarding waiver or payment of fees under certain circumstances; inserted (3) precluding filing of the financial statement by a person represented by an entity that provides free legal services; inserted (4) regarding the form of the financial statement; and made minor changes in style.

1993 Statement of Intent: The statement of intent attached to Ch. 447, L. 1993, provided: "A statement of intent is required for this bill because 25-10-404 authorizes the department of justice to adopt a form for a financial statement by rule. It is the intent of the legislature that the form require sufficient information regarding income and assets to allow a reasonable determination of indigence. The department may, in developing the rules, use the affidavit form currently used by Lewis and Clark County as a model."

Petition for Postconviction Relief Timely Filed — Date of Grant of In Forma Pauperis Petition of No Consequence: Nava filed a postconviction relief (PCR) petition and the clerk of court correctly date-stamped the petition as received on July 21, 2009. At the same time, Nava filed a petition to proceed in forma pauperis, which was granted 2 days later. The Supreme Court held that the PCR petition was timely filed on July 21 and that the date the District Court granted the petition to proceed in forma pauperis had no effect on the timely filing of the PCR petition. Nava v. St., 2011 MT 77, 360 Mont. 96, 255 P.3d 53.

No Duty to Disclose Statute's Existence — Failure to Disclose Not Denial of Opportunity to Defend: The only express duty found in this section requires the clerk of court to perform all services requested once a party files the proper affidavit. Nothing in the section expressly imposes a duty upon the clerk to disclose the existence of the statute or to disclose how to file an answer without paying the fee. Therefore, failure of a clerk to inform of the necessity of filing an affidavit in order to proceed in forma pauperis did not deny defendants of the opportunity to defend. NW. Farm Credit Serv., ACA v. Lund, 255 M 114, 841 P2d 490, 49 St. Rep. 910 (1992).

Appearance Fee Required of URESA Respondent — Affidavit Excusing Payment: The respondent in a URESA action is required to pay a $40 appearance fee. However, the respondent may be excused from payment upon filing an affidavit in accordance with this section. 43 A.G. Op. 3 (1989).

25-10-405. Governmental entities not required to prepay fees — exceptions.

2013 Amendment: Chapter 344 inserted "the fee under 25-1-201(1)(r) for filing a pleading by facsimile or e-mail"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2013.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 570 near end, after "handling", inserted "certifications". Amendment effective July 1, 1993.

1991 Amendment: At end, after "judge", inserted "and all fees for photocopies, postage and handling, authentications, and record searches".

1987 Amendment: At end of section inserted exception clause referring to fee for filing motion for substitution of judge.

Case Notes

Costs or Fees in Mandamus Action: The provision for taxing costs or damages against the state, county, or municipality is applicable generally to all forms of action, other than mandamus; as to the latter, 27-26-403, being a special statute, is controlling. State ex rel. O'Connor v. McCarthy, 86 M 100, 282 P 1045 (1929).

Type of Appearance: There is no difference between an officer who appears "in behalf" of the state, county, or municipality and one who "represents" such a body in a court action; hence in either event he is exempt from personal liability for damages or costs in an action prosecuted or defended by him in his official capacity under this section or in a mandamus proceeding resulting adversely to him under 27-26-403. State ex rel. O'Connor v. McCarthy, 86 M 100, 282 P 1045 (1929).

Stenographic Fees: Where the Attorney General, conducting a proceeding on behalf of the state, demanded of the court stenographer a transcript of his notes taken therein, it was the stenographer's ministerial duty to deliver them without demanding his fees in advance. State ex rel. Donovan v. Ledwidge, 27 M 197, 70 P 511 (1902).

Attorney General's Opinions

District Court Clerk Not Authorized to Charge Nonparty State Agency for Copies and Certification of Public Records: Access to and fees for copying public court records are not absolute and are controlled by state law. Fees allowed by law are enumerated in 25-1-201, and the collection of those fees is mandatory. Fees for preparing copies and for certification of documents are also specified in that section. This section clarifies that fees are collectible from state agencies that are a party to an action but has no effect in cases in which the agency is not a litigant. In those cases, the rule in 7-4-2516 applies, exempting agencies of state and county government from paying official fees. Therefore, a Clerk of District Court may not charge a nonparty state agency for copies and certification of public District Court records. 47 A.G. Op. 3 (1997).

Part 5
Claiming Costs

Part Case Notes

Fees for Posttrial Work and Appeal Denied in Light of Generous Award of Attorney Fees at Trial: The Slacks accepted a Department of Transportation offer to pay $168,069, plus interest and necessary litigation expenses, in a property condemnation case, but the amount of litigation expenses was disputed and was not settled by the District Court until some years later. The Department appealed the award, and the Slacks cross-appealed, seeking attorney fees for posttrial work and for responding to the appeal. The Supreme Court noted that although the District Court's findings justifying its award of necessary litigation expenses were not clearly erroneous, the District Court's attorney fee award was clearly generous and that Slack's attorney was granted everything that he requested despite two witnesses for the Department who testified that the attorney's claims were excessive and duplicative. The Supreme Court declined to award additional attorney fees for posttrial work and the appeal. State ex rel. Dept. of Transportation v. Slack, 2001 MT 137, 305 M 488, 29 P3d 503 (2001).

Failure to File Memorandum 373

GENERAL

Bill of Costs Not Properly Verified — Award of Costs Upheld: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in awarding costs on a bill of costs that was not properly verified. Good cause existed to grant an extension of time to allow the party seeking costs to file a curative affidavit when the affidavit was filed within a reasonably prompt manner upon notice of the defect, briefing on costs was at an early stage, and an extension would not prejudice the party objecting to the costs. Carestia v. Robey, 2013 MT 335, 372 Mont. 438, 313 P.3d 169.

Procedure for Collecting Costs Applied: Although a party is free to contract for costs not allowed by 25-10-201, because the contract at issue did not contain any procedural language regarding how to file the bill of costs, the procedural requirements contained in 25-10-501 applied. Total Indus. Plant Serv., Inc. v. Turner Indus. Group, LLC, 2013 MT 5, 368 Mont. 189, 294 P.3d 363.

Costs in Attorney Disciplinary Action Governed by Montana Rules for Lawyer Disciplinary Enforcement: Attorney Potts objected to the statement of costs filed by the Office of Disciplinary Counsel stemming from disciplinary proceedings against Potts before the Commission on Practice, asserted that the Office violated several statutes and former Rule 33, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), in assigning costs as directed in In re Potts, 2007 MT 81, 336 M 517, 158 P3d 418 (2007), and requested a hearing before an adjudicatory panel regarding reasonableness of the costs. The Supreme Court held that, in accord with the court's authority to regulate and discipline attorneys, the Montana Rules for Lawyer Disciplinary Enforcement (MRLDE), not the statutes and rules applicable to civil actions generally, govern costs imposed by the Office as discipline or sanctions against attorneys. Under Rule 9(A)(8), MRLDE, the attorney must pay reasonable costs of any professional services employed by the Commission, and the case was remanded for a hearing before an adjudicatory panel for consideration of the reasonableness of the amount requested by the Office for each category of costs. In re Potts, 2007 MT 236, 339 M 186, 171 P3d 286 (2007).

Fatally Deficient Bill of Costs — Award of Costs Vacated: Defense attorney Nelson signed a verification of costs, but was not actually sworn and did not attest to personal knowledge of the costs incurred. Rather, Nelson signed a document purporting to present his partner Dahle's knowledge and belief and indicating that Dahle had been duly sworn. However, Dahle was not actually present to subscribe to the statement, sign the verification, or be sworn by the notary. The bill of costs was therefore fatally defective, and the Supreme Court vacated the award of costs to defendant. McDermott v. Carie, LLC, 2005 MT 293, 329 M 295, 124 P3d 168 (2005).

Losing Party Deprived of Time to Object to Costs — Remand: Defendants were granted summary judgment and awarded costs. Defendants submitted a bill of costs to the District Court and mailed a copy to plaintiffs. The next day, the District Court entered judgment in favor of defendants and assessed costs according to the bill submitted by defendants. Plaintiffs contended that by entering judgment and assessing costs 1 day after defendants submitted their bill of costs, plaintiffs were deprived of the opportunity to object to the costs, as permitted by 25-10-502. The Supreme Court agreed. Under 25-10-502, a party that is dissatisfied with the amounts contained in a bill of costs has 5 days following notice to object by filing and serving a notice of a motion to have the costs taxed. Thus, plaintiffs were deprived of the statutorily authorized time to object, and the Supreme Court remanded for further proceedings on costs. Sherner v. Nat'l Loss Control Serv. Corp., 2005 MT 284, 329 M 247, 124 P3d 150 (2005), following Girson v. Girson, 112 M 183, 114 P2d 274 (1941).

Costs of Contested Employment Discrimination Administrative Hearing Not Allowed Absent Adoption of Rules of Civil Procedure by Agency: The Department of Labor and Industry conducted an administrative hearing to address plaintiff's employment discrimination claim. Defendants made an offer of judgment that plaintiff refused, but defendants ultimately prevailed and then contended that plaintiff was responsible for the costs of the hearing under former Rule 68, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), 49-2-505, and this section. The Department determined that the general legislative mandate to follow the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure did not empower the agency to award costs in a contested case hearing. The District Court agreed, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Under 49-2-505, the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure apply only in agency hearings to the extent that the rules are adopted by the agency. Former Rule 68, which allows recovery of costs after a judgment, has not been adopted by the Department to apply in agency-conducted administrative hearings related to employment discrimination. Absent a statutory basis, the award of costs was not proper. Pannoni v. Browning School District No. 9 Bd. of Trustees, 2004 MT 130, 321 M 311, 90 P3d 438 (2004).

Five-Day Filing Requirement for Claiming Costs Not Applicable to Attorney Fees: Following the resolution of a will contest, the personal representatives claimed attorney fees and costs pursuant to 72-12-206. The will contestants argued that under this section and pursuant to Craver v. Waste Management Partners of Bozeman, 265 M 37, 874 P2d 1, 51 St. Rep. 268 (1994), a party claiming attorney fees and costs must file a bill of costs within 5 days of the verdict or notice of the court's decision, which the personal representatives did not do. The District Court concluded that this section did not apply and that attorney fees and costs were not waived by the failure to file a timely memorandum. The Supreme Court disagreed in part, overruling Craver, and held that under the plain language of this section and pursuant to Cook v. Harrington, 203 M 479, 661 P2d 1287, 40 St. Rep. 580 (1983), and Schillinger v. Brewer, 215 M 333, 697 P2d 919, 42 St. Rep. 408 (1985), the 5-day filing requirement for filing a memorandum of costs does not apply to attorney fees to which a party is entitled by statute. However, the filing requirement does apply to the personal representatives' claim for costs. As a result, the case was remanded for modification of judgment to delete costs awarded in error. In re Estate of Lande, 1999 MT 179, 295 M 277, 983 P2d 316, 56 St. Rep. 701 (1999).

Deposition and Transcript Costs Allowed: In a case involving a dispute over a commercial lease, the defendant argued that the lower court had erred in allowing the plaintiffs to recover costs for a deposition and for portions of a transcript of hearing prior to the trial. The Supreme Court held that both the deposition and the transcript were used in the trial and therefore the lower court was within its discretion to allow the plaintiffs to recover those costs. Sage v. Rogers, 257 M 229, 848 P2d 1034, 50 St. Rep. 244 (1993).

Costs — Expert Witness Fees: A District Court cannot award costs in excess of $10 a day per witness as costs for expert witnesses. The statute specifically limiting expert witness fees to $10 a day controls the general statute authorizing a District Court to award costs in accordance with the course and practice of the court. Witty v. Pluid, 220 M 272, 714 P2d 169, 43 St. Rep. 354 (1986), followed in Goodover v. Lindey's Inc., 255 M 430, 843 P2d 765, 49 St. Rep. 1059 (1992).

Lease Providing for Costs — Statutory Costs Awarded: Defendant breached a lease and, following judgment for plaintiff, plaintiff applied under this section for statutory costs and requested the court to award his expenses and disbursements pursuant to a section of the lease. The court awarded only the costs recoverable under statute. Plaintiff elected to claim his costs through a cost bill, and the court correctly limited him to statutory costs. Nicholson v. United Pac. Ins. Co., 219 M 32, 710 P2d 1342, 42 St. Rep. 1822 (1985).

Granting Witness Air Fare Costs Following Appeal: The filing of a notice of appeal did not deprive the District Court of jurisdiction to grant a pending bill for costs. However, the court properly disallowed as a cost the air fares for witnesses. Powers Mfg. Co. v. Leon Jacobs Enterprises, 216 M 407, 701 P2d 1377, 42 St. Rep. 906 (1985).

Issue of Whether Attorney Fees Are "Costs" Not Addressed by Statute: This statute does not say attorney fees are costs, only that fees may be excluded from the bill of costs if made a part of the judgment in specified actions in which attorney fees are allowed. Schillinger v. Brewer, 215 M 333, 697 P2d 919, 42 St. Rep. 408 (1985), followed in In re Estate of Lande, 1999 MT 179, 295 M 277, 983 P2d 316, 56 St. Rep. 701 (1999). The general rule that costs do not include attorney fees was distinguished with regard to attorney fees chargeable as costs under 39-3-214 in a wage protection case, Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999).

Costs Awarded to Defendant — Timely Filing: The mandatory language of 25-10-102 required the award of costs to a defendant who prevailed in a suit intended to enjoin him from further trespassing on a road that the lower court declared defendant had a prescriptive easement over since timely application for costs was made pursuant to 25-10-501. St. v. Cronin, 179 M 481, 587 P2d 395 (1978).

Timely Filing: Because plaintiff filed his memorandum of costs and disbursements prior to entry of judgment, although 12 days expired from the day the verdict for plaintiff was announced and filed, the memorandum was timely filed. Poeppel v. Fisher, 175 M 136, 572 P2d 912 (1977).

Burden of Proof: Verified memorandum is prima facie evidence of correctness of items of disbursements and the burden of overcoming such prima facie case rests on the adverse party, the party filing the memorandum being required to furnish further proof only in rebuttal. Letz v. Letz, 123 M 494, 215 P2d 534 (1950).

Execution for Costs: Where the provisions of this section with reference to a bill for appeal costs are followed and no notice of motion to tax costs is served and filed within time or it is abandoned, it would appear that execution, immediate right to which is given the successful appellant under 25-10-503 without regard to a subsequent retrial, should be good; if this section is not followed, the Writ of Execution would seem to be void. State ex rel. Vaughn v. District Court, 111 M 552, 111 P2d 810 (1941).

Application to Original Supreme Court Proceedings: This section applies not only to matters arising in the District Court but as well to original proceedings commenced in the Supreme Court. Time begins to run from notice of the decision, i.e., when the opinion, which was the judgment, was filed and notice thereof given. The subsequent writ was not the decree or judgment but merely the court process issued for enforcement thereof. State ex rel. Clark v. District Court, 103 M 145, 61 P2d 836 (1936).

Costs Reviewable on Appeal From Judgment: Section 93-8003, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by M.R.Civ.P.), does not provide for appeal from order taxing costs, but the order is an important part of judgment and is reviewable on appeal from the judgment, even though the matter of costs be the only question presented on the appeal. Gahagan v. Gugler, 100 M 599, 52 P2d 150 (1935).

Notice to Tax — Specificity: The notice to tax costs may not be held insufficient for failure to specify the items of costs to be attacked on the motion to retax them. Gahagan v. Gugler, 100 M 599, 52 P2d 150 (1935).

"Decision" as Constituting Judgment: The provision that the successful party must within 5 days after "notice of the decision of the court" serve upon the adverse party a memorandum of costs means a notice of such a decision as amounts to a rendition of judgment. Shull v. Lewis & Clark County, 93 M 408, 19 P2d 901 (1933).

Notice of Filing of Memorandum: The party against whom court costs are claimed must have notice of the filing of the memorandum with the Clerk of Court; the notice need not be given in any prescribed way; it may be given by a service of the copy of the memorandum filed, showing the date of filing or by letter transmitting the memorandum stating the date when the original was filed with the Clerk. However, the opposing party may waive notice. State ex rel. Bullard v. District Court, 86 M 358, 284 P 125 (1930).

Review of Cost Proceedings — Exceptions: Where costs were allowed plaintiff without service on defendant of the memorandum required by this section, error in this regard cannot be reviewed in the absence of a bill of exceptions (exceptions abolished by M.R.Civ.P.) preserving the proceedings. McAboy v. Junk, 68 M 198, 216 P 1111 (1923).

"Decision" of Court: The "decision" is the findings of fact and conclusions of law, signed by the court and filed with the clerk. McDonnell v. Huffine, 44 M 411, 120 P 792 (1912), distinguished in Pattyn v. Favers, 133 M 560, 327 P2d 818 (1958).

Affidavit to Memorandum — Substantial Compliance: An affidavit to a memorandum of costs made by one of defendant's attorneys, stating that the memorandum was true and correct and the items were reasonable and necessarily incurred in defense of the cause, to the best of his knowledge and belief, substantially complies with this section. Hoskins v. N. Pac. Ry., 39 M 394, 102 P 988 (1909).

Statutory Basis for Costs: The recovery of costs as such is regulated by statute, and the method therein pointed out for their collection must be pursued. State ex rel. Riddell v. District Court, 33 M 529, 85 P 367 (1905); Orr v. Haskell, 2 M 350 (1875).

Omissions From Memorandum: After an allowance by the District Court for necessary costs and disbursements has been made to a party, with a particular item inadvertently or intentionally omitted from the judgment, the proper remedy is an application to the court at the time to have the omission corrected or an appeal from the judgment to have the error thus committed reviewed; otherwise the party becomes bound by the judgment. State ex rel. Boston & Mont. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. v. District Court, 32 M 20, 79 P 410 (1905).

SERVICE OF MEMORANDUM

Award Reversed for Failure to Serve Memorandum: Award of costs to prevailing party was improper and was reversed where prevailing party did not serve other party with the memorandum of costs required by this section. Lemley v. Allen, 203 M 37, 659 P2d 262, 40 St. Rep. 279 (1983); following Riddell v. District Court, 33 M 529, 85 P2d 367 (1906).

Costs on Appeal — Error to Strike: Construing this section and 25-10-503, referring to cost bills on appeal but making no provision for service, together the order of filing and service is immaterial and therefore the court erred in striking a memorandum of costs on appeal from the files because it was served before filing. State ex rel. Bullard v. District Court, 86 M 358, 284 P 125 (1930), overruling Berry v. Helena, 56 M 122, 182 P 117 (1919).

Serving and Filing Contemporaneous: Where a memorandum of costs was served and filed upon the same day, the serving and filing will be treated as contemporaneous acts and held proof against the contention that under this section filing must precede service. Berry v. Helena, 56 M 122, 182 P 117 (1919).

Costs on Appeal: The provisions of this section, with reference to service upon the adverse party of memorandum of the items of costs and disbursements claimed by the party in whose favor judgment is rendered, are applicable to proceedings under 25-10-503 for costs on appeal. State ex rel. Riddell v. District Court, 33 M 529, 85 P 367 (1905).

Service on Adverse Party: Though the statute does not require service of the memorandum of costs on the adverse party, by analogy such service should be made and disputes settled as provided by this section. State ex rel. Hurley v. District Court, 27 M 40, 69 P 244 (1902).

TIME FOR FILING MEMORANDUM

Computation of Time for Filing Bill of Costs — 5 Calendar Days: The defendant submitted its bill of costs after trial, but the District Court rejected it as untimely. The defendant argued that it had submitted the bill of costs within 5 business days, consistent with Doyle v. Clark, 2011 MT 117, 360 Mont. 450, 254 P.3d 570, and therefore the bill was timely. The District Court concluded that under Rule 6, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), which was amended in 2011 after Doyle was issued, the 5-day period for filing a bill of costs under 25-10-501 is 5 calendar days, not 5 business days. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed that the 5-day deadline was 5 calendar days under the amended rule and that the amended rule superseded the holding in Doyle. Peterson-Tuell v. First Student Transp., LLC, 2014 MT 307, 377 Mont. 113, 339 P.3d 16.

Valuation of Estate's Interest in Limited Liability Company Upheld — Award of Interest, Attorney Fees, and Costs Reversed: The District Court properly valued the estate's interest in a limited liability company at the date of trial, rather than at the date of a member's death, because the deceased member's personal representative and the surviving member agreed to continue operating the business instead of dissolving it pursuant to the business's operating agreement. The District Court improperly determined the interest rate pursuant to 25-9-205 because the operating agreement contained a specific provision regarding interest and improperly relied on an indemnification clause contained in the operating agreement in awarding unsupported attorney fees. In addition, the District Court erred in awarding costs to the estate because the estate filed its request for costs 4 months after the deadline passed. Pastimes, LLC v. Clavin, 2012 MT 29, 364 Mont. 109, 274 P.3d 714.

Five-Day Filing Requirement for Claiming Costs Not Applicable to Attorney Fees: Following the resolution of a will contest, the personal representatives claimed attorney fees and costs pursuant to 72-12-206. The will contestants argued that under this section and pursuant to Craver v. Waste Management Partners of Bozeman, 265 M 37, 874 P2d 1, 51 St. Rep. 268 (1994), a party claiming attorney fees and costs must file a bill of costs within 5 days of the verdict or notice of the court's decision, which the personal representatives did not do. The District Court concluded that this section did not apply and that attorney fees and costs were not waived by the failure to file a timely memorandum. The Supreme Court disagreed in part, overruling Craver, and held that under the plain language of this section and pursuant to Cook v. Harrington, 203 M 479, 661 P2d 1287, 40 St. Rep. 580 (1983), and Schillinger v. Brewer, 215 M 333, 697 P2d 919, 42 St. Rep. 408 (1985), the 5-day filing requirement for filing a memorandum of costs does not apply to attorney fees to which a party is entitled by statute. However, the filing requirement does apply to the personal representatives' claim for costs. As a result, the case was remanded for modification of judgment to delete costs awarded in error. In re Estate of Lande, 1999 MT 179, 295 M 277, 983 P2d 316, 56 St. Rep. 701 (1999).

Attorney Fees in Wage Protection Case Treated as Costs — Filing of Memorandum of Costs Subject to Statutory Time Limit: A party in a wage protection case seeking attorney fees pursuant to 39-3-214 must comply with statutes governing the taxing of costs, including this section, which requires that a memorandum of costs be filed within 5 days after the return of a jury verdict. Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999), distinguishing Schillinger v. Brewer, 215 M 333, 697 P2d 919 (1985).

Time for Filing Memorandum After Jury Trial — No Record of Extension — Bench and Jury Trials Compared — Directed Verdict No Basis for Distinction: Kunst and Erpenbach were granted a directed verdict as to liability in their suit against Pass, the landlord in a building in which Kunst and Erpenbach were poisoned by carbon monoxide. On August 22, the jury returned a damages verdict against Pass, and on September 10, plaintiffs filed a posttrial motion for attorney fees and costs. The District Court denied the motion as to costs as untimely, and the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that even allowing 2 additional days for the weekend and 3 additional days for mailing, the motion was still untimely. Regarding plaintiffs' argument that an extension was granted by the former judge in the case, who had since retired, the Supreme Court pointed out that there was nothing in the record showing that an extension had been granted, notwithstanding a statement by the former judge that the alleged extension "sounds like something the Court would do". The Supreme Court held that the 5-day time limit provided for in this section is mandatory. Responding to another argument by plaintiffs, the Supreme Court also pointed out the differences between a bench trial and a jury trial. In a jury trial, the time limit for a motion for costs and fees begins to run on the day after the jury's verdict is entered. Additionally, the Supreme Court noted that it made no difference for the purposes of its opinion that a directed verdict was granted to plaintiffs on the issue of liability. Kunst v. Pass, 1998 M 71, 288 M 264, 957 P2d 1, 55 St. Rep. 289 (1998), followed in Doyle v. Clark, 2011 MT 117, 360 Mont. 450, 254 P.3d 570, which clarified that the 5-day period provided for in this section is 5 business days. However, see Peterson-Tuell v. First Student Transp., LLC, 2014 MT 307, 377 Mont. 113, 339 P.3d 16, in which the Supreme Court ruled that under new Rule 6, M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), which was amended in 2011 after Doyle, the 5-day period provided for in this section is 5 calendar days.

Issues Regarding Amount and Form of Judgment Unresolved — Failure to Timely Submit Memorandum of Costs: Two weeks after the jury's verdict in a tort action was signed and filed, the plaintiffs filed a memorandum of costs. The defendants objected to the filing of the memorandum as untimely, and it was stricken by the District Court. The Supreme Court noted that although the District Court stated in the record that there were issues of the amount and form of the judgment left to be decided, the District Court did not issue an order staying the entry of the judgment. Therefore, the plaintiffs had 5 days from the date of the jury verdict to file and serve their memorandum of costs upon the defendants. The Supreme Court held that failure to file the memorandum within that time properly resulted in the memorandum being stricken. Rocky Mtn. Enterprises, Inc. v. Pierce Flooring, 286 M 282, 951 P2d 1326, 54 St. Rep. 1410 (1997).

Notice of Yet-to-Be-Determined Attorney Fees Sent Within Statutory Time Limit: Plaintiffs filed their memorandum of costs, detailing costs and stating that attorney fees would follow in a separate affidavit. The notice of taxing attorney fees, the amount of which had yet to be fixed by the court after hearing, was sent well within the statutory limit set in this section and was thus properly ordered by the trial court. Craver v. Waste Management Partners of Bozeman, 265 M 37, 874 P2d 1, 51 St. Rep. 268 (1994), overruled, to the extent that attorney fees are not considered costs subject to the 5-day filing requirement, in In re Estate of Lande, 1999 MT 179, 295 M 277, 983 P2d 316, 56 St. Rep. 701 (1999).

Entry of Judgment — Final Decision: Whether the date of entry of judgment will be the trigger date for computation of the 5-day requirement for filing depends on when the court's decision is final. In this case, the time for filing the memorandum of costs began to run on the date of entry of judgment because that was the date on which the decision was final. There was no jury involved, and under the computation of time provided for in former Rule 6(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the memorandum was timely. Karell v. Am. Cancer Soc'y, 239 M 168, 779 P2d 506, 46 St. Rep. 1593 (1989).

Bill Untimely: Plaintiff's bill of costs that was filed more than 10 days after the date of the jury verdict was untimely. R.H. Grover, Inc. v. Flynn Ins. Co., 238 M 278, 777 P2d 338, 46 St. Rep. 1266 (1989), followed in Rocky Mtn. Enterprises, Inc. v. Pierce Flooring, 286 M 282, 951 P2d 1326, 54 St. Rep. 1410 (1997), and Kunst v. Pass, 1998 MT 71, 288 M 264, 957 P2d 1, 55 St. Rep. 289 (1998).

Timeliness of Motion for Necessary Litigation Costs — Weekends Exempted — Additional Time for Mailing: Defendant/respondent filed a motion for determination of necessary expenses of litigation under 70-30-306. He filed the motion 11 calendar days after a jury verdict was rendered in his favor. Plaintiff filed a motion to retax costs on the ground that respondent's motion was untimely filed under the "5 days after the verdict" clause of 25-10-501. Held, former Rule 6(a) and (e) of the M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), eliminating Saturdays and Sundays and granting 3 business days must be given effect since defendant was required to take some "action by virtue of papers served upon him by mail" and since defendant was served by mail, defendant's motion was timely filed. St. v. Helehan, 189 M 339, 615 P2d 925, 37 St. Rep. 1516 (1980).

First Day Excluded: Where judgment of nonsuit (abolished, M.R.Civ.P.) was entered by defendant on May 31, memorandum of costs, served by mail pursuant to section 93-8504, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rules 5 and 6(e), M.R.Civ.P., now superseded), postmarked June 5, met the requirements of this section since June 5 was the fifth day. In the computation of the time, the first day is excluded as prescribed by 1-1-306. Davis v. Trobough, 139 M 322, 363 P2d 727 (1961), followed in Funk v. Robbin, 212 M 437, 689 P2d 1215, 41 St. Rep. 1848 (1984).

Oral Announcement Immaterial: The 5-day period prescribed by this section is computed from the day the court enters judgment, not from the day the court orally announces its decision. Davis v. Trobough, 139 M 322, 363 P2d 727 (1961).

Motion to Strike Properly Denied — Particular Times: Motion to strike plaintiff's memorandum of costs was properly denied where findings of fact and conclusions of law were signed on August 25, 1955, and filed on August 26; judgment was filed September 15; cost bill was served on counsel on September 16, and filed September 19; and notice of entry of judgment was served on September 15, reciting that judgment was entered on that day. Pattyn v. Favers, 133 M 560, 327 P2d 818 (1958).

Filing Valid — Particular Times: A cost bill was filed in time where the court made findings of fact and conclusions of law on April 18 and filed them on April 21, the judgment was signed April 28 and filed April 29, and plaintiff filed his memorandum of costs on April 29. Ballenger v. Tillman, 133 M 369, 324 P2d 1045 (1958).

Second Judgment Invalid: Where, after the Clerk of the District Court had entered a valid judgment as directed by the Supreme Court on appeal, the party entitled to costs, considering the judgment invalid, obtained a second judgment signed by the judge, the latter judgment was unauthorized and hence did not extend the time for filing the cost bill. Lasby v. Burgess, 93 M 349, 18 P2d 1104 (1933).

"Notice" as Notice in Fact: Where counsel for the successful party on the day judgment was rendered had knowledge thereof but did not file his memorandum of costs until 7 days thereafter, the trial court erred in refusing to strike it from the files, the provision of this section that the memorandum shall be filed with the clerk within 5 days after "notice" of the decision meaning after knowledge thereof and not after service of formal notice. Miles v. Miles, 76 M 375, 247 P 328 (1926).

Computation of Five Days: The 5 days must be computed from the date upon which the court's written findings and conclusions of law were filed and not from the day on which the court orally announced its decision. McDonnell v. Huffine, 44 M 411, 120 P 792 (1912), distinguished in Pattyn v. Favers, 133 M 560, 327 P2d 818 (1958).

Eight-Day Delay: Where plaintiff did not serve a memorandum of costs until 8 days after a decision in his favor and the records did not show that he did not have notice of the decision until within 5 days prior to such service, defendant's motion to strike out the memorandum should be sustained. Reins v. King, 27 M 511, 71 P 763 (1903).

FAILURE TO FILE MEMORANDUM

Judgment Alone Insufficient:

A party was not entitled to the costs of an appeal when she did not claim them in the manner provided in 25-10-503 by a bill of costs prepared under 25-10-501. In re Marriage of Carlson, 220 M 204, 714 P2d 116, 43 St. Rep. 295 (1986).

The recovery of costs, as such, is regulated by statute, and the method therein pointed out must be followed in order to claim them; hence where plaintiff had judgment but failed to file his memorandum and serve a copy thereof on his opponent within 5 days after the decision, he was not entitled to them. First St. Bank v. Larsen, 72 M 400, 233 P 960 (1925).

Failure to Comply as Waiver: Costs are recoverable only by virtue of the statute, and in order to recover them, the party making the claim must comply with its provisions; therefore, failure to file the memorandum required by this section operates as a waiver and justifies the court in striking the cost bill. Gervais v. Rolfe, 57 M 209, 187 P 899 (1920).

Costs in Default: Where plaintiff did not file with the clerk and serve upon defendant his claim for costs in a verified bill, he was not entitled to recover them, even though defendant, because of failure to appear, may not have been entitled to notice of proceedings had thereafter. Barrick v. Porter, 56 M 247, 184 P 217 (1919).

Compliance to Be Shown: A litigant who does not claim his costs as provided in this section is not entitled to them. A court cannot award costs without a showing that this section has been complied with. Butte N. Copper Co. v. Radmilovich, 39 M 157, 101 P 1078 (1909).

Statute Exclusive: Where the party claiming costs has failed to claim them as directed by the statute, his right to them has not attached and the court has no power in the premises other than to strike out and disallow them on motion of the adverse party. State ex rel. Riddell v. District Court, 33 M 529, 85 P 367 (1905).

25-10-502. Procedure upon objection to bill of costs.

Case Notes

Losing Party Deprived of Time to Object to Costs — Remand: Defendants were granted summary judgment and awarded costs. Defendants submitted a bill of costs to the District Court and mailed a copy to plaintiffs. The next day, the District Court entered judgment in favor of defendants and assessed costs according to the bill submitted by defendants. Plaintiffs contended that by entering judgment and assessing costs 1 day after defendants submitted their bill of costs, plaintiffs were deprived of the opportunity to object to the costs, as permitted by this section. The Supreme Court agreed. Under this section, a party that is dissatisfied with the amounts contained in a bill of costs has 5 days following notice to object by filing and serving a notice of a motion to have the costs taxed. Thus, plaintiffs were deprived of the statutorily authorized time to object, and the Supreme Court remanded for further proceedings on costs. Sherner v. Nat'l Loss Control Serv. Corp., 2005 MT 284, 329 M 247, 124 P3d 150 (2005), following Girson v. Girson, 112 M 183, 114 P2d 274 (1941).

Motion Objecting to Costs — No Suspension of Time for Filing Notice of Appeal: On October 9, 1981, 1 day after the entry of judgment against the plaintiff in a quiet title action, the plaintiff filed a motion objecting to the defendant's memorandum of costs, which motion was noticed for hearing but the hearing was never held. Following the filing of a notice of appeal by the plaintiff on January 26, 1982, the Supreme Court held it did not have jurisdiction of the appeal because the 30-day period for the filing of the notice of appeal is not suspended by the filing of a motion objecting to costs. Time for appeal therefore expired on November 9, 1981. O'Connell v. Heisdorf, 202 M 89, 656 P2d 199, 39 St. Rep. 2347 (1982).

Appeal of Prior Issue — Dismissed: The Supreme Court dismissed an appeal raising the same issue of attorney fees that was addressed in a prior determination of the court that constituted a final adjudication. Belgrade St. Bank v. Swainson, 176 M 444, 578 P2d 1166 (1978).

Burden of Proof: Verified memorandum is prima facie evidence of correctness of items of disbursements, and the burden of overcoming such prima facie case rests on the adverse party, the party filing the memorandum being required to furnish further proof only in rebuttal. Letz v. Letz, 123 M 494, 215 P2d 534 (1950).

Time for Filing Objections: Entry of judgment for costs in favor of the prevailing party without giving the losing party 5 days to object to the cost bill constitutes error. Girson v. Girson, 112 M 183, 114 P2d 274 (1941).

Motion to Retax Costs: A "motion" to retax costs may be made by filing a writing or by word of mouth; it must specifically show in what respects taxation is claimed erroneous and point out the items objected to, giving opposing counsel opportunity of presence and opposition to it. Gahagan v. Gugler, 100 M 599, 52 P2d 150 (1935).

Case Notes

Costs in Attorney Disciplinary Action Governed by Montana Rules for Lawyer Disciplinary Enforcement: Attorney Potts objected to the statement of costs filed by the Office of Disciplinary Counsel stemming from disciplinary proceedings against Potts before the Commission on Practice, asserted that the Office violated several statutes and former Rule 33, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), in assigning costs as directed in In re Potts, 2007 MT 81, 336 M 517, 158 P3d 418 (2007), and requested a hearing before an adjudicatory panel regarding reasonableness of the costs. The Supreme Court held that, in accord with the court's authority to regulate and discipline attorneys, the Montana Rules for Lawyer Disciplinary Enforcement (MRLDE), not the statutes and rules applicable to civil actions generally, govern costs imposed by the Office as discipline or sanctions against attorneys. Under Rule 9(A)(8), MRLDE, the attorney must pay reasonable costs of any professional services employed by the Commission, and the case was remanded for a hearing before an adjudicatory panel for consideration of the reasonableness of the amount requested by the Office for each category of costs. In re Potts, 2007 MT 236, 339 M 186, 171 P3d 286 (2007).

Right to Costs on Appeal — Effect of Failure to File Memorandum:

A party was not entitled to the costs of an appeal when she did not claim them in the manner provided in 25-10-503 by a bill of costs prepared under 25-10-501. In re Marriage of Carlson, 220 M 204, 714 P2d 116, 43 St. Rep. 295 (1986).

The successful party is entitled to his costs on appeal, whether or not a formal order to that effect is made by the Supreme Court, if he files a memorandum of his costs with the Clerk of the District Court within 30 days after the remittitur is filed with that officer; failure to do so deprives him of his right to have them included in the judgment in his favor on a subsequent trial. First St. Bank v. Larsen, 72 M 400, 233 P 960 (1925).

Inclusion of Costs Not Approved by Court — Execution Void: In divorce proceeding, inclusion in memorandum of both allowable statutory costs under section 21-137, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), and attorney's fee, to which the wife was not entitled because of failure to file motion on appeal, constituted noncompliance with this section and made the execution void. State ex rel. Sowerwine v. District Court, 145 M 375, 401 P2d 568 (1965).

Execution for Costs Without Regard to Retrial: The order taxing appeal costs becomes a part of the judgment ordered by the remittitur and not a part of the judgment upon the retrial, for this section gives the successful appellant the immediate right to a Writ of Execution without regard to a subsequent retrial of the cause. It thus becomes in effect a part of the judgment of the Supreme Court, over which the District Court has no jurisdiction except to enforce it or to determine disputed items. State ex rel. Vaughn v. District Court, 111 M 552, 111 P2d 810 (1941).

Review of Cost Proceedings: Since the order taxing appeal costs is appealable when judgment is affirmed, because it is an order made after final judgment, but on a reversal there is no judgment in existence, hence such order is not appealable, it would seem that in either case such order relates to the judgment of the Supreme Court, and no appeal lying therefrom, such an order or one striking an appeal cost bill should be reviewable by special proceeding, the same being true of a District Court order taxing costs, coming too late for review with the judgment. State ex rel. Vaughn v. District Court, 111 M 552, 111 P2d 810 (1941).

Original Proceedings in Supreme Court: When original proceedings for a Writ of Supervisory Control are instituted in the Supreme Court, the 5-day rule applicable to matters arising in the District Court under 25-10-501 applies, as no remittitur is issued or filed. State ex rel. Clark v. District Court, 103 M 145, 61 P2d 836 (1936).

Time for Filing Memorandum: One claiming his costs awarded by the Supreme Court on appeal must, under this section, deliver his memorandum, verified as provided by 25-10-501, to the Clerk of the District Court within 30 days after the remittitur has been filed. Lasby v. Burgess, 93 M 349, 18 P2d 1104 (1933).

Service of Memorandum: The provisions of 25-10-501 with reference to service are applicable to costs awarded by an appellate court under this section. State ex rel. Riddell v. District Court, 33 M 529, 85 P 367 (1905).

Effect of Memorandum as Judgment — Jurisdiction of Court: Subject to a motion to strike out disputed items, the filing of the memorandum has the same effect as a formal entry of judgment, and the trial court had no further function to perform after execution thereon than it has in case of an execution on a final judgment. State ex rel. Hurley v. District Court, 27 M 40, 69 P 244 (1902). See also State ex rel. Coffey v. District Court, 74 M 355, 240 P 667 (1926).

Failure to Object to Items — Waiver of Objections: Where a party to whom the costs of an appeal were awarded erroneously included in the memorandum thereof, filed and served pursuant to this section, items of costs on the trial below, the adverse party, by failing to make a seasonable motion to strike out such items and by moving to quash on other grounds the execution issued on such memorandum, waived objection to the erroneous items. State ex rel. Hurley v. District Court, 27 M 40, 69 P 244 (1902).

Execution for Costs Upon Demand: When a party to whom costs are awarded has complied with the statute, the clerk must issue execution for his costs whenever he demands it. State ex rel. Hurley v. District Court, 27 M 40, 69 P 244 (1902).

25-10-504. Clerk to include costs in judgment.

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Case Notes

Review of Costs: Although the order taxing costs follows the entry of judgment in point of time, it is in theory an intermediate order, and when taxed, the costs are inserted in the blank left in the judgment as originally entered and become a part of the judgment theretofore entered, without changing the date of entry of judgment. For that reason it was not "a special order made after final judgment" within the meaning of subsection (2), section 93-8003, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by M.R.Civ.P.), and can be reviewed only on appeal from the judgment, and the time for appeal runs from the date of judgment. State ex rel. Vaughn v. District Court, 111 M 552, 111 P2d 810 (1941).

Supreme Court Judgments: This section may very well be construed as applying to judgments rendered or ordered by an appellate court. At any rate, it should be so applied as to make it the duty of the clerk below, in the absence of specific directions as to interest, to include in the judgment interest from the date of the order of the Supreme Court to the time of entry of the judgment. State ex rel Dolenty v. Reece, 43 M 291, 115 P 681 (1911).

Clerk's Duty as Ministerial Act: The Clerk of the District Court, in carrying out the provisions of this section relative to the insertion of costs in the judgment where the same have been taxed or ascertained, acts in a ministerial capacity. Butte N. Copper Co. v. Radmilovich, 39 M 157, 101 P 1078 (1909); Orr v. Haskell, 2 M 350 (1876), distinguished in Ryan v. Maxey, 15 M 100, 38 P 228 (1894).

Part 6
Security for Costs

25-10-601. Security for costs from nonresident plaintiff.

Case Notes

Purpose of Statute — Application to Will Contests: The purpose of the provision that security for costs may be demanded of a nonresident plaintiff is to prevent one from starting a groundless action and escaping the consequences of costs by reason of nonresidence, and it applies to will contests, such contests being included in the term "action". State ex rel. Langan v. District Court, 111 M 178, 107 P2d 880 (1940).

Multiple Defendants — No Stay of Proceedings: Demand upon a foreign corporation for security for costs made by one of two defendants pursuant to this section did not operate to stay proceedings between plaintiff and the nondemanding defendant. Middle States Oil Corp. v. Tanner-Jones Drilling Co., 73 M 180, 235 P 770 (1925).

Waiver of Security: The provision for requiring security of a nonresident plaintiff confers a personal privilege upon the defendant that may be waived and was waived by defendant's failure to make the motion until after the cause had been remanded by the Supreme Court for a new trial. State ex rel. Chilcott v. District Court, 68 M 57, 216 P 790 (1923).

Necessity of Notice of Demand for Security: This section and 25-10-602 clearly contemplate that the right to demand security for costs from a nonresident is merely a privilege, which the defendant may insist upon; but the demand, if made, must be made upon notice given to the plaintiff. Brazell v. Cohn, 32 M 556, 81 P 339 (1905).

Time of Demand for Security: Where defendant did not apply for an order requiring plaintiff, a nonresident of the state, to give security for costs until the day on which the cause was set for trial and where no previous notice of such demand had been given, the District Court was justified in denying a stay until the cost bond was given, on the ground that the application was made too late. Brazell v. Cohn, 32 M 556, 81 P 339 (1905).

Part 7
Payment of Costs by Governmental Entities

25-10-701. Public officers not to be personally taxed.

Case Notes

No Opportunity for Parties to Address Issues — Award of Attorney Fees Premature: An award of attorney fees based on this section is premature unless and until an appropriate record is created and the parties have a full and fair opportunity to address the issues. Clark v. Dussault, 265 M 479, 878 P2d 239, 51 St. Rep. 642 (1994).

Mandamus — Special Statute: The provision for taxing costs or damages against the state, county, or municipality is applicable generally to all forms of action, other than mandamus; as to the latter, 27-26-403, being a special statute, is controlling. State ex rel. O'Connor v. McCarthy, 86 M 100, 282 P 1045 (1929).

Officer Not Personally Liable: There is no difference between an officer who appears "in behalf" of the state, county, or municipality and one who "represents" such a body in a court action; hence in either event he is exempt from personal liability for damages or costs in an action prosecuted or defended by him in his official capacity under this section or in a mandamus proceeding resulting adversely to him under 27-26-403. State ex rel. O'Connor v. McCarthy, 86 M 100, 282 P 1045 (1929).

Forfeiture Proceedings — Costs Awarded: In a proceeding for the forfeiture of intoxicating liquors and property used in violation of the prohibition law (since repealed), which is neither a criminal nor a civil action but is special in its nature, costs may be awarded the claimant against the State when it is the losing party. St. v. Rouleau, 68 M 529, 219 P 1096 (1923).

Judge as Respondent — Cost as Against County: In view of this section, it would seem that the county represented by respondent judge in a special proceeding before the Supreme Court is properly chargeable with the costs upon judgment in favor of relator. State ex rel. Loundagin v. Tattan, 56 M 211, 181 P 984 (1919).

Stenographic Fees for Transcript Furnished to Attorney General: Where the Attorney General, conducting a proceeding on behalf of the State, demanded of the court stenographer a transcript of his notes taken therein, it was the stenographer's ministerial duty to deliver them without demanding his fees in advance. State ex rel. Donovan v. Ledwidge, 27 M 197, 70 P 511 (1902).

25-10-702. Payment of costs by state.

Case Notes

Forfeiture Proceedings — Costs as Against State: In a proceeding for the forfeiture of intoxicating liquors and property used in violation of the prohibition law (since repealed), which is neither a criminal nor a civil action but is special in its nature, costs may be awarded the defendant against the State when it is the losing party. St. v. Rouleau, 68 M 529, 219 P 1096 (1923).

25-10-711. Award of costs against governmental entity when suit or defense is frivolous or pursued in bad faith.

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Case Notes

Attorney Fees Improper — Preliminary Injunction Denial Not Dispositive: In an action to determine whether two casino smoking structures complied with the Montana Clean Indoor Air Act (MCIAA), the District Court denied the Cascade City-County Board of Health's motion for a preliminary injunction and granted summary judgment to the casino owners. The District Court awarded attorney fees to the casino owners and the Board appealed, but because the Supreme Court concluded that the structures failed to comply with the MCIAA, the casino owners did not qualify for attorney fees and were not the prevailing party for purposes of this section. MC, Inc. v. Cascade City-County Bd. of Health, 2015 MT 52, 378 Mont. 267, 343 P.3d 1208.

Section Inapplicable If Award of Costs Based on Express Constitutional Provision: In good faith, the City of Missoula seized land properly belonging to landowners for street improvements, resulting in a successful inverse condemnation action by the landowners. Although the District Court made no finding that the city's actions were frivolous or undertaken in bad faith, because the award of costs and fees was based on a constitutional provision in Art. II, sec. 29, Mont. Const., this section's limitation on costs and fees was inapplicable. Wohl v. Missoula, 2013 MT 46, 369 Mont. 108, 300 P.3d 1119.

Subsequently, in Wohl II, the Supreme Court affirmed the award of attorney fees incurred during the prior appeal as well as those incurred in District Court. Wohl v. Missoula, 2014 MT 310, 377 Mont. 148, 339 P.3d 58.

Good Faith Defense of Statute by Attorney General When Constitutional Rights Vindicated — Private Attorney General Doctrine Inapplicable: Following the United States Supreme Court's ruling in Citizens United v. F.E.C., 558 US 310, 130 S Ct 876 (2010), the plaintiffs challenged a Montana statute that prohibited campaign contributions from corporations, claiming it violated the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. The District Court granted the plaintiffs summary judgment, the Montana Supreme Court reversed, and the United States Supreme Court summarily reversed the Montana Supreme Court. The plaintiffs then sought attorney fees under the private attorney general doctrine. The Montana Supreme Court concluded that the plaintiffs were not entitled to attorney fees because even though the plaintiffs vindicated constitutional rights, the Attorney General defended a statute that was grounded in constitutional principles and his defense of the statute was neither frivolous nor in bad faith. W. Tradition Partnership, Inc. v. Attorney General, 2012 MT 271, 367 Mont. 112, 291 P.3d 545.

Failure to Object to Attorney Fees in Bill of Costs Not Waiver — Denial of Attorney Fees Proper: After receiving a jury award of over a half million dollars, the plaintiffs sought attorney fees under 25-10-711, claiming that the county's defense had been frivolous and pursued in bad faith. The plaintiffs filed a motion for attorney fees and submitted a bill of costs that included attorney fees. The county did not object to the bill of costs, but it timely opposed the plaintiffs' motion to seek attorney fees. The plaintiffs claimed that the county had waived its objection to the attorney fee award because it did not also object to the bill of costs. The District Court disagreed. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the denial of attorney fees, agreeing that the county had not waived its objection by not specifically objecting to the bill of costs given that it had already filed a brief in opposition to the motion for attorney fees. Moreover, the Supreme Court determined that the plaintiffs were not entitled to fees under 25-10-711 because the county's failure to raise legitimate arguments did not render its defense frivolous or pursued in bad faith. Slack v. The Landmark Co., 2011 MT 292, 362 Mont. 514, 267 P.3d 6.

Statute-Based Holding — Private Attorney General Doctrine Inapplicable Absent Vindication of Constitutional Interests: The private attorney general doctrine for the award of attorney fees applies when the government fails to properly enforce interests that are significant to its citizens, but the doctrine only applies when constitutional interests are vindicated. When a holding is statute-based rather than a determination of constitutional interests, the award of fees under the private attorney general doctrine is not warranted. Baxter v. St., 2009 MT 449, 354 M 234, 224 P3d 1211 (2009). See also Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800 (1999), and Am. Cancer Soc'y v. St., 2004 MT 376, 325 M 70, 103 P3d 1085 (2004).

Challenge to Driver's License Suspension Considered Special Proceeding — Successful Defendant Entitled to Costs: Neal's driver's license was suspended for failure to take a breath test. Neal challenged the suspension, claiming that he did not refuse to take a breath test, and the District Court agreed. Neal's license was reinstated and Neal was granted costs. The state objected to the award of costs, and the District Court amended the original order and denied costs, so Neal appealed. Neal contended that as the prevailing party, an award of costs was proper under 25-10-101(2) because the license was valued at more than $50 or under 25-10-101(4) because the petition to reinstate the license was a special proceeding. The state contended that the particular provisions of this section prevailed over the general provisions of 25-10-101, so 25-10-101 did not apply. The Supreme Court disagreed, finding no inconsistency between the statutes. This section applies to actions in which a party prevails against a government entity and can establish that the government's claim or defense was frivolous or pursued in bad faith, but no such finding is required for recovery of costs under 25-10-101. The court went on to find that Neal's claim that costs were proper based on the license value was unfounded, because no finding of valuation was ever determined. However, the court concluded that a challenge to a driver's license suspension or revocation was a special proceeding pursuant to 27-1-102, and that as the prevailing party in the action, Neal was entitled to costs pursuant to 25-10-101. Neal v. St., 2003 MT 53, 314 M 357, 66 P3d 280 (2003).

Improper Award of Attorney Fees Incurred in Proving Attorney Fees: About 2½ years after settling a condemnation case, the Department of Transportation offered the Slacks $26,000 to settle their claim for litigation expenses. The next day, the Slacks filed a supplemental memorandum of litigation expenses requesting an additional $50,407.84 for expenses incurred in the action for fees. The District Court concluded that the Department had pursued litigation over the appropriate amount of litigation expenses in bad faith and awarded the Slacks $62,547 for expenses incurred in the fee litigation. The Department appealed the award of fees in the fee action. The Supreme Court examined the fees awarded for the fee litigation, applying St. v. McGuckin, 242 M 81, 788 P2d 926 (1990), for the proposition that the District Court has the authority to award attorney fees as a rare exception in which extraordinary circumstances justify the award of attorney fees incurred in proving the amount of attorney fees incurred in the underlying litigation. However, this was not one of those extraordinary circumstances that arises when the state's objection to the condemnee's fee claim is unreasonable. Here, the Department presented testimony from two experts who asserted that the attorney fees claimed in the fee litigation were excessive and duplicative, and although the District Court did not find the testimony compelling enough to grant a reduction in fees, the Department's claim could not be characterized as unreasonable. The District Court abused its discretion in awarding the Slacks attorney fees incurred in proving attorney fees, and that award was reversed. State ex rel. Dept. of Transportation v. Slack, 2001 MT 137, 305 M 488, 29 P3d 503 (2001), followed in K&R Partnership v. Whitefish, 2008 MT 228, 344 M 336, 189 P3d 593 (2008), regarding the necessity to demonstrate extraordinary circumstances to justify a request for fees on fees. See also Wohl v. Missoula, 2013 MT 46, 369 Mont. 108, 300 P.3d 1119, finding fees incurred in proving underlying litigation fees other than attorney fees properly requested.

Doctrine of Private Attorney General Applied — Three-Part Test for Awarding Attorney Fees: The District Court concluded that under this section, attorney fees were not available to plaintiff in this case because the action involved "neither frivolous conduct, extreme conduct, nor bad faith by the State". Plaintiff argued that it was entitled to attorney fees under the doctrine of private attorney general, which is an equitable exception to the American rule that a party is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory provision. Under Serrano v. Priest, 569 P2d 1303 (Calif. 1977), there are three basic factors to be considered in awarding attorney fees based on the doctrine of private attorney general: (1) the strength or societal importance of the public policy vindicated by the litigation; (2) the necessity of private enforcement and the magnitude of the resultant burden on plaintiff; and (3) the number of people standing to benefit from the decision. Here, plaintiff prevailed in a challenge to the constitutionality of numerous statutes regarding the state's administration of school trust lands. The litigation involved important public policies grounded in the constitution, requiring private constitutional enforcement, and benefited a large class of citizens interested in Montana's public schools. The District Court ignored recognized principles in denying plaintiff's reasonable attorney fees, resulting in substantial injustice. The Supreme Court applied the Serrano test and reversed for an award of attorney fees to plaintiff under the doctrine of private attorney general. Montanans for Responsible Use of School Trust v. State ex rel. Bd. of Land Comm'rs, 1999 MT 263, 296 M 402, 989 P2d 800, 56 St. Rep. 1065 (1999), following In re Porter, 156 M 190, 478 P2d 866 (1970), distinguishing School District v. St., 236 M 44, 769 P2d 684, 46 St. Rep. 169 (1989), and followed in Columbia Falls Elementary School District No. 6 v. St., 2005 MT 69, 326 M 304, 109 P3d 257 (2005), and Sunburst School District No. 2 v. Texaco, Inc., 2007 MT 183, 338 M 259, 165 P3d 1079 (2007).

Unsuccessful Defense to State's Requirement That Firefighters at Airport Belong to National Guard — Costs and Attorney Fees Denied: Because the state's defense to a firefighter's petition for judgment declaring it unconstitutional for the state to require Air National Guard membership of its firefighters protecting National Guard aircraft was not frivolous or in bad faith, it was not an abuse of discretion to refuse costs and attorney fees to the prevailing firefighter. McKamey v. St., 268 M 137, 885 P2d 515, 51 St. Rep. 1218 (1994).

Attorney Fees Not to Be Awarded Unless Requested by Party: The District Court ruled that the Department of Revenue had acted in bad faith and thus awarded DeVoe attorney fees in a tax protest case. The Supreme Court held that the actions of the Department warranted an award but that DeVoe had not requested attorney fees and that the award could not be made when the Department had been given no opportunity to defend against a claim for fees. DeVoe v. Dept. of Revenue, 263 M 100, 866 P2d 228, 50 St. Rep. 1731 (1993).

No Attorney Fees Absent Showing of Frivolous or Bad Faith Defense: As part of its defense, the state maintained the legitimacy of its insurance claim, represented that the government's improprieties were harmless, and attacked Weber's job performance while a state employee. Although Weber prevailed in his wrongful discharge claim against the state, attorney fees were not awardable to him under this section absent a showing that the defense of the state was either frivolous or pursued in bad faith. Weber v. St., 253 M 148, 831 P2d 1359, 49 St. Rep. 397 (1992).

Private Attorney General Doctrine Inapplicable to Case in Which Recovery Sought for Personal Losses for Wrongful Discharge: As part of his wrongful discharge claim, Weber sought to apply the private attorney general doctrine, which allows the prevailing party to receive an award of costs and attorney fees when the government fails to enforce interests significant to its citizens. In seeking to apply the doctrine, Weber focused on the egregious conduct surrounding an inflated agency claim, which he was ordered by his superiors to pay, rather than on the conduct that led to his wrongful discharge. The Supreme Court held that the private attorney general exception did not apply because Weber's claim was brought to reimburse him for losses due to his wrongful discharge rather than as a vehicle to reimburse the state for fraudulent claims. Weber v. St., 253 M 148, 831 P2d 1359, 49 St. Rep. 397 (1992).

No Bad Faith When State Required to Defend: The plaintiffs argued that they were entitled to attorney fees because the state's defense in a tax assessment case was frivolous or made in bad faith. The Supreme Court ruled that the state had a statutory duty to defend against all claims that a tax assessment was erroneous and that therefore the state's action could not be frivolous or in bad faith. The court also pointed out that the plaintiffs had not met the other requirement for obtaining attorney fees because the state had won the case. Kruse v. Cascade County, 244 M 126, 796 P2d 568, 47 St. Rep. 1445 (1990).

Failure to Prevail or Establish Frivolous Defense — Costs Disallowed: The trial court's conclusion that plaintiff had not prevailed in an action and that each party acted in good faith in bringing and defending the lawsuit was sufficient to preclude the award of fees and costs under this section and under the court's exercise of its equity power. Myers v. Dept. of Agriculture, 232 M 286, 756 P2d 1144, 45 St. Rep. 1056 (1988).

Attorney Fees as Element of Costs Granted Against Governmental Entity: In a case where the Department of Revenue sought back child support, received and cashed a check from defendant in an accord and satisfaction, then 1 year later levied execution on defendant's accrued and future wages and, although under a restraining order not to attempt collection or enforcement of a distraint warrant, intercepted defendant's federal and state income tax refunds, the District Court properly awarded costs to the defendant in the form of attorney fees under 25-10-711. The Supreme Court affirmed, citing the holding in State ex rel. Florence-Carlton Consol. School District v. District Court, 193 M 413, 632 P2d 318, 38 St. Rep. 1204 (1981), that if, under all the circumstances of a case, justice would require the imposition of costs, equity can further provide in extreme cases to allow attorney fees as an element of those costs. St. v. Frank, 226 M 283, 735 P2d 290, 44 St. Rep. 657 (1987), distinguished, in the absence of proof of extreme state conduct, in Weber v. St., 253 M 148, 831 P2d 1359, 49 St. Rep. 397 (1992).

State's Tax Appeal — Costs and Attorney Fees Denied Taxpayer — Appeal Not Frivolous or in Bad Faith: There was substantial evidence to support trial court's determination that Department of Revenue's appeal was neither frivolous nor in bad faith and that taxpayer thus was not entitled to costs and attorney fees under 25-10-711. An issue raised by the Department was retroactive application to a prior landowner of the tax-exempt status granted taxpayer. This issue was well within the bounds of legitimate argument on a substantial issue on which there was a bona fide difference of opinion, and the Department prevailed on the issue. Taxpayer's contention that the appeal was in bad faith because the Department challenged existing law in a prior case was unfounded, since the prior case was 20 years old. The law is not static. Furthermore, there was an issue not resolved by the prior case. Dept. of Revenue v. New Life Fellowship of Mont., Inc., 217 M 192, 703 P2d 860, 42 St. Rep. 1129 (1985). See also Harris v. Bauer, 230 M 207, 749 P2d 1068, 45 St. Rep. 147 (1988), Armstrong v. St., 250 M 468, 820 P2d 1273, 48 St. Rep. 995 (1991), Mont. Health Care Ass'n v. St. Fund, 256 M 146, 845 P2d 113, 50 St. Rep. 1 (1993), Jones v. Billings, 279 M 341, 927 P2d 9, 53 St. Rep. 1178 (1996), and Ostergren v. Dept. of Revenue, 2004 MT 30, 319 M 405, 85 P3d 738 (2004).

Contractual Liability for Attorney Fees — Fees Not "Costs" Absent Bad Faith: Where the State executed a 6-year lease of certain communications equipment with the plaintiff by a lease providing that the State would pay the lessor for "legal expenses" incurred as a result of any default by the State and unilaterally terminated the lease 3 years later, the trial court did not err in holding the State liable for attorney fees under the indemnity provisions in the lease. A reading of the applicable statutes indicates that liability for attorney fees can arise from contract but cannot be awarded as "costs" absent bad faith on the State's part. Leaseamerica Corp. of Wisc. v. St., 191 M 462, 625 P2d 68, 38 St. Rep. 398 (1981).

CHAPTER 11
NEW TRIAL

Part 1
General Provisions

25-11-101. New trial defined.

GENERAL

Parties Restored to Original Position: The granting of a motion for a new trial restores the parties to the positions they occupied before the trial and the action is commenced anew with the parties limited to their original pleadings but unbound by previous evidence and testimony except as held by existing rules of evidence. Waite v. Waite, 143 M 248, 389 P2d 181 (1964), followed in Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1998 MT 47, 288 M 1, 955 P2d 160, 55 St. Rep. 198 (1998).

Erroneous Findings of Fact as Grounds for Motion: A motion for a new trial lies where an issue of fact was wrongfully or erroneously determined by the jury or by direction of the court. Buckhouse v. Parsons, 60 M 156, 198 P 444 (1921).

New Trial for Improperly Tried Causes of Action: Where the issue or issues in one cause of action have been properly tried and those in another cause of action in the same suit have been improperly tried, a new trial should be granted only as to those issues that have been improperly tried, if it can be done without confusion resulting upon the retrial. Hamilton v. Nelson, 22 M 539, 57 P 146 (1899); Ramsdell v. Clark, 20 M 103, 49 P 591 (1897).

New Trial for Distinct Causes of Action: A new trial can be granted as to one or more of several causes of action included and tried in the same suit, where the issues have not been blended, and each cause of action remains distinguishable and separable even after verdict. Ramsdell v. Clark, 20 M 103, 49 P 591 (1897).

"ISSUE OF FACT"

Ruling on Motion Not Included — How Reviewed: The term "issue of fact" as used in this section refers only to issues arising under the pleadings, hence a motion for new trial does not lie from a ruling on a motion, the ruling being reviewable on appeal from the judgment. Davis v. Bell Boy Gold Min. Co., 101 M 534, 54 P2d 563 (1936).

Assessment of Damages Not Trial: The court's action in ordering the damages to be assessed by a jury, in actions ex delicto, where the defendant has failed to answer or the plaintiff to reply, is not the trial of an issue of fact raised by the pleadings. State ex rel. Culbertson Ferry Co. v. District Court, 49 M 595, 144 P 159 (1914).

Controversies Excluded: Controversies that do not arise upon written pleadings authorized or required by statute do not fall within the purview of this section. State ex rel. Culbertson Ferry Co. v. District Court, 49 M 595, 144 P 159 (1914); In re Antonioli's Estate, 42 M 219, 111 P 1033 (1910), distinguished in In re Stinger Estate, 61 M 173, 201 P 693 (1921).

No New Trial If No Issue: There can be no new trial where there is no issue of fact presented by the pleadings to be reexamined. State ex rel. Culbertson Ferry Co. v. District Court, 49 M 595, 144 P 159 (1914).

Other Circumstances Excluded: A new trial lies for the reexamination of an issue of fact created on the pleadings, but not under any other circumstances. State ex rel. Culbertson Ferry Co. v. District Court, 49 M 595, 144 P 159 (1914).

Sense in Which Term Used: The expression "issue of fact", used in its broader sense, would include every issue of fact, whether arising upon formal pleadings or upon a motion. As used here, however, it refers only to issues of fact raised by formal pleadings. State ex rel. Culbertson Ferry Co. v. District Court, 49 M 595, 144 P 159 (1914); In re Antonioli's Estate, 42 M 219, 111 P 1033 (1910); State ex rel. Heinze v. District Court, 28 M 227, 72 P 613 (1903).

Raised by Pleadings: An issue of fact on which a new trial can be granted is raised by the pleadings, and a statement on motion for new trial is confined to such issues. A new trial of a motion is not authorized. Beach v. Spokane Ranch & Water Co., 21 M 7, 52 P 560 (1898).

25-11-102. Grounds for new trial.

Compiler's Comments

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

1981 Amendment: Deleted "(8) that the right to have a bill of exceptions has been lost, either through the death or incapacity of the court reporter or in any manner that was not the fault of the losing party."

Bill of Exceptions — Statute Superseded: Former sections 93-5504 through 93-5509, R.C.M. 1947, defining and establishing the use of a bill of exceptions, have been superseded by former Rules 9, 10, and 25, M.R.App.P. (now superseded). The use of exceptions was also abolished by former Rules 7(c) and 46, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and 25-31-503 (now repealed). The reference to the bill of exceptions, which was contained in subsection (8) of this section prior to the 1981 amendment, is therefore obsolete.

GENERAL

Improper Prejudicial Comments by Defense Counsel — New Trial Warranted: The plaintiff filed claims against the defendant railroad, his longtime employer, under the Federal Employers' Liability Act for cumulative trauma injury. Before trial, the plaintiff filed motions in limine to preclude defense counsel from making improper personalization, opinion, or commentary on him or his attorneys. Although the motions in limine were granted, defense counsel made a number of remarks in violation of the motions that implied that the plaintiff's claims were bogus and driven by greed. After a jury found in favor of the defendant, the plaintiff filed a motion for a new trial, which the District Court denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court overturned the jury's verdict and remanded the matter for a new trial, finding that the cumulative effect of the defense's comments could have improperly prejudiced the jury. Anderson v. BNSF Ry., 2015 MT 240, 380 Mont. 319, 354 P.3d 1248.

Spontaneous Response to Judge's Question Regarding Value of Home — Not Judicial Admission — Error to Not Allow Evidence of Home Value: During a dissolution proceeding, the judge asked the husband, who was appearing pro se, to estimate the value of a home. Later, the District Court disallowed the husband from presenting evidence that the value of the home was less than he had previously guessed, concluding that his previous statement was a judicial admission. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded, holding that the husband's statement regarding the value of the home was not a judicial admission and that the District Court erred by not allowing him to offer evidence of the home's value. In its conclusion, the Supreme Court emphasized that the husband was taken by surprise at the District Court's question regarding value and that his response was a guess. In re Marriage of Carle/Steyh, 2015 MT 193, 380 Mont. 48, 353 P.3d 488.

Loss of Video Footage — Improper Finding That Statements in Brief Opposing Sanctions for Spoliation of Evidence Did Not Constitute Judicial Admissions: The plaintiff requested that a store manager retain footage of her fall at the store the previous day. The plaintiff filed a negligence claim against the defendant related to the fall and, upon learning that the video footage had been erased, filed a motion for discovery sanctions. In its brief opposing sanctions, the defendant agreed with some of the plaintiff's statements regarding the content of the footage. During trial, however, the defendant made arguments about the video footage that contradicted those made in its earlier brief. The plaintiff appealed the District Court's decision, arguing that the statements in the defendant's brief constituted judicial admissions and that the District Court abused its discretion when it did not treat those statements as judicial admissions at trial. The Supreme Court ruled that the statements in the brief were judicial admissions and remanded the case for a new trial. Bilesky v. Shopko Stores Operating Co., LLC, 2014 MT 300, 377 Mont. 58, 338 P.3d 76.

Alleged Factual and Procedural Errors Insufficient for New Trial: As a pro se litigant in a negligence trial, the defendant alleged he was entitled to a new trial and a new judge based on erroneous evidentiary rulings, witness bias, and failure of some witnesses to attend trial or, alternatively, on the District Court's failure to appoint new trial counsel when the defendant had previously chosen to proceed pro se. However, the defendant failed to establish that the District Court abused its discretion regarding the admissibility of any evidence or that any ruling materially affected his rights. There was also no evidence that the defendant did not understand the waiver he signed to proceed without a jury trial. Stewart v. Rice, 2013 MT 55, 369 Mont. 203, 296 P.3d 1174.

Evaluation of Codefendant's Competency Required Prior to Trial: A defendant was held vicariously liable for injuries her son caused during a tractor accident. Prior to a bench trial, the defendant's counsel withdrew as her attorney and noted that she was incompetent and required a conservator. The Supreme Court held that the circumstances required an evaluation of the defendant's need for a conservator prior to the trial and that she was not provided with appropriate notice of the proceedings by plaintiff's counsel, which, when combined with the competency issue, required a new trial as to the defendant's vicarious liability only. Stewart v. Rice, 2013 MT 55, 369 Mont. 203, 296 P.3d 1174.

Counsel's Failure to Make Timely Objection Constituting Waiver on Appeal — Denial of Motion for New Trial Based on Insurance-Related Arguments Appropriate: The plaintiff argued in a negligence action that he was entitled to a new trial as a result of the defendant's alleged attempt to introduce evidence of a related bad faith insurance case. However, the District Court did not abuse its discretion when it denied the plaintiff's motion since his theory of the case was that the defendant was responsible for the conduct of its agent, Farmers Insurance Company, and since the plaintiff failed to timely object to statements during the trial that he now labels as prejudicial or misleading. Horn v. Bull River Country Store Properties, LLC, 2012 MT 245, 366 Mont. 491, 288 P.3d 218.

Reliance on Settled-Party Defense Appropriate — New Trial Not Warranted: In a negligence action regarding alleged water-contaminated diesel fuel, the District Court correctly determined that the plaintiff was not entitled to a new trial as a result of the defendant's reliance on the settled third-party defense authorized by 27-1-703, since the jury found the named party defendant not negligent and the special verdict form gave no indication whether the jury might have considered the settled parties negligent. Horn v. Bull River Country Store Properties, LLC, 2012 MT 245, 366 Mont. 491, 288 P.3d 218.

Jury's Failure to Answer Interrogatories in Special Verdict — Verdict Upheld: Although the jury failed to answer all of the interrogatories presented to it in the special verdict, the Supreme Court, relying on Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 Mont. 228, 211 P.2d 420 (1949), concluded the verdict was not defective and a new trial was not warranted. The jury sufficiently manifested its apportionment of liability in the special verdict. In addition, the District Court informed the parties that the jury had proceeded to a single question in completing the special verdict and, despite receiving this notice, the party claiming error did not object or poll the jury, thereby waiving any challenge to the verdict on appeal. United Tool Rental, Inc. v. Riverside Contracting, Inc., 2011 MT 213, 361 Mont. 493, 260 P.3d 156.

Prior Pleadings — Statements Properly Excluded: Novartis alleged the District Court erred when it excluded a statement in the complaint alleging the prescribing physician was aware of the risks associated with Zometa and negligently failed to warn the plaintiff. However, the statements were not statements of fact and were not judicial admissions. Novartis also alleged the District Court should have allowed it to introduce in an answer filed with the Montana Medical Legal Panel a statement from the oral surgeon who performed dental surgery on the plaintiff. Novartis sought to impeach the plaintiff with evidence that tooth extraction was the only treatment option, but it was not clear that the evidence would have affected the outcome of the case. The District Court did not err in excluding the statement. Stevens v. Novartis Pharmaceuticals Corp., 2010 MT 282, 358 Mont. 474, 247 P.3d 244.

Evidence of Other Verdicts Improper — New Trial Properly Granted: In a trial of a Federal Employers' Liability Act claim in which the District Court granted the plaintiff's motion for a new trial based on the court's improper admission of evidence of other verdicts, the plaintiff's questioning of an expert witness regarding previous testimony about whole-body vibration injuries may have opened the door to evidence of other verdicts, but the evidence should have been excluded. The District Court did not abuse its discretion when it granted the plaintiff's motion for a new trial in light of the witness's comments and the statements during closing arguments in which defense counsel noted that "24 of your neighbors . . . two jury panels" had found against similar plaintiffs in two other cases against the same company. Bircher v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2010 MT 121, 356 Mont. 357, 233 P.3d 348.

Irregularities in Court Proceedings and Comment by Defense Counsel Concerning "Black Mark" on Defendant's Reputation Improper — New Trial Warranted: In a medical malpractice trial that resulted in the jury finding no negligence on the part of the defendant physician, the District Court abused its discretion by not granting the plaintiff's motion for a new trial when, during closing arguments, defense counsel made statements that a negligence finding could be a "black mark" on the defendant's reputation. The statement was improper and highly prejudicial and warranted a new trial when considered in conjunction with statements made by jurors during voir dire expressing confusion about the preponderance of the evidence standard and that a negligence finding was similar to a "criminal sentence" for a physician. Cooper v. Hanson, 2010 MT 113, 356 Mont. 309, 234 P.3d 59.

Sanction for Failure to Object to Evidence by Motion In Limine — Admission of Patently Inadmissible Evidence Reversible Error: At Stevenson's trial alleging age discrimination, the trial court's scheduling order required that trial objections that could have been resolved by a pretrial motion in limine would be considered waived if not presented in a timely motion in limine. Defendant sought to introduce a Human Rights Bureau report that was patently inadmissible pursuant to Crockett v. Billings, 234 M 87, 761 P2d 813 (1988), but because plaintiff had not addressed the issue by pretrial motion, the trial court allowed the evidence. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. In this case, the trial court's establishment in the scheduling order of a waiver of the right to object to inadmissible evidence at trial was a sanction, especially when it resulted in the admission of patently inadmissible evidence. The sanction of waiver of the right to object to demonstrably inadmissible evidence is not recognized in the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, and the trial court's admission of patently inadmissible evidence constituted reversible error. Stevenson v. Felco Indus., Inc., 2009 MT 299, 352 M 303, 216 P3d 763 (2009). See also Boude v. Union Pac. RR Co., 2012 MT 98, 365 Mont. 32, 277 P.3d 1221.

Defendant Doctor Providing Care to Juror Stricken During Closing Arguments — Irregularity in Proceedings Warranting New Trial: During closing arguments in a medical malpractice trial, plaintiff's counsel graphically described the circumstances of decedent's death, and one of the jurors became ill in the courtroom. Defendant, who was a physician, provided emergency care to the juror. Plaintiff moved for a mistrial, but because there were no other irregularities in the trial proceedings, the District Court denied a mistrial, and the jury, with a new juror in place, eventually found for defendant. Plaintiff appealed, and the Supreme Court held that the mistrial motion should have been granted or a new trial should have been granted after the verdict. The Supreme Court held that the courtroom situation in which the defendant physician competently administered medical care to the stricken juror may have unfairly presented the defendant to the jury in a favorable light and predisposed the jury in the defendant's favor. Although the court assigned no fault to anyone who responded to the ill juror, the extraordinary event observed by the jury nevertheless adversely affected the right of plaintiff to a fair trial, so a mistrial or new trial was required. The case was reversed for further proceedings. Heidt v. Argani, 2009 MT 267, 352 M 86, 214 P3d 1255 (2009).

Right to Fair Trial Not Materially Affected by Claimed Trial Irregularities — Motion for New Trial Properly Denied: White claimed that a new trial was warranted based on defense counsel's misconduct during trial, failure of the trial court to sanction defendant because of counsel's misconduct, and failure of the trial court to give White's proposed limiting jury instruction. The Supreme Court examined each of the underlying claims and concluded that defense counsel did not engage in misconduct, that sanctions were properly denied, and that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to give White's proposed jury instruction. In light of these rulings, White's right to a fair trial was not materially affected by any claimed irregularities in the proceedings, so White's motion for a new trial was properly denied. White v. Johnson, 2009 MT 254, 351 M 534, 215 P3d 11 (2009).

Failure of District Court to Enforce Order Prohibiting Further References to Undisclosed Textbook — Manifest Abuse of Discretion Warranting New Trial: During discovery for Quebedeaux's medical malpractice trial, the defense failed to disclose a textbook that had been written by one of plaintiff's experts and that appeared to contradict that expert's testimony. During trial, an expert for the defense referenced the textbook during expert testimony. The District Court subsequently ruled that any further reference to the textbook was prohibited, but defense counsel nevertheless referenced the textbook during closing arguments. Plaintiff objected, but the District Court told counsel that the comment could be addressed during rebuttal. After a jury found for defendant, plaintiff moved for a new trial, asserting that defense counsel had made numerous misrepresentations regarding the textbook. The District Court denied a new trial and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court held that the defense's reference to the textbook was a significant contradiction of plaintiff's expert testimony by the expert's own writings, allowing the defense to gain an advantage and prejudicing plaintiff, and that plaintiff was therefore denied a fair trial by the surprise use of the textbook, by the defense's violation of the order prohibiting further reference to the textbook, and by the District Court's failure to enforce its order when plaintiff objected during closing arguments. The District Court's denial of plaintiff's motion for a new trial was a manifest abuse of discretion, and the Supreme Court reversed and remanded for a new trial. Willing v. Quebedeaux, 2009 MT 102, 350 M 119, 204 P3d 1248 (2009). See also Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381 (1994).

Violation of Construction Contract and Defamation — Denial of New Trial Supported by Evidence: Plaintiff building contractor sued the Theins after the contractor was not paid in full for construction of Theins' home. The jury awarded plaintiff substantial amounts for breach of contract, quantum meruit, defamation, punitive damages, attorney fees, costs, and prejudgment interest. Theins requested a new trial but the request was denied, so Theins appealed. The Supreme Court determined that Theins' substantial rights were not materially affected by irregularity in the proceedings, jury misconduct, accident or surprise, newly discovered evidence, excessive damages given under the influence of passion or prejudice, insufficiency of evidence, or legal error. In particular, the District Court correctly determined that no legal authority existed to support Theins' motion that the state building code constituted binding law in Gallatin County for house construction, and that given voluminous evidence presented by both parties regarding plaintiff's compliance with the contract and industry standards, Theins failed to demonstrate that the jury relied on incredible or inaccurate evidence for the verdict. Substantial evidence supported the verdict and a new trial was properly denied. Blue Ridge Homes, Inc. v. Thein, 2008 MT 264, 345 M 125, 191 P3d 374 (2008).

Sufficient Evidence of Violation of Turn Signal Law to Justify Plaintiff's Comparative Negligence: Hoffman was rear-ended by a logging truck while attempting a turn off of a two-lane highway, and the jury found that Hoffman was 50% negligent in the collision. Hoffman appealed on grounds that insubstantial evidence supported the jury's verdict. Although the evidence was conflicting regarding Hoffman's use of turn signals prior to the accident, Hoffman himself testified that he began signaling as much as 225 feet before stopping. However, 61-8-336 requires use of a turn signal not less than 300 feet before making a turn in a nonurban area. A jury is not free to disregard uncontradicted, credible, nonopinion testimony, and Hoffman's admission that he failed to signal for the full 300 feet was substantial credible evidence to support the jury's finding that Hoffman contributed to the crash and to his own injuries. The Supreme Court declined to disturb the verdict, and denial of Hoffman's motion for a new trial was affirmed. Hoffman v. Austin, 2006 MT 289, 334 M 357, 147 P3d 177 (2006), following Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48 (1997).

Counsel's Comments on Employee Handbook Implying Employment At Will Cured by Court Admonishment — No Grounds for New Trial: During closing arguments, defense counsel showed the jury a page from defendant's employee handbook that implied that plaintiff could be fired at will. Plaintiff contended that counsel's comments deprived her of a fair trial because Montana is not an at-will employment state. The Supreme Court disagreed. The handbook was entered into evidence by stipulation, and the jury had been shown the page during both direct and cross-examination without objection. Further, when plaintiff objected to presentation of the page during closing, the trial court cured any error by admonishing the jury to disregard the paragraph in question because it did not reflect Montana law. Denial of plaintiff's motion for a new trial based on counsel's comments was therefore not an abuse of discretion. Bailey v. Beartooth Communications Co., 2004 MT 128, 321 M 305, 92 P3d 1 (2004), distinguishing Lopez v. Josephson, 2001 MT 133, 305 M 446, 30 P3d 326 (2001).

No Requirement That Trial Court Articulate That Conscientious Judgment Made on Motion for New Trial: Plaintiff moved for a new trial on grounds of juror misconduct and misstatements by defense counsel. The motions were denied. On appeal, plaintiff argued that under Simmons Oil Corp. v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 1998 MT 129, 289 M 119, 960 P2d 291 (1998), an abuse of discretion is defined as an arbitrary act without conscientious judgment, so the District Court was required to make an affirmative showing that it acted conscientiously in rendering its decision in response to a motion for a new trial and that failure of the court to articulate any reason for denying a new trial was therefore an abuse of discretion. The Supreme Court disagreed. The language in Simmons Oil is merely a definition of an abuse of discretion and does not require or even suggest the necessity of an affirmative articulation by a trial court that it make a conscientious judgment in ruling on a motion for a new trial. Here, the trial court stated that the arguments for a new trial had been considered, and plaintiff failed to establish that anything more was required. Absent an abuse of discretion, judgment was affirmed. Bailey v. Beartooth Communications Co., 2004 MT 128, 321 M 305, 92 P3d 1 (2004).

Sufficient Evidence That Group Home Not Negligent in Failing to Control Resident: Plaintiff was employed by a vocational day-care program that took developmentally disabled persons on day outings. Plaintiff was assaulted by a developmentally disabled person from a group home managed by defendant corporation and sued the corporation for negligence for failing to control the assailant. Before trial, the District Court granted plaintiffs' motion to exclude any evidence of negligence by plaintiff's employer and ruled that defendant had a special relationship of custody and control over the disabled person and thus had a legal duty of care to those placed within the foreseeable zone of risk created by any breach of that duty. Nevertheless, the jury found for defendant, and plaintiffs' motion for a new trial was denied. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that the jury's finding was not supported by sufficient evidence, but the Supreme Court disagreed. Credible evidence was presented that defendant followed protocols regarding the assailant's behavioral medication and behavioral modification program, that it adequately communicated information on the assailant's condition through incident reports, daily logs, and a 24-hour call system, and that the state monitoring agency had no issues with the way defendant conducted business. The evidence was sufficient for the jury to find that defendant did not breach the duty of care, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the verdict. Papich v. Quality Life Concepts, Inc., 2004 MT 116, 321 M 156, 91 P3d 553 (2004).

Assurance of Coverage Made by Agent — Coverage Not Extended Beyond Policy Terms:

Defendant insurer claimed that plaintiffs' claims in a 2002 action were barred by collateral estoppel and res judicata because of the prior holding in Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2001 MT 59, 304 M 356, 22 P3d 631 (2001). Applying the test in Haines Pipeline Constr., Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 265 M 282, 876 P2d 632 (1994), for determining whether collateral estoppel barred the present action because it might be a relitigation of the 2001 case, the Supreme Court disagreed with defendant's assertion. Plaintiffs had not previously litigated whether defendant had a duty to defend and a duty to indemnify Hoss because that issue did not arise until defendant refused to indemnify Hoss and Hoss confessed judgment. Also, the issue of whether defendant had a duty to defend and a duty to indemnify Hoss was different from the issue in the 2001 case, which concerned whether Lee was a named insured under Hoss's policy, thereby entitling Lee to underinsured motorist benefits. Because the present issue was never litigated, there was never a final judgment on the merits, so defendant's collateral estoppel and res judicata arguments were inapplicable. Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2004 MT 54, 320 M 174, 86 P3d 562 (2004).

Lee was injured in an accident in Louisiana while in a taxi and filed an underinsured motorist (UIM) claim pursuant to coverage provided by USAA Casualty Insurance Co. (USAA) on two vehicles that she jointly owned, with Hoss contending that she was entitled to stack coverage under the policies. Although USAA initially indicated that Lee would be entitled to UIM coverage because she was a co-owner of the vehicles, the insurer later changed its position and denied coverage on grounds that because Lee was not a named insured and as a matter of law not a "covered person" under the relevant policy provisions, USAA had no obligation to treat her as such. The District Court granted summary judgment for USAA, concluding that Lee was not an insured for purposes of UIM coverage under the express language of Hoss's policy and that Lee could not benefit from a policy to which she was not a party. On appeal, Lee contended that she was entitled to a new trial because USAA's claim adjuster initially indicated that Lee would be covered, USAA should be bound by that admission of coverage, and USAA's first answer should be a binding judicial admission as a matter of law. The Supreme Court relied on DeJonge v. Mut. of Enumclaw, 843 P2d 914 (Oreg. 1992), and Shows v. Pemberton, 868 P2d 164 (Wash. Ct. App. 1994), in holding that an assurance made by an insurance agent that a particular coverage exists, in the absence of an ambiguity, does not create or extend coverage beyond the covered risks expressly identified or excluded in the policy. Assurances or representations made as a result of confusion and misfeasance by an insurance agent do not render an otherwise unambiguous policy ambiguous as a matter of law. As a general rule, the agent's conduct may be offered to demonstrate that an ambiguity exists, particularly from the perspective of a reasonable insurance consumer. Nevertheless, in some limited instances, an assurance of coverage by an agent that conflicts with an unambiguous policy may afford an insured relief under the theories of waiver or equitable estoppel. Lee pursued the theory of estoppel in this case, but failed to prove that she relied on the agent's representation of coverage to her detriment. A judicial admission is not binding unless it is an unequivocal statement of fact, rather than a conclusion of law or the expression of an opinion. USAA admitted no material fact of consequence to the case. Thus, neither the agent's representations that coverage existed nor the first answer admitting that Lee was covered served as sufficient grounds for enforcing the policy in her favor or for estopping USAA from denying coverage. Lee v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2001 MT 59, 304 M 356, 22 P3d 631 (2001), distinguishing Dion v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 22 Mont. Fed. Rep. 225 (D.C. Mont. 1997), and Boyle v. Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 25 Mont. Fed. Rep. 446 (D.C. Mont. 1999).

Informal Witness Discovery Process Compromising Ability to Formulate Trial Strategy — Irregularities Constituting Abuse of Discretion Preventing Fair Trial — New Trial Warranted: If a District Court acts arbitrarily or without conscientious judgment or exceeds the bounds of reason in denying a new trial, it constitutes an abuse of discretion so significant as to materially affect the substantial rights of a complaining party. In the present case, the District Court devised a late hour informal expert witness discovery process that provided no opportunity for plaintiffs to obtain information exclusively in possession of defendants' expert prior to trial. Although the control of discovery activities, including the use of interrogatories, is within the discretion of the District Court, each party has a duty to supplement or amend answers to interrogatories in a timely manner, in order to make all relevant facts available to parties in advance of trial and to reduce the possibility of surprise or unfair advantage. Here, plaintiffs' lack of opportunity to depose defendants' expert, in the face of an inadequate discovery response, materially affected plaintiffs' substantial rights. The District Court's informal discovery process compromised plaintiffs' ability to formulate an effective trial strategy and to prepare adequately for witness cross-examination, which placed plaintiffs at a serious disadvantage. The discovery irregularities constituted an abuse of discretion that materially affected plaintiffs' substantial rights, entitling plaintiffs to a new trial, and the District Court's denial of a new trial motion was therefore reversed. Perdue v. Gagnon Farms, Inc., 2003 MT 47, 314 M 303, 65 P3d 570 (2003).

Improper Grant of New Trial After Time to Move for New Trial Expired: A substitute District Court Judge assumed jurisdiction of a marriage dissolution case 1 day after the husband moved for reconsideration or a new trial. The motion for a new trial was granted 76 days later. The wife contended that the court exceeded its jurisdiction because the motion was granted more than 60 days after being filed, in violation of former Rules 52(d) and 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The husband argued that an equitable exception to the rules should be granted because the presiding judge was substituted between the time when the motion was filed and when it was ruled upon. The Supreme Court declined to make an exception, reiterating that the time and procedural limitations for motions subsequent to judgment are mandatory and strictly enforced. The District Court exceeded its jurisdiction in ordering a new trial after the time to rule on the motion had expired, so the order was reversed. In re Marriage of Richards, 2001 MT 183, 306 M 212, 31 P3d 1002 (2001), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Introduction of Evidence of Acts Not Referred to in Pretrial Order — Not Grounds for New Trial: As a result of a dispute, the relationship between neighbors Lopez, Monroe, and Josephson deteriorated until assault charges were filed against Josephson. The operative contentions in the pretrial order were that Josephson assaulted Lopez by pointing a firearm at Lopez's face and assaulted Monroe verbally and fired a weapon toward Monroe's property. The District Court found it impossible to determine from the allegations the dates, times, and places that the alleged assaults took place, but the court concluded that the pretrial order nevertheless placed Josephson on notice that he was being accused of assault on multiple occasions over an unspecified period of time. Josephson moved for a new trial on grounds that plaintiffs were improperly allowed to introduce evidence of acts not referred to in the pretrial order, evidence of bad character, and evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts. However, because Josephson waited until the day of trial to clarify which assaults formed the basis of the case against him, rather than using available pretrial motions and rules of discovery, the District Court was not found to have abused its discretion in giving plaintiffs latitude in their proof of the various assaults at trial, including allowing evidence of bad character to impeach Josephson's testimony. The District Court did properly preclude evidence of assaults by Josephson on nonparty persons. Lopez v. Josephson, 2001 MT 133, 305 M 446, 30 P3d 326 (2001).

Pervasive Misconduct of Plaintiffs' Counsel Preventing Fair Trial on Merits: At Josephson's trial for assault, plaintiffs' counsel attempted to put inadmissible matters before the jury by repeatedly asking objectionable questions and raising impermissible inferences. Although the trial court repeatedly admonished plaintiffs' counsel not to bolster with inadmissible evidence, attempt to introduce inadmissible hearsay, and ignore the court's rulings on certain issues, plaintiff's counsel blithely proceeded to do what he knew he should not. As set out in St. v. Eklund, 264 M 420, 872 P2d 323 (1994), the repeated asking of questions that are clearly intended to keep the assumption of damaging facts that cannot be proved before the jury, in order to impress upon their minds the probability of the existence of the assumed facts upon which the questions are based, constitutes gross misconduct. In this case, despite the trial court's attempts to eliminate the prejudicial impact of the conduct with admonitions and curative instructions, the conduct of plaintiffs' counsel was so pervasive that it prevented Josephson from receiving a fair trial on the merits, raising the presumption of prejudice and warranting reversal of Josephson's conviction and a new trial. Lopez v. Josephson, 2001 MT 133, 305 M 446, 30 P3d 326 (2001). See also Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1998 MT 47, 288 M 1, 955 P2d 160 (1998).

Scope of Appellate Review: On appeal, Supreme Court review of a District Court's denial of a motion for new trial, on grounds that the jury's verdict was not supported by substantial evidence, is limited. If there is conflicting evidence on an issue, it is an abuse of the District Court's discretion to grant a new trial on that issue on the basis that there is insufficient evidence to justify the jury's verdict. Resolving conflicts in the evidence, judging the credibility of witnesses, and finding the facts are uniquely within the province of the jury. The Supreme Court does not retry the case to determine whether it agrees or disagrees with the jury's verdict. The question is not what the Supreme Court would have awarded after reviewing the evidence, but whether substantial evidence, even though conflicting, exists to support the jury's verdict. The decision to grant or deny a new trial is in the sound discretion of the District Court Judge and will not be overturned absent a showing that the judge manifestly abused that discretion. Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999), distinguishing Tappan v. Higgins, 240 M 158, 783 P2d 396 (1989). See also Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994), Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700, 53 St. Rep. 17 (1996), McGillen v. Plum Creek Timber Co., 1998 MT 193, 290 M 264, 964 P2d 18, 55 St. Rep. 808 (1998), Moore v. Imperial Hotels Corp., 1998 MT 248, 291 M 164, 967 P2d 382, 55 St. Rep. 1023 (1998), and Schuff v. Jackson, 2002 MT 215, 311 M 312, 55 P3d 387 (2002). In Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007), the Supreme Court held that the standard applied to review of a motion for a new trial based on the insufficiency of evidence will henceforth be de novo. Any previous cases that stated the standard of review as abuse of discretion were overruled to that extent.

Prejudicial Effect of Misconduct of Defense Counsel — New Trial Properly Granted: Even though defendant may have presented sufficient evidence to prevail against plaintiff's motion for judgment as a matter of law, the District Court nevertheless properly granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial after finding that the defense counsel's misconduct prejudiced plaintiff's right to a fair hearing and resolution of the case. The trial judge is in the best position to determine the prejudicial effect of an attorney's conduct. Even when there is substantial evidence supporting a jury's verdict, the trial court has an overriding duty to prevent a miscarriage of justice by granting a new trial if the misconduct of counsel prevents an opposing litigant from having a fair trial on the merits. Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1998 MT 47, 288 M 1, 955 P2d 160, 55 St. Rep. 198 (1998). See also Bircher v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2010 MT 121, 356 Mont. 357, 233 P.3d 348.

Defendant's Statements at Trial Not Binding Judicial Admission — New Trial Not Warranted: The defendant's testimony at trial that the automobile accident was all the defendant's fault was either a legal conclusion based on the defendant's understanding of the facts as the defendant knew them or was the expression of the defendant's personal opinion. Therefore, the statements were not statements of fact and were not judicial admissions. The District Court did not err in denying the plaintiff's alternative motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and new trial. DeMars v. Carlstrom, 285 M 334, 948 P2d 246, 54 St. Rep. 1178 (1997), followed in Papich v. Quality Life Concepts, Inc., 2004 MT 116, 321 M 156, 91 P3d 553 (2004).

New Trial Based on Excessive Punitive Damages — Abuse of Discretion Warranting Reversal: The District Court vacated a jury award of $1 million in punitive damages against an employer and $75,000 against an employee, concluding that the awards were excessive. The Supreme Court reversed, noting that the award against the employer was not excessive when compared with the employer's overall financial condition and that the employee's financial condition was improperly valued. The employee failed to produce evidence that his net worth could not support the punitive damage award, so vacation of the jury award was a manifest abuse of discretion warranting reversal. Maurer v. Clausen Distrib. Co., 275 M 229, 912 P2d 195, 53 St. Rep. 78 (1996), followed in Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48, 54 St. Rep. 957 (1997), and distinguished in Anderson v. Werner Enterprises, Inc., 1998 MT 333, 292 M 284, 972 P2d 806, 55 St. Rep. 1350 (1998).

Unreasonable Compensatory Award for Loss of Established Course of Life — New Trial Proper: Maurer produced evidence to support an award of $90,000 for loss of established course of life. Instead, the jury awarded him $500,000, which was not supported in the record. The District Court did not err in ordering a new trial on compensatory damages. A reduction in a compensatory award is justified when the award substantially exceeds what the evidence can sustain. Maurer v. Clausen Distrib. Co., 275 M 229, 912 P2d 195, 53 St. Rep. 78 (1996), followed in Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48, 54 St. Rep. 957 (1997).

Allegedly Improper Remarks of Court Insufficiently Prejudicial to Warrant New Trial: During the lengthy trial of a civil action over the death of a person in a Sheriff's mental health soft cell, the District Court Judge made several comments that indicated that he may have felt the trial was lengthy or even too lengthy. Citing Barrett v. ASARCO, Inc., 245 M 196, 799 P2d 1078 (1990), the Supreme Court noted that the appellant failed to object at trial to the judge's comments that were now objectionable on appeal. Citing St. v. Stafford, 208 M 324, 678 P2d 644 (1984), the Supreme Court held that there was nothing in the District Court's comments that indicated that the court was directing a defense verdict or in any way abandoning the court's proper role. Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994).

Comments by Counsel Not Prejudicial to Warrant New Trial: During a lengthy trial over the death of a man in a mental health holding cell in Flathead County, counsel for one of the parties made comments such as "I am sure after three days of deposition and all this questioning, you are probably getting tired of lawyers questioning you" and "Doctor, you can characterize it any way you want, but I want to talk about the facts" and, Buhr contended, made various appeals to hometown loyalties. Buhr argued that the cumulative effect of these comments was to prejudice the jury against him and to deny him a fair trial and that the District Court's failure to grant a new trial because of those comments was error. The Supreme Court held that because of the limited number of comments and because appropriate measures, such as sustaining of objections and curative instructions, were used during trial, Buhr's right to a fair trial was not denied. Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994).

Evidence of Defense Witness's Prior Criminal History Not Admissible — Conviction Overturned: In a prosecution for accountability for aggravated kidnapping, the District Court allowed the state to cross-examine the defendant's witness as to the witness's prior criminal history. The Supreme Court found this to be reversible error on the grounds that there is a reasonable possibility that the inherently prejudicial and inadmissible evidence of the witness's criminal history might have contributed to the defendant's conviction. St. v. Bristow, 267 M 170, 882 P2d 1041, 51 St. Rep. 1010 (1994).

Prejudice Through Inadmissible Evidence — Fair Trial Denied: Generally, character evidence is inadmissible to prove conduct. The prosecution is allowed to rebut the accused's offer of a pertinent trait of character; however, the prosecution must present legitimate and relevant character evidence. An accused's entire life should not be searched in an effort to convict. In this case, the trial court improperly allowed cross-examination of Eklund's character witness regarding Eklund's prior murder charges when the witness was called to rebut the nonviolent character evidence. The danger of unfair prejudice of evidence of charges, not a conviction, clearly outweighed the probative value. After considering the totality of the circumstances, the Supreme Court determined that there was a reasonable possibility that the inadmissible evidence of Eklund's murder charge denied him a fair and impartial trial and remanded for a new trial. St. v. Eklund, 264 M 420, 872 P2d 323, 51 St. Rep. 335 (1994).

Closing Argument Improper When Counsel Comments on Existence of Evidence That Counsel Moved to Exclude: Defense counsel, in a motor vehicle accident case, obtained an order excluding testimony concerning the issuance of a citation and then, during his closing, argued that if such evidence had existed it would have been admitted. The Supreme Court remanded the case on other grounds, with instructions that improper legal maneuvering be eliminated during retrial. Hall v. Big Sky Lumber & Supply, Inc., 261 M 328, 863 P2d 389, 50 St. Rep. 1345 (1993).

Statements of Counsel as Binding on Client — New Trial Warranted: In closing arguments during a negligence trial that resulted in a jury finding of no negligence on behalf of defendant, defense counsel made unequivocal statements which, when taken in full context with the rest of his closing argument, constituted judicial admissions on the issue of negligence of his client that had the effect of a confessory pleading. Noting that the admissions of counsel are binding on the client, the Supreme Court granted a new trial, notwithstanding counsel's assertion that the statements were merely suggestions on the theory of the case. Kohne v. Yost, 250 M 109, 818 P2d 360, 48 St. Rep. 886 (1991), distinguished in DeMars v. Carlstrom, 285 M 334, 948 P2d 246, 54 St. Rep. 1178 (1997), and Weaver v. St., 2013 MT 247, 371 Mont. 476, 310 P.3d 495. See also Bilesky v. Shopko Stores Operating Co., LLC, 2014 MT 300, 377 Mont. 58, 338 P.3d 76, in which the Supreme Court ruled that statements made during a pretrial briefing constituted judicial admissions, warranting a new trial.

Bailiff's Misconduct in Communicating With Jury — New Trial Warranted: During deliberations, the jury had a question regarding application of the comparative negligence statute and payment of damages. The jury notified the bailiff that it wanted to ask the question. The bailiff said that he did not know the answer and that all the attorneys and court personnel would have to be called back into court to properly respond, a process that would take about as long as it takes "for hell to freeze over". Other jurors overheard the remark and decided to resolve the issue on their own. The bailiff's communication with the jury rather than conducting the jury into court for resolution of its question was a violation of 25-7-403 and 25-7-405 that affected the right to a fair trial. Affidavits from eight jurors that they were not influenced by the bailiff's conduct failed as proof of a fair trial when weighed against the bailiff's actions. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial. Henrichs v. Todd, 245 M 286, 800 P2d 710, 47 St. Rep. 2112 (1990).

Grant of Request by Workers' Compensation Insurer for Rehearing — Insurer Not to Claim Error: A workers' compensation insurer filed a petition for rehearing, claiming that the decision by the trial court was in error and that the insurer was entitled to a rehearing or amendment of the decision. Claimant did not respond to the petition. The court found that it had no alternative but to grant the petition and move the case forward because the claimant's lack of response led to the conclusion that the petition had merit. Having filed the petition in the first place, the insurer was in no position to later argue that claimant had no grounds for a new trial or that the court erred in granting the motion. Winchell v. G&B Motors, Inc., 246 M 320, 805 P2d 1323, 47 St. Rep. 2070 (1990).

Inconsistent Jury Findings — New Trial Granted: The District Court did not err in granting a new trial after finding that the jury was confused, that jury findings were inconsistent or in disregard of the court's instructions, and that it was too difficult to speculate as to how the jury arrived at its conclusions. Mont. Bank of Red Lodge v. Lightfield, 237 M 41, 771 P2d 571, 46 St. Rep. 605 (1989).

Irregularities in Jury Proceedings — Juror Affidavit — New Trial Denied: To support their motion for a new trial in District Court, plaintiffs submitted an affidavit of one juror, alleging that certain statements made by the bailiff during jury deliberations misled the jury and prevented clarification of the issue of proximate cause. Juror affidavits are admissible to show grounds upon which a new trial may be granted when a juror has personal knowledge of an alleged irregularity in the proceedings and the only other individual who has personal knowledge of the facts surrounding the irregularity is the individual who committed the alleged infraction. Only the facts upon which the alleged irregularities are based are admissible. Any allegations regarding the inner workings of the jury deliberations are inadmissible. The Supreme Court will not overrule the District Court's refusal to grant a new trial unless the evidence is clear and convincing that the trial court erred. Ahmann v. Am. Fed. S&L Ass'n, 235 M 184, 766 P2d 853, 45 St. Rep. 2305 (1988), distinguished in Henrichs v. Todd, 245 M 286, 800 P2d 710, 47 St. Rep. 2112 (1990), and overruled as to standard of review in Allers v. Riley, 273 M 1, 901 P2d 600, 52 St. Rep. 920 (1995). See also Greytak v. RegO Co., 257 M 147, 848 P2d 483, 50 St. Rep. 204 (1993).

Motion for Mistrial — Evidence of Erroneous Ruling Required: The Supreme Court cited Schmoyer v. Bourdeau, 148 M 340, 420 P2d 316 (1966), in holding that in order to reverse a lower court ruling on a motion for mistrial, evidence must be presented that is clear, convincing, and practically free from doubt that the trial court's ruling was erroneous. St. v. Dawson, 233 M 345, 761 P2d 352, 45 St. Rep. 1542 (1988). See also St. v. Sullivan, 266 M 313, 880 P2d 829, 51 St. Rep. 827 (1994), St. v. Gambrel, 246 M 84, 803 P2d 1071, 47 St. Rep. 2270 (1990), and St. v. Counts, 209 M 242, 679 P2d 1245 (1984).

Court Discretion to Order New Trial or Reopen Case — Jurisdiction to Amend Findings and Conclusions: Upon dissolution of a marriage, the District Court retained jurisdiction to determine the division of marital property. Following a 4-day trial, the court divided the property, whereupon both parties filed motions to amend the findings. A hearing was held. Subsequently, the court ordered the parties to appear for the limited purpose of testifying to the respective proposals for handling certain real estate, and the court then issued amended findings of fact and conclusions of law. Appellant contended that the District Court lacked jurisdiction to issue the amended findings because it failed to rule on the motions to amend within 45 days, pursuant to former Rules 52(b) and 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that the order to appear for limited testimony was essentially an order for a new trial and that under former Rule 59(e), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and 25-11-102, the District Court had jurisdiction to order a new trial on its own initiative or to reopen the case and thus had jurisdiction to amend the findings and conclusions. In re Marriage of Kink, 226 M 313, 735 P2d 311, 44 St. Rep. 681 (1987).

Evidence of Prejudice Required: Defendant alleged a remark by the prosecutor during voir dire was prejudicial. Defense counsel objected to the statement, fearing the jury would be misled. The trial court admonished the prosecutor to correct himself, which he did. The court also instructed the jury to disregard the statement. When a prosecutor's improper statement is disclaimed or corrected, there is no error. The controlling question is the good faith of counsel in saying what he said and the likelihood the defendant was unfairly prejudiced by the statement. Defendant offered no evidence of prejudice, and the jury's verdict did not indicate prejudice. The Supreme Court refused to reverse the trial court on the mere ground of a corrected misstatement when there was no evidence of either bad faith on the part of the prosecutor or prejudice to the defendant. St. v. Walton, 222 M 340, 722 P2d 1145, 43 St. Rep. 1312 (1986).

Prosecutor's Statement Not Warranting New Trial: Defendant contended that the prosecutor's statement before the jury that an armed deputy was "in charge and keeping the defendant" warranted a new trial. During cross-examination, defense counsel drew the jury's attention to the fact that the officer guarding the defendant was armed in order to demonstrate that the witness had limited powers of observation. A short time later, the prosecutor made the statement which defendant complained prejudiced him before the jury and which he claimed should have been the subject of a cautionary instruction. The court found that defense counsel obviously had drawn the jury's attention to the armed officer, and that if defendant thought a cautionary instruction was necessary he should have offered one. The defendant failed to show any error affecting his substantial rights or resulting in prejudice. St. v. Grant, 221 M 122, 717 P2d 562, 43 St. Rep. 685 (1986).

Prejudicial Closing Argument Made by Attorney for One of Several Defendants — Plaintiff Entitled to New Trial Against All Defendants: In a wrongful death action involving several defendants, a new trial was ordered because of several improper statements made in his closing argument by one defendant's attorney. Counsel made reference to: (1) matters withdrawn from the record by instruction to the jury; (2) matters withdrawn from the record by order in limine; (3) facts never entered into the record; and (4) facts irrelevant to the legal issues involved in the case. The Supreme Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to a new trial with respect to all of the defendants because it was impossible to separate the defendants in considering the effect of the prejudice created by the argument of the lawyer for one of the defendants. Kuhnke v. Fisher, 210 M 114, 683 P2d 916, 41 St. Rep. 952 (1984), followed in Rieger v. Coldwell, 254 M 507, 839 P2d 1257, 49 St. Rep. 768 (1992), Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1998 MT 47, 288 M 1, 955 P2d 160, 55 St. Rep. 198 (1998), Benson v. Heritage Inn, Inc., 1998 MT 330, 292 M 268, 971 P2d 1227, 55 St. Rep. 1341 (1998), and Federated Mut. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 1999 MT 288, 297 M 33, 991 P2d 915, 56 St. Rep. 1152 (1999). Despite repeated attorney misconduct warranting sanction on retrial, the District Court ruled that the misconduct was not of the magnitude of that found in Kuhnke I, supra, and that viewed in the context of the entire trial, the improper conduct did not impact the jury to such an extent as to require a new trial. The Supreme Court found substantial credible evidence to support the verdict reached by two juries on two separate occasions hearing the same facts and noted that it was unlikely a third trial before a third jury would produce a different result. Kuhnke v. Fisher, 227 M 62, 740 P2d 625, 44 St. Rep. 895 (1987).

Misconduct by Bailiff as Grounds for New Trial: When the bailiff gave gratuitous legal advice to members of the jury by telling them not to "get hung up" on the instructions; gave advice on working around a minority group of jurors; gave his opinion on a written question on an instruction; and engaged in other similar conduct, there may have been grounds for mistrial had the losing counsel brought the matter immediately to the attention of the trial court. Kuiper v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 207 M 37, 673 P2d 1208, 40 St. Rep. 1861 (1983).

Habitual Traffic Offender — Proper Foundation Required: In an action arising out of an automobile accident, the District Court advised counsel for the plaintiff that testimony regarding defendant's bad driving record would not be admitted unless a foundation was laid establishing a clear connection between defendant operating his vehicle as an unlicensed habitual traffic offender and plaintiff's injuries. No such foundation was laid, and the evidence was not admitted. This ruling was proper since the evidence was highly prejudicial and was relevant only to an issue of competency and could not be used to prove any specific act of negligence at issue in the case. It was error to grant a new trial on the basis that this evidence was excluded. Nelson v. Hartman, 199 M 295, 648 P2d 1176, 39 St. Rep. 1409 (1982).

Motion Properly Denied — Standard Not Pleaded or Proved: The motion for new trial was properly denied since the standard contained in 25-11-102 has not been pleaded or proved in the record. Maberry v. Maberry, 183 M 219, 598 P2d 1115 (1979).

Error in Granting New Trial Where Objectionable Exhibit Never Admitted: In an action for damages for injuries suffered from an auto accident, the lower court erred in granting a new trial to the state since its substantial rights were not affected by plaintiff's offer of an exhibit in the form of a petition signed by residents protesting conditions of the highway of the accident. No prejudice existed because the offered exhibit was never admitted as evidence. Giles v. Flint Valley Forest Prod., 179 M 382, 588 P2d 535 (1979).

Proximate Cause — New Trial Proper to Consider Damage Award: While the jury could have considered other factors as going to the issue of "proximate cause", they would not explain the inadequacy and inconsistency of the verdict in the light of uncontradicted testimony. Thus, the Supreme Court found no abuse of discretion by the lower court in awarding a new trial but declined plaintiffs' invitation to simply make a mathematical recalculation of damages when several issues remained that were within the province of a jury. Ferguson v. Town Pump, Inc., 177 M 122, 580 P2d 915 (1978), overruled on other grounds in Bohrer v. Clark, 180 M 233, 590 P2d 117 (1978).

Cumulative Error Doctrine Rejected: Although defendant set forth 25 specifications of error, a 514-page brief and an 800-page appendix, the Supreme Court found no merit to the argument that a new trial should be granted because of "cumulative error". St. v. McKenzie, 171 M 278, 557 P2d 1023 (1976).

Statement of Grounds Required: Former Rule 7(b)(1), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), requires that a motion state the grounds with particularity, and it was error to grant a new trial based on a motion that merely recited the grounds in the words of subsections (1), (6), and (7) of this section without more particularity. Halsey v. Uithof, 166 M 319, 532 P2d 686 (1975).

Inadmissibility of Evidence: Although the plaintiff presented other evidence of negligence, the introduction of hearsay report showing slight malfunctioning of a ski lift was reversible error. Pessl v. Bridger Bowl, 164 M 389, 524 P2d 1101 (1974).

Failure to Poll Jury — New Trial Improperly Granted: Court abused discretion in granting new trial based solely on ground that it had erred in refusing request for poll of jury; error, if any, was harmless in light of evidence affirmatively showing that verdict was rendered in open court in presence of all counsel, that in response to question by judge, foreman of jury advised him they had agreed upon verdict and that following reading of verdict, signed by foreman, judge inquired of jury if it was true verdict of at least eight of them and jury answered in affirmative. Martello v. Darlow, 151 M 232, 441 P2d 175 (1968).

Conditions on Denial Improper: The trial court had no power in a condemnation case to condition its denial of a new trial on acceptance by the Highway Commission (now Transportation Commission) of a higher award. St. Highway Comm'n v. Schmidt, 143 M 505, 391 P2d 692 (1964).

Irregularities in Proceedings — Appearance of Defendant Pro Se: Where defendant appeared on his own behalf at trial and proceeded to question witnesses in a manner in which he, the defendant, testified numerous times while conducting the questioning and where the defendant violated other rules of evidence, the court did not abuse its discretion in granting the defendant a new trial to rectify these errors, under subsection (1) of this section. Waite v. Waite, 143 M 248, 389 P2d 181 (1964).

Sound Basis for Failure to Object at Trial — No Waiver of Grounds for New Trial: If plaintiff is unable to expose the misconduct of the defendant because of a reasonably based fear for the safety of a witness, then failure to do so is not a waiver of the irregularity in the proceedings of the court. Herren v. Hawks, 139 M 440, 365 P2d 641 (1961).

Irregularity in Proceedings — Receipt of Evidence and Findings of Fact: Where, in an action upon an account stated, the court admitted testimony of the parties, subject to an objection, indicating it would take the objection under advisement and later ruled on all of the objections so taken under advisement all at once, and where the court made no findings of fact, although none were required, granting the defendant's motion for a new trial was an abuse of discretion as none of the irregularities were such as to deprive the defendant of a fair trial. Kynett v. New Mine Sapphire Synd., 137 M 82, 350 P2d 361 (1960).

Mistrial Motion: Whenever it appears that there has been such misconduct in a trial or that prejudicial matter has been allowed to go to the jury, without opportunity to object in advance and the effect of which cannot be removed by an admonition on the part of the court, the aggrieved party may move for a mistrial and, failing in that, he will be considered to have taken his chances with the jury. Hayward v. Richardson Constr. Co., 136 M 241, 347 P2d 475 (1959), overruling Robinson v. F. W. Woolworth Co., 80 M 431, 261 P 253 (1927).

Failure to Rule on Motion: Under the provisions of section 93-5606, R.C.M. 1947 (superseded by Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P.), where the trial judge failed and omitted to allow or grant plaintiff's motion for a new trial, the motion is considered denied. Seibel v. Byers, 136 M 39, 344 P2d 129 (1959).

Separation of Issues for New Trial — Single Cause of Action: This section does not permit the piecemeal granting of the motion for a new trial. A motion for a new trial must be granted in whole or not at all where the complaint set forth but a single count or single cause of action, and the verdict which determines such controversy is a single entity which must stand or fall as a whole. Seibel v. Byers, 136 M 39, 344 P2d 129 (1959).

Separation of Issues for New Trial: Court has authority to grant a motion for new trial as to part of the items sued on and to deny it as to other items. State ex rel. Tripp v. District Court, 130 M 574, 305 P2d 1101 (1957).

Motion Based on Death of Judge — Waiver of Right: Where the trial judge died before making findings of fact, his successor is without authority to make findings of fact and conclusions of law without the consent of the parties involved, either of which can insist upon a new trial; however, a party may waive such right and consent that the successor decide the case on the record made before the trial judge without waiving the right to question the weight to be given to the findings of the successor. Worden v. Alexander, 108 M 208, 90 P2d 160 (1939).

Right to Bill of Exceptions Lost — Implied Repeal: Subsection (8) of this section (now deleted) applies in all cases where the facts come within it, and insofar as it conflicts therewith, 25-11-103 must be considered repealed by implication, under the rule that if two acts on the same subject are so repugnant as to be irreconcilable or if the later act is inconsistent with the first and the Legislature intended it should be the only law on the subject, the prior statute is repealed by it. State ex rel. Jackson v. District Court, 107 M 30, 79 P2d 665 (1938).

Lack of Objection at Trial — Waiver of Grounds for New Trial: Where counsel without objection or exception acquiesced in an order limiting the time for argument to the jury, they were precluded from urging as a ground of motion for new trial undue limitation thereof, thereby depriving them of a fair trial. Norton v. Great N. Ry., 78 M 273, 254 P 165 (1927). See also Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994).

Time of Motion for New Trial: A motion for a new trial may be made before or after entry of judgment, the motion not being directed against the judgment but against the verdict or decision on which a judgment might be based; hence the contention made on appeal from a judgment rendered on a retrial that respondent's motion should not have been made until after entry of judgment has no merit. Brunnabend v. Tibbles, 76 M 288, 246 P 536 (1926).

Lack of Specificity of Notice of Motion — New Trial Properly Denied: A Trial Court cannot be put in error for denying a motion for new trial on a matter not brought to its attention in the notice of motion. Gardiner v. Eclipse Grocery Co., 72 M 540, 234 P 490 (1925).

Equity Cases — Court Trials: In an equity case and in one tried by the court without a jury, the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision and errors at law occurring at the trial are not available as grounds for a new trial. Davenport v. Davenport, 69 M 405, 222 P 422 (1924).

Denial of Jurisdiction in Probate Proceedings — Motion Properly Made: Where a guardian petitioned the court in a probate proceeding for an order directing an administrator to pay certain claims allowed against the estate as due his wards to himself personally, on the ground that he had become subrogated to their rights, to which petition objections in the nature of answers were filed, petitioner filed replies raising issues of fact, and the court denied the petition for lack of jurisdiction to determine the equitable claim of subrogation, a motion for new trial lay. In re Stinger Estate, 61 M 173, 201 P 693 (1921).

Incorrect Findings of Fact: A motion for a new trial lies where an issue of fact was wrongfully or erroneously determined by the jury or by direction of the court. Buckhouse v. Parsons, 60 M 156, 198 P 444 (1921).

Sufficiency of Pleadings — No Challenge at Trial: Where the sufficiency of the complaint was not challenged during the trial and there was no ruling in reference to it, there is nothing, as to that matter, which can be regarded as an "error of law occurring during the trial", upon which a motion for a new trial might be made; in such a case, the sufficiency of the complaint can be examined only on appeal from the judgment. O'Rourke v. Grand Opera House Co., 47 M 459, 133 P 965 (1913); Campbell v. Great Falls, 27 M 37, 69 P 114 (1902); Schatzlein Paint Co. v. Passmore, 26 M 500, 68 P 1113 (1902).

Remarks by Court During Trial: Remarks made by the court during a trial, if errors at all, fall within subsection (1) of this section; they do not constitute errors of law within the meaning of subsection (7). Hopkins v. Kitts, 37 M 26, 94 P 201 (1908).

Sufficiency of Pleadings — Appeal of Order Denying New Trial: The review on appeal from an order denying a new trial, being limited to the consideration of such matter as may be presented to the trial court as grounds for a new trial under the provisions of this section, among which are "errors of law occurring at the trial and excepted to by the party making the application", the question whether the complaint states a cause of action cannot be considered on such an appeal where it does not appear from the record that its sufficiency was questioned during the trial. Campbell v. Great Falls, 27 M 37, 69 P 114 (1902). See also Ayotte v. Nadeau, 32 M 498, 81 P 145 (1905); Leggat v. Gerrick, 35 M 91, 88 P 788 (1907); Murray v. Butte, 35 M 161, 88 P 789 (1907); Glendenning v. Slayton, 55 M 586, 179 P 817 (1919).

Transcript Lost — Motion Not to Be Granted: The fact that a referee had absconded and failed to return the transcript of the evidence was not ground for a new trial. Ogle v. Potter, 24 M 501, 62 P 920 (1900).

STATUTORY BASIS FOR NEW TRIAL

Incorrect Statutory Citation for New Trial — Grant of New Trial Affirmed When Other Statutory Criteria Met: The District Court granted defendants' motion for a new bench trial pursuant to 25-11-102(6), but noted that possibly other subsections might also apply. Plaintiff asserted that granting a new trial was reversible error because 25-11-103 states that a new bench trial may be granted only pursuant to 25-11-102(1), (3), and (4). The Supreme Court acknowledged the District Court's incorrect citation to 25-11-102(6), but nevertheless affirmed because sufficient grounds for a new trial also existed under 25-11-102(4). Although the District Court relied on the wrong subsection in support of its holding, it reached a proper result. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Kaml, 2008 MT 153, 343 M 240, 184 P3d 296 (2008).

Failure to Admit Person to Jail When Committed by Competent Authority Negligent Violation of Duty of Care: Russell violated the terms of his suspended sentence and was ordered to report to the county jail no later than 8 a.m. on December 28, 1998. When Russell appeared at the jail, a written order of commitment could not be found, so Russell was turned away. On December 30, Russell stabbed Prindel at a party, and Russell was sentenced to life in prison for attempted deliberate homicide. Prindel subsequently sued the county, alleging that the failure to incarcerate Russell on the 28th, despite a court order that Russell begin serving a sentence on that day, amounted to negligence that proximately caused Prindel's injury. The District Court granted summary judgment to the county, concluding that the county had no duty to prevent Russell from injuring Prindel and that the issue of causation need not be addressed. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The county's argument that it had no duty of care without a written order was without merit because the oral pronouncement of sentence constituted the competent authority to incarcerate Russell, and the jail's ignorance of the commitment order did not diminish the court order's status as a competent authority. The county had a special relationship of custody under 7-32-2205 to take Russell into custody for the protection of the public, and failure to do so was negligence as a matter of law. Russell posed a foreseeable risk, Prindel was a foreseeable plaintiff, and the county owed a duty to Prindel to exercise reasonable care to protect him against Russell. Reasonable minds could differ as to whether Russell's act of stabbing Prindel was so unforeseeable as to sever the chain of causation, so summary judgment for the county was error. Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006), following Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999), and LaTray v. Havre, 2000 MT 119, 299 M 449, 999 P2d 1010 (2000).

Improper Denial of Challenge for Cause Based on Debtor-Creditor and Attorney-Client Relationships — Erroneous Ruling on Challenge for Cause Prejudicial as Matter of Law — New Trial Warranted: During voir dire, prospective juror Derrig revealed that he was president of a bank that was represented by plaintiff's trial counsel, that he had worked with plaintiff in the past in his position as bank president, and that the bank was one of plaintiff's creditors. Defendant twice challenged Derrig for cause, based on the debtor-creditor relationship between plaintiff and the bank and because of the potential for bias arising from Derrig's attorney-client relationship with plaintiff's attorney. Both challenges were denied, so defendant ultimately used a peremptory challenge to remove Derrig from the jury panel. Defendant claimed that denial of its challenge for cause was improper. Because defendant was forced to use a peremptory challenge to remove Derrig, and in fact used all its peremptory challenges, defendant maintained that it was denied an equal number of peremptory challenges and was thus entitled to a new trial. The Supreme Court agreed. Pursuant to 25-7-223, there is no substantive difference between the chief executive officer of a creditor who is responsible for the creditor's success and the creditor itself when it comes to impartiality and jury duty. Further, an ongoing attorney-client relationship between a prospective juror and trial counsel represents the strong possibility of bias in favor of the party represented by that attorney. Under the rule in King v. Special Resource Management, Inc., 256 M 367, 846 P2d 1038 (1993), and St. v. Williams, 262 M 530, 866 P2d 1099 (1993), when a District Court erroneously denies a challenge for cause, it is the substantive equivalent of granting more peremptory challenges to one side than to the other, which is prejudicial as a matter of law, warranting reversal and a new trial. Reff-Conlin's, Inc. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 2002 MT 60, 309 M 142, 45 P3d 863 (2002).

Cumulative Errors Inapplicable in Civil Cases — New Trial Not Warranted: In a wrongful termination action, the District Court erroneously granted a motion for a new trial to the employer based on the cumulative effect of six alleged errors. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, ruling that the doctrine of cumulative error, while applied in criminal cases, is not extended to civil cases. Because none of the errors considered individually warranted a new trial, the lower court erred in ordering a new trial on the cumulative effect of six errors. Baxter v. Archie Cochrane Motors, Inc., 271 M 286, 895 P2d 631, 52 St. Rep. 444 (1995).

Motion Properly Denied — Standard Not Pleaded or Proved: The motion for new trial was properly denied since the standard contained in 25-11-102 has not been pleaded or proved in the record. Maberry v. Maberry, 183 M 219, 598 P2d 1115 (1979).

Motion Inadequate: Defendants' motion for new trial was inadequate and defective in its essential elements because it merely recited the statutory language of 25-11-102 without stating with particularity the precise facts or circumstances being relied upon in support of their motion. Mont. Williams Double Diamond Corp. v. Hill, 175 M 248, 573 P2d 649 (1978). See also C. Haydon Ltd. v. Mont. Min. Properties, Inc., 286 M 138, 951 P2d 46, 54 St. Rep. 1341 (1997), affirming the denial of a new trial.

Motion for New Trial: When a motion for a new trial merely copied statutory language and did not state with particularity the grounds for granting a new trial under this statute, the motion was defective in its essential respects in that it failed to meet recognized statutory requirements. Halsey v. Uithof, 166 M 319, 532 P2d 686 (1975).

Remedy Exclusive: A motion for a new trial is a statutory remedy and can only be invoked in the manner, within the time, and upon the grounds provided for in the statutes. State ex rel. Smith v. District Court, 55 M 602, 179 P 831 (1919); Evans v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 51 M 107, 149 P 715 (1915); State ex rel. Jones v. District Court, 50 M 1, 144 P 564 (1914); State ex rel. Culbertson Ferry Co. v. District Court, 49 M 595, 144 P 159 (1914); Canning v. Fried, 48 M 560, 139 P 448 (1914); Jackway v. Hymer, 42 M 168, 111 P 720 (1910); Harrington v. Butte, Anaconda & Pac. Ry., 36 M 478, 93 P 640 (1907); Vreeland v. Edens, 35 M 413, 89 P 735 (1907); Wright v. Matthews, 28 M 442, 72 P 820 (1903); State ex rel. Stromberg-Mullins Co. v. District Court, 28 M 123, 72 P 412 (1903); Ogle v. Potter, 24 M 501, 62 P 920 (1900); Whitbeck v. Mont. Cent. Ry. & Great N. Ry., 21 M 102, 52 P 1098 (1898).

Statutory Ground Exclusive: A new trial cannot be granted upon any other ground than one named in this section. Canning v. Fried, 48 M 560, 139 P 448 (1914).

Law and Equity Cases: The rule that a motion for a new trial is a statutory remedy and can only be invoked in the manner, within the time, and upon the grounds provided for in the statutes applies equally to law and equity cases. Ogle v. Potter, 24 M 501, 62 P 920 (1900).

JURY MISCONDUCT

No Juror Misconduct — Alleged Inappropriate Statement During Jury Deliberations Not External Influence: In a negligence action regarding alleged water-contaminated diesel fuel, the plaintiff alleged that he was denied a fair trial after one of the jurors during deliberations discussed her experience about managing a gas station and the precautions she took to prevent water contamination of fuel. However, the Supreme Court held that the allegedly inappropriate information was an internal influence that is not admissible to impeach the verdict. Horn v. Bull River Country Store Properties, LLC, 2012 MT 245, 366 Mont. 491, 288 P.3d 218, distinguishing Brockie v. Omo, 255 Mont. 495, 844 P.2d 61 (1992), and following St. v. Hage, 258 Mont. 498, 853 P.2d 1251 (1993).

Juror Misconduct Using Internet Definition Not Sufficient for New Trial: A juror looked up on the Internet a legal term used in a jury instruction. Although the definition was the same as given in the instruction, this constituted juror misconduct that originated from an external influence. Not every act of juror misconduct mandates a new trial; the misconduct must be prejudicial enough to render the verdict unjust. Considering this misconduct, together with circumstances surrounding the jury decision, the District Court was correct in determining that a new trial was not warranted. Stebner v. Associated Materials, Inc., 2010 MT 138, 356 Mont. 520, 234 P.3d 94.

Failure of Juror to Relate Prior Meeting of Plaintiff's Husband Not Sufficiently Adversarial to Constitute Juror Misconduct to Warrant New Trial: During voir dire, counsel for both parties asked potential jurors if they knew any of the parties or witnesses but received no affirmative response. Plaintiff's husband was not in the courtroom during voir dire, but was present during trial. After plaintiff had rested, a juror informed the court that she recognized plaintiff's husband from a brief meeting 8 or 10 years earlier when he had borrowed some tools from the juror's husband but reaffirmed her belief that she could be impartial. Without objection, the judge ruled that the juror's statement did not require removal from the panel. After the jury found for defendant, plaintiff moved for a new trial on grounds that the juror had not revealed past contact with plaintiff, including the parties' participation on opposite sides of a subdivision legal dispute. The motion was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Plaintiff failed to establish a prior relationship that rose to the level of adversarial, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying a new trial on grounds of juror misconduct. Bailey v. Beartooth Communications Co., 2004 MT 128, 321 M 305, 92 P3d 1 (2004).

Claim of Juror to Be Psychic Not Violative of Due Process Rights: On the second day of jury deliberations, two jurors brought forward concerns that another juror with strong opinions in the case claimed to be a psychic. With counsel present, the trial court questioned the jury foreman as to whether that particular juror would be able to base a decision on the law and the evidence. The court and counsel ultimately determined that no problem existed, and deliberations continued. On appeal, DuBray argued that allowing a psychic juror constituted a due process violation. The Supreme Court noted that DuBray's counsel helped formulate the response to the situation and, finding nothing in the record to indicate that the juror's strong opinions were based on psychic powers or that the juror would not be able to lay aside the opinions and render a fair verdict, held that DuBray's right to a fair and impartial jury was not violated. St. v. DuBray, 2003 MT 255, 317 M 377, 77 P3d 247 (2003). See also St. v. McMahon, 271 M 75, 894 P2d 313 (1995).

Comments by Prospective Juror Not So Egregious as to Be Incurable — Denial of New Trial Proper: Wright was charged with felony possession of and intent to sell drugs. Wright's attorney had been granted a motion in limine excluding all references regarding the defendant's criminal history. A prospective juror, in response to a question by the judge, responded that he knew the defendant and was aware of a past trial involving the defendant and based on the same kind of charges as the present case. The judge dismissed the prospective juror but refused to dismiss the entire panel. The defendant was convicted on three counts, and the trial judge refused to grant a new trial based on the possible prejudicial effect of the comments by the proposed juror. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had properly denied a new trial because the comments by the prospective juror were not so egregious as to be incurable by the District Court's admonishment to the jury to decide the case based only on the evidence presented during trial. St. v. Wright, 2002 MT 275, 312 M 352, 59 P3d 432 (2002).

Juror's Affidavit of Juror Misconduct — Inadmissible Under Ahmann Exception — No Evidence of External Influence — Right to Fair and Impartial Jury Not Violated: Berg argued that he was entitled to a new trial because of jury misconduct and attached to his motion the affidavit of juror Flinders stating that juror Carroll said at one point during the trial, in regard to witness testimony: "That's it; that's all I need to hear; it's all over." The affidavit also stated that juror Carroll pointed to another juror and said in regard to the juror, "That's one we'll have to convince." The Supreme Court noted that although affidavits are usually used to prove juror misconduct under subsection (2) of this section, they may also, under the exception rationale used in Ahmann v. Am. Fed. S&L Ass'n, 235 M 184, 766 P2d 853 (1988), be used pursuant to subsection (1) when the only two people with knowledge of the infraction are a juror and another person. However, the Supreme Court found that the Ahmann exception did not apply when the communication was between jurors. The Supreme Court also discussed the applicability of Rule 606(b), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), and determined that the comments made by juror Carroll were not an external influence upon the jury and therefore did not fall within the exception to the general prohibition against use of juror affidavits to impeach a jury contained in Rule 606(b). Regarding Berg's final argument that the jury misconduct violated the District Court's instructions and Berg's right to a fair and impartial jury, the Supreme Court reviewed California case law raised by Berg and concluded that it was inapplicable in Montana. State ex rel. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. Berg, 279 M 161, 927 P2d 975, 53 St. Rep. 1098 (1996).

Jury's Use of Dictionary Definitions Conflicting With Instructions: The jury used an ordinary dictionary and a legal dictionary, improperly given to the jury by the bailiff at the jury's request, to look up the terms "proximate cause" and "prudent". The definitions relating to causation did not contain the foreseeability element that was contained in an instruction given to the jury. The jury's conduct constituted improper independent research on extraneous material that redefined the critical element of causation by effectively eliminating from the instruction any reference to foreseeability. This was sufficient to demonstrate probable prejudice and potential injury to defendant, against whom the jury returned a verdict in this action. At the very least, there was a reasonable probability that the jury's misconduct influenced its decision, and as a consequence, defendant's substantial rights were compromised, along with his right to a fair trial. The trial judge's denial of a new trial was reversed, and the case was remanded. Allers v. Riley, 273 M 1, 901 P2d 600, 52 St. Rep. 920 (1995).

Improper Comments by Prospective Jurors During Voir Dire — Prejudicial Effect Warranting Reversal: Comments made in the presence of the entire jury panel indicating that certain potential jurors not only knew the defendant but also were aware of the defendant's high propensity for violence were prejudicial, thereby poisoning the perspective of the entire jury panel in such a way that the court could not rectify the problem through admonishment or curative jury instructions and constituting reversible error. This opinion was narrowly drawn and reserved only for the most egregious and prejudicial juror comments—comments that indicate a bias that the juror cannot lay aside or comments that, when made in the presence of other prospective jurors, amount to inadmissible opinions about the defendant's character or propensities. The Supreme Court suggested that District Courts advise prospective jurors, before voir dire commences, not to volunteer the substance of any comments or opinions that they may have about the parties but rather to notify the court that they have information or an opinion about a party. The trial judge can then explore the substance of that information in camera and avoid any taint to the entire jury panel. St. v. McMahon, 271 M 75, 894 P2d 313, 52 St. Rep. 353 (1995), following principles established in Putro v. Baker, 147 M 139, 410 P2d 717 (1966), and followed in St. v. Hardaway, 1998 MT 224, 290 M 516, 966 P2d 125, 55 St. Rep. 936 (1998).

Juror Outburst — Court's Removal of Child Witness From Stand — No Prejudice to Defendant: A juror's request to be dismissed when defense counsel persisted in questioning a 9-year-old witness who repeatedly broke down in tears at a certain point in questioning and the court's removal of the witness from the stand did not warrant a mistrial. There was no showing that the juror's outburst resulted in prejudice to defendant, and removal of the witness did not deprive defendant of the right to confront and cross-examine witnesses when the court gave defense counsel the option to resume questioning at a later time. St. v. McNatt, 257 M 468, 849 P2d 1050, 50 St. Rep. 365 (1993), followed in St. v. Gollehon, 262 M 293, 864 P2d 1257, 50 St. Rep. 1564 (1993), and cited in St. v. Brandon, 264 M 231, 870 P2d 734, 51 St. Rep. 244 (1994).

Grant of New Trial for Jury Irregularity Inapplicable to Defendants Granted Directed Verdict: King sued the Montana Power Company and two wholly owned subsidiaries, Entech, Inc., and Special Resource Management, Inc. (SRM), for wrongful discharge. At trial, the District Court erroneously granted eight peremptory challenges to the three codefendants and granted King a new trial against SRM. Citing O'Brien v. Great N. RR Co., 148 M 429, 421 P2d 710 (1966), King claimed that because all three codefendants had an interest in the case, he is entitled to a new trial against all three. The Supreme Court distinguished O'Brien because this case involved multiple parties governed by different rules of law. The ruling in favor of SRM was reversed because of the District Court's error in allowing additional peremptory challenges. In regards to the other defendants, the case never reached the jury, so King's rights were not affected. The jury irregularity did not apply to the directed verdicts for failure to pierce the corporate veil. King v. Special Resource Management, Inc., 256 M 367, 846 P2d 1038, 50 St. Rep. 117 (1993).

Juror's Independent Research as Misconduct Warranting New Trial: Defendant presented expert testimony regarding the theory of kinematics and motion theory in relation to the location of a highway construction flasher board at the time of an automobile accident. The jury foreman, who had taken physics in college, went to a local library to research the theories presented at trial and related to at least one juror that it clarified the expert testimony. The location of the flasher board was at the heart of the case, and the juror's independent alleged confirmation constituted misconduct that resulted in probable prejudice to plaintiff's case. The juror was in effect made a witness as to any jurors to whom he mentioned his research. A new trial was warranted. Brockie v. Omo Constr., Inc., 255 M 495, 844 P2d 61, 49 St. Rep. 1092 (1992).

Verdict Growing Out of Quotient Process Invalid: Generally, if the amount of the verdict is not exactly the quotient sum but is adopted as a result of the quotient process and grows out of that process, the verdict is invalid. The mere fact that the amount of the quotient and the amount of the final verdict differ is not conclusive of whether the jurors were in fact bound by a prior agreement to adopt a quotient verdict. Stanhope v. Lawrence, 241 M 468, 787 P2d 1226, 47 St. Rep. 438 (1990), followed in Whiting v. St., 248 M 207, 810 P2d 1177, 48 St. Rep. 396 (1991). See also Guertin v. Moody's Market, Inc., 265 M 61, 874 P2d 710, 51 St. Rep. 407 (1994).

Verdict Rendered in Twenty-Five Minutes — No Error: Defendant claimed that the fact that less than 25 minutes elapsed between the time a case was submitted to the jury and the time the jury brought in a verdict demonstrated that the jury failed to consider or read the jury instructions, consider the evidence, or follow its charge. However, in light of overwhelming substantial evidence and a lack of error of law in the record, the verdict was affirmed. St. v. Seaman, 236 M 466, 771 P2d 950, 46 St. Rep. 512 (1989).

Irregularities in Jury Proceedings — Juror Affidavit — New Trial Denied: To support their motion for a new trial in District Court, plaintiffs submitted an affidavit of one juror, alleging that certain statements made by the bailiff during jury deliberations misled the jury and prevented clarification of the issue of proximate cause. Juror affidavits are admissible to show grounds upon which a new trial may be granted when a juror has personal knowledge of an alleged irregularity in the proceedings and the only other individual who has personal knowledge of the facts surrounding the irregularity is the individual who committed the alleged infraction. Only the facts upon which the alleged irregularities are based are admissible. Any allegations regarding the inner workings of the jury deliberations are inadmissible. The Supreme Court will not overrule the District Court's refusal to grant a new trial unless the evidence is clear and convincing that the trial court erred. Ahmann v. Am. Fed. S&L Ass'n, 235 M 184, 766 P2d 853, 45 St. Rep. 2305 (1988), overruled as to standard of review in Allers v. Riley, 273 M 1, 901 P2d 600, 52 St. Rep. 920 (1995), and distinguished in State ex rel. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. Berg, 279 M 161, 927 P2d 975, 53 St. Rep. 1098 (1996).

Attempt by Jury Foreman to Convey Information on Defendant's Criminal Record to Jury — Remand for New Trial: The jury foreman heard in a third-party conversation that "defendant had a criminal record as long as your arm" and attempted to convey the information to the rest of the jury. Although the jury declined to hear the offered information, the injury to defendant had already occurred when the foreman heard the prejudicial comments and informed the remaining jurors that he had reliable information from the Sheriff's office. The District Court denied a motion for mistrial after examining three jurors, but the Supreme Court would not assume that the entire panel was safeguarded from contamination. In remanding for a new trial, the Supreme Court held that the presumption of prejudice that was created when uncontroverted evidence established that prejudicial statements reached one or more jurors was not rebutted when no evidence existed to rebut the presumption other than testimony of three of the jurors. St. v. DeGraw, 235 M 53, 764 P2d 1290, 45 St. Rep. 2154 (1988), distinguishing St. v. Murray, 228 M 125, 741 P2d 759, 44 St. Rep. 1394 (1987), St. v. Counts, 209 M 242, 679 P2d 1245 (1984), and St. v. Gillham, 206 M 169, 670 P2d 544 (1983).

Juror's Alleged Reading of Related Newspaper Article Not Grounds for New Trial: Defendant's attorney submitted an affidavit from his secretary in which she claimed to have heard a juror admit to reading newspaper articles about the trial during the trial, and he contended defendant was therefore entitled to a new trial on grounds of jury misconduct. The argument failed because defendant did not identify the juror or submit an affidavit from that juror. Further, defendant failed to show that the juror was induced to assent in the verdict or that any rights were materially affected. St. v. Crazy Boy, 232 M 398, 757 P2d 341, 45 St. Rep. 1145 (1988).

Mistrial Denied Despite Juror Misconduct — No Error: A juror disregarded trial court instructions by talking with a County Attorney, who assisted in the prosecution, about the propriety of allowing evidence of child abuse in open court. Another juror was seen entering Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services) offices after evidence was allowed showing the agency was peripherally involved in the case, and there was evidence the juror discussed the defendant and her children during a conversation at a restaurant. Arguably, the jury misconduct tended to injure the defendant, and therefore prejudice should be presumed; however, the trial judge could determine that there was sufficient evidence to rebut the presumption. Since there was not clear and convincing evidence of error in denying a motion for mistrial, the ruling was affirmed. St. v. Murray, 228 M 125, 741 P2d 759, 44 St. Rep. 1394 (1987).

Conduct Not Prejudicial: There was no prejudicial jury misconduct to merit a new trial when some jurors in a trial stemming from an automobile accident inadvertently saw defendant's car during noon recess where it was parked outside the courthouse. Erickson v. Perrett, 175 M 87, 572 P2d 518 (1977).

Improper Use of Affidavits: Trial court's granting of new trial on grounds of jury misconduct was reversible error where such motion was made under subsection (1) of this section and supported by jury affidavits, since use of jury affidavits under this section is confined to motions made under subsection (2). Rasmussen v. Sibert, 153 M 286, 456 P2d 835 (1969), followed in Rieger v. Coldwell, 254 M 507, 839 P2d 1257, 49 St. Rep. 768 (1992), and State ex rel. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. Berg, 279 M 161, 927 P2d 975, 53 St. Rep. 1098 (1996).

Lack of Prejudice: Trial court did not err in denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, on the ground of misconduct of the jury during its deliberations, supported by affidavits of four jurors indicating that the irregularity was not on a material matter in dispute, where plaintiff was probably not prejudiced by juror's misconduct in improperly referring to prior litigation in which plaintiff had been involved, the poll of the jury showing an eight to four verdict for the plaintiff. Schmoyer v. Bourdeau, 148 M 340, 420 P2d 316 (1966), followed in Easterday v. Canty, 219 M 420, 712 P2d 1305, 43 St. Rep. 60 (1986) (overruled on other grounds by adoption of Rule 5 Uniform District Court Rules), and overruled as to standard of review in Allers v. Riley, 273 M 1, 901 P2d 600, 52 St. Rep. 920 (1995). (See official comment.)

Investigation by Jury Foreman: New trial was properly granted where foreman of jury made his own investigation at the scene of the accident after hearing testimony and informed the other members of the jury, during their deliberation, of the results of his investigation. The foreman was guilty of misconduct upon which verdict could be impeached by affidavits of jurors. Goff v. Kinzle, 148 M 61, 417 P2d 105 (1966), distinguished in Rasmussen v. Sibert, 153 M 286, 456 P2d 835 (1969) and Charlie v. Foos, 160 M 403, 503 P2d 538 (1972).

Newspaper Seen by Jurors: In a condemnation proceeding, affidavits from jurors showing that a newspaper cartoon having to do with condemnation cases in general had been viewed by some members of the jury during the trial could not be used to support the motion for a new trial in the absence of a showing that the verdict was reached in a manner other than by a fair expression of opinion by the jurors. St. Highway Comm'n v. Manry, 143 M 382, 390 P2d 97 (1964), distinguished in Goff v. Kinzle, 148 M 61, 417 P2d 105 (1966) and Rasmussen v. Sibert, 153 M 286, 456 P2d 835 (1969).

Resort to Chance Not Found: Where, after a judgment of damages was given against the defendant, the defendant and plaintiff each submitted affidavits by the jurors tending to prove or disprove jury misconduct by the resort to a "quotient verdict", the court did not abuse its discretion in denying the defendant's motion for a new trial on the grounds of jury misconduct, even though a mathematical formula may have been implied at some point to arrive at a figure, the affidavits failed to show that the jurors agreed to be bound by the results of the formula. Teesdale v. Anschutz Drilling Co., 138 M 427, 357 P2d 4 (1960).

Misconduct Not Shown: In a flood case involving alleged negligence of a railway company, affidavit in support of plaintiff's motion for new trial did not show misconduct of the jury or depriving plaintiff of a fair trial under subsections (1) and (2) of this section. Wibaux Realty Co. v. N. Pac. Ry., 101 M 126, 54 P2d 1175 (1935).

Participation by Jurors: To vitiate a verdict arrived at by chance, it is not necessary that all of the jurors joining in it or a majority of them must have been induced to assent to the method employed in arriving at the verdict, it being sufficient under this section if any one of them assented thereto. Benjamin v. Helena Light & Ry., 79 M 144, 255 P 20 (1927).

"Quotient Verdict" Defined: A quotient verdict, rendition of which constitutes misconduct of the jury and is ground for a new trial, is one arrived at by adding the amounts each juror thinks should be awarded and dividing the sum by twelve, with the agreement in advance to return a verdict for the quotient so found. Benjamin v. Helena Light & Ry., 79 M 144, 255 P 20 (1927), followed in Stanhope v. Lawrence, 241 M 468, 787 P2d 1226, 47 St. Rep. 438 (1990).

Demonstration to Jurors During Trial: Where in an action for personal injuries sustained in a collision between a streetcar and a railway train, the operation of air brakes on a streetcar was not involved, the fact that a motorman demonstrated its operation to two of the jurors in the case while the trial was in progress was insufficient to warrant the granting of a new trial on the ground of misconduct of the jurors. Norton v. Great N. Ry., 78 M 273, 254 P 165 (1927).

Quotient Verdict as Valid: A verdict arrived at by taking the aggregate of the amounts representing the views of the jurors and dividing that sum by the number of jurors as a means for further consideration is valid, unless the jurors agree in advance that the quotient thus obtained shall constitute the amount of their verdict, and such agreement is carried into effect. Great N. Ry. v. Benjamin, 51 M 167, 149 P 968 (1915).

Court Instruction on Chance Verdict: Where, upon the polling of the jury in a personal injury case, the court inquires whether the verdict for the plaintiff has been reached by chance, and, several of the jurors answering in the affirmative, the court then directs them to retire and find a verdict by "deliberation and reasoning" and to exclude the element of chance, the action of the court is unauthorized; the verdict returned should have been received subject to be set aside only upon an application under this section. Harrington v. Butte, Anaconda & Pac. Ry., 36 M 478, 93 P 640 (1907).

Construction of Evidence Not Subject to Review: In the absence of a statute and in order to secure freedom of thought, thorough discussion, and independence of action, as well as to prevent undue influence and fraud, the construction or weight given by the jury to evidence submitted to it is not subject of inquiry upon a motion for a new trial. Subsection (2) of this section does not change this rule. Spencer v. Spencer, 31 M 631, 79 P 320 (1905).

Quotient Verdict as Resort to Chance: An agreement by a jury to return a "quotient verdict" whereby each member was to indicate the amount for which he thought the verdict should be and the sum of such amounts divided by 12 should be the verdict, with an agreement to abide by such quotient, shown by the affidavits of jurymen who were induced to assent to a verdict so reached on account of such agreement, is a resort to the determination of chance and within subsection (2) of this section, allowing a new trial for such misconduct on the part of the jury. Gordon v. Trevarthan, 13 M 387, 34 P 185 (1892).

IMPEACHMENT OF VERDICT

Use of Juror Affidavits to Impeach Verdict — Limited to Showing of External Influences: Appellants sought a new trial on the grounds that posttrial juror affidavits proved that not all of the potential jurors were being truthful during voir dire, resulting in denial of the right to a fair trial. However, under Rule 606(b), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), the use of juror affidavits to impeach a jury verdict is limited to showing external influences on the jury. Absent the presence of any exceptions listed in Rule 606, M.R.Ev., it was not an abuse of discretion for the trial court to deny a motion for new trial on grounds of juror misconduct. Estate of Spicher v. Miller, 260 M 504, 861 P2d 183, 50 St. Rep. 1180 (1993).

Amending Special Verdict Form Several Hours After Jury Deliberations Began — Error: After several hours of deliberation, the jury returned with questions. In response to those questions, it was error for the court to amend the special verdict forms to include a determination by the jury as to whether a party acted willfully or wantonly. Although the instruction would not have been error if given at the proper time, the late inclusion denied the party the right to argue his case and properly present it before the jury. White v. Phillips, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986).

New Trial — Use of Juror Affidavit Disallowed: Plaintiff, mother and mother-in-law of defendants, broke her ankle by falling into a trench on a construction project in defendants' backyard. The jury found damages of $15,000, but found plaintiff 85% negligent. The District Court granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial based on irregularity in the jury proceedings, and defendant appealed. Plaintiff's motion was supported by an affidavit of the jury foreman stating the jury did not understand the instructions on contributory negligence, comparative negligence, and mitigation of damages. Cases on use of juror affidavits in granting a new trial involve either external or internal influence on the jury. This case falls into the internal influence category. The District Court abused its discretion in granting a new trial on the basis of a juror affidavit purporting to impeach the verdict by delving into the thought processes of the jurors. Harry v.

Elderkin, 196 M 1, 637 P2d 809, 38 St. Rep. 2076 (1981), followed in McGillen v. Plum Creek Timber Co., 1998 MT 193, 290 M 264, 964 P2d 18, 55 St. Rep. 808 (1998).

Affidavits Limited: Jurors may not impeach their verdict by affidavit in support of a motion for a new trial except where it was reached by resort to chance. Schaff v. Shaules, 137 M 357, 352 P2d 265 (1960).

Mistake Not Provable: Affidavits of jurors will not be received to prove any mistake of the evidence or misapprehension of the law on the part of the jury, and the verdict in which they all concur must be the "best evidence" of their belief, both as to the fact and the law, and therefore conclusive. Bateman v. Donovan, 131 F2d 759 (1942).

Knowledge of Plaintiff's Action: Under this section, jurors may not impeach their verdict by affidavit in support of a motion for new trial except where it was reached by a "resort to chance"; hence the court properly denied a new trial the motion for which was based on the affidavits of four jurors that another juror, after retirement to the jury room, had stated that he knew plaintiff, was conversant with one phase of the transaction giving rise to the suit, and that the only proper thing to do was to find for him. Hough v. Shishkowsky, 99 M 28, 43 P2d 247 (1935).

Affidavits Properly Ignored: Under this section, the jury can impeach their verdict only when arrived at by resort to chance; hence affidavits by six jurors filed in support of a motion for new trial to the effect that two-thirds of the jury were in favor of denying plaintiff the relief sought and would have found in favor of defendant if they had been advised as to a fact the defendant proposed to establish if a new trial was granted were properly ignored by the trial court. Komposh v. Powers, 75 M 493, 244 P 298 (1926), affirmed 275 US 504 (1927).

Exception for Verdict by Chance: Jurors should not be heard to impeach their own verdict, and the single exception, found in subsection (2) of this section, that they may do so where the verdict has been reached by a resort to chance, is the only one in which it will be permitted; this express exception, under the rule "expressio unius est exclusio alterius", seems to exclude all other exceptions. St. v. Lewis, 52 M 495, 159 P 415 (1916); Chenoweth v. Great N. Ry., 50 M 481, 148 P 330 (1915); Sutton v. Lowry, 39 M 462, 104 P 545 (1909); St. v. Beesskove, 34 M 41, 85 P 376 (1906).

Provision Exclusive: The provision of this section, that the affidavits of jurors may be used to impeach a verdict only when it was reached by resort to chance, is exclusive; hence, an affidavit of a juror, relating to a conversation had with another juror touching the latter's misconduct, was incompetent, as was also that of one, not a juror, as to the contents of an affidavit of the offending juror, for the same and the additional reason that it was hearsay. Sutton v. Lowry, 39 M 462, 104 P 545 (1909). See also Snyder v. Chinook, 48 M 484, 138 P 1090 (1914).

INSTRUCTIONS TO JURY

Disallowance of Jury Instruction Regarding Heightened Standard of Care of Driver in Vicinity of Children: Fifteen-year-old Hanson was struck by Edwards's car while crossing an intersection near a school. The intersection had no sidewalks, curbs, or painted lines delineating a crosswalk. Hanson sought a jury instruction that a motorist operating in an area in which children are known to likely be present has a heightened standard of care, relying on Okland v. Wolf, 258 M 35, 850 P2d 302 (1993). The instruction was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that a person's duty of care varies depending on the circumstances at the time and place in question, so in this case, as in Okland, the standard negligence instruction permitted Hanson to argue that the circumstances required a heightened standard and was thus considered adequate. Hanson v. Edwards, 2000 MT 221, 301 M 185, 7 P3d 419, 57 St. Rep. 907 (2000).

Disallowance of Jury Instruction Regarding Motorist's Affirmative Duty to Ascertain Whether Intersection Clear and to Anticipate Presence of Pedestrians: Hanson was struck by Edwards's car while crossing an intersection that had no sidewalks, curbs, or painted lines delineating a crosswalk. Hanson sought a jury instruction that a motorist has an affirmative duty to ascertain whether an intersection is clear before proceeding and a duty to anticipate that pedestrians may be present in the intersection. The instruction was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the instruction that was given, which clarified a driver's obligation to yield the right-of-way to a pedestrian in a crosswalk and a pedestrian's obligation to avoid moving into the path of a vehicle that is too close for the driver to yield, was a proper statement of law under 61-8-504 and that the trial court did not err in refusing to give Hanson's proposed instruction regarding a driver's affirmative duties. Hanson v. Edwards, 2000 MT 221, 301 M 185, 7 P3d 419, 57 St. Rep. 907 (2000).

Unmarked Crosswalk at Every Intersection: Hanson was struck by Edwards's car while crossing an intersection that had no sidewalks, curbs, or painted lines delineating a crosswalk.

Hanson moved for a directed verdict on grounds that because he was in an unmarked crosswalk, which gave him the right-of-way, Edwards was negligent as a matter of law. The motion was denied, and the trial court refused to instruct the jury that an unmarked crosswalk exists at every intersection pursuant to 61-1-209 (now repealed). The Supreme Court examined legislative intent and, reading 61-1-209 (now repealed) in pari materia with 61-8-502, concluded that Montana law provides for a crosswalk on any portion of a roadway at an intersection. The jury should have been so instructed, and failure to do so was reversible error. Hanson v. Edwards, 2000 MT 221, 301 M 185, 7 P3d 419, 57 St. Rep. 907 (2000).

Failure to Instruct Jury Regarding Instrument of Revocation — Validity of Will — New Trial Proper: A new trial was warranted in an estate case when the District Court failed to instruct the jury regarding an instrument of revocation. Because the instrument of revocation and the will itself were executed so closely in time, the validity of both documents was inextricably intertwined and it was necessary that the same factfinder adjudicate the validity of both documents. Therefore, a new trial on the validity of the will was also proper. In re Estate of DeCock, 278 M 437, 925 P2d 488, 53 St. Rep. 992 (1996).

Brief Jury Deliberation of Complex Legal Issues — Streamlining and Clarification by Verdict Form — No Error: Walker contended that the jury's brief 40-minute deliberations, in conjunction with the relative complexity of the legal issues and the weight of the evidence in the case, supported his position that the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to set aside the verdict. Generally, shortness of time taken by a jury in reaching its verdict has no effect on the validity of the verdict. Only when the brief jury deliberation is coupled with a verdict that is contrary to the great weight of the evidence should the verdict be set aside. In this case, the relative complexity of the legal issues had been narrowed and clarified by the court and counsel by the time that the jury instructions were given, and the verdict form contained only seven questions, not all of which the jury had to answer. Based on the streamlining of the issues and the Supreme Court's consideration of the issues that remained, the verdict was not contrary to the weight of the evidence and the trial court did not err in refusing to set the verdict aside. Walker v. Mont. Power Co., 278 M 344, 924 P2d 1339, 53 St. Rep. 943 (1996), following Loppe v. Blocker, 220 NW 2d 570 (Iowa 1974), and Kearns v. Keystone Shipping Co., 863 F2d 177 (1st Cir. 1988).

Instruction Using "Matter of Law" Rather Than "Per Se" — Grounds for Reversal: Hall, in a motor vehicle accident case, argued that the District Court erred in allowing defendant's jury instruction that stated that violation of a statute in an emergency situation beyond a person's control is not negligence "as a matter of law". The Supreme Court ruled that while it was true that "as a matter of law" could be construed as the equivalent of "per se", a jury instruction that uses "as a matter of law" wording is basically misleading and is grounds for reversal. Hall v. Big Sky Lumber & Supply, Inc., 261 M 328, 863 P2d 389, 50 St. Rep. 1345 (1993).

Failure to Object to Court Solution for Improper Jury Instruction — New Trial Precluded: During settlement of jury instructions, plaintiff withdrew an objectionable instruction, but the instruction was inadvertently read to the jury anyway. The court reported to the jury that the attorneys had stipulated that the instruction should be removed, the correct instruction was given, and the erroneous instruction was not sent to the jury room. Defendant argued that because the inadvertent instruction was a misstatement of law, he was prejudiced and therefore entitled to a new trial. The Supreme Court followed Rasmussen v. Sibert, 153 M 286, 456 P2d 835 (1969), in holding that even if defendant objected to the reading of the incorrect instruction, there was no objection made to the solution used by the trial court in dealing with the mistake. Because defendant did not move for mistrial or other corrective action, choosing instead to submit the case to the jury based on the posture that it was in, he was precluded from requesting relief in the nature of a mistrial for the first time on appeal after receiving a verdict he considered adverse. The same rationale applied to defendant's complaint regarding an allegedly improper closing argument by plaintiff's attorney. Okland v. Wolf, 258 M 35, 850 P2d 302, 50 St. Rep. 412 (1993).

Jury Instructions Not Founded in Evidence or Misstatement of Law — New Trial Denied: Plaintiffs sought a new trial on grounds that the trial court improperly refused to give plaintiffs' proffered instructions on termination of power of attorney, warranty, and fraudulent conveyance. However, the instructions were correctly refused because: (1) there were undefined legal terms in the instructions on termination of power of attorney that rendered the instructions ambiguous or unintelligible; (2) the giving of non-Uniform Commercial Code warranty instructions in a Uniform Commercial Code case was a technical defect and did not constitute a misstatement of law affecting the plaintiffs' rights; and (3) there was no evidence of fraudulent conveyance, rendering that instruction improper. Boyd v. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc., 246 M 247, 805 P2d 1282, 47 St. Rep. 1923 (1990).

Instructions Based on Out-of-State Supreme Court Decision Rather Than Appellate Court Decision — No Error: Plaintiff complained that the District Court erred in refusing to give three jury instructions based on a Washington appellate court decision and in giving instead an instruction taken from the Washington Supreme Court appeal of the same case, which modified the appellate court decision. The District Court did not err in refusing to give instructions based on a theory of law rejected by the Washington Supreme Court. Larson v. K-Mart Corp., 241 M 428, 787 P2d 361, 47 St. Rep. 415 (1990).

Instruction Stating Applicable Law: In a case in which the plaintiff's proposed instruction had no basis in Montana law and other instructions adequately presented the applicable law, the plaintiff could not claim reversible error as to the giving or denying of certain instructions. Feller v. Fox, 237 M 150, 772 P2d 842, 46 St. Rep. 694 (1989).

"Cline Instruction" Improper Statement of Law Regarding DUI: A jury instruction approved by the Supreme Court in St. v. Cline, 135 M 372, 339 P2d 657 (1959), stating that a violation of 61-8-401 occurred if a person drove while impaired by alcohol to the "slightest degree", was held to no longer be a proper statement of the law in light of subsequent legislative amendments which specifically spell out the extent of the influence of intoxicants necessary for conviction. The court held that the instruction must be either revised or abandoned to conform with 61-8-401 and remanded for a new trial. Helena v. Davis, 222 M 492, 723 P2d 224, 43 St. Rep. 1447 (1986).

No Objection to Jury View — New Trial Not Granted: Plaintiff contended that District Court erred in not granting a new trial when the jury was allowed to view the property prior to the time the plaintiff rested her case and in not giving a cautionary instruction. However, the record showed that plaintiff's counsel made no objection to the jury view and did not request a cautionary instruction. The Supreme Court found no District Court error for a procedure to which plaintiff did not object. Bushnell v. Cook, 221 M 296, 718 P2d 665, 43 St. Rep. 825 (1986).

Amending Special Verdict Form Several Hours After Jury Deliberations Began — Error: After several hours of deliberation, the jury returned with questions. In response to those questions, it was error for the court to amend the special verdict forms to include a determination by the jury as to whether a party acted willfully or wantonly. Although the instruction would not have been error if given at the proper time, the late inclusion denied the party the right to argue his case and properly present it before the jury. White v. Phillips, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986).

Assumption of Risk: Where trial court erred in its instruction on assumption of risk in pedestrian injury case, trial court did not abuse its discretion by granting new trial pursuant to this section. Jankovich v. Neill, 153 M 337, 457 P2d 475 (1969).

Form of Instruction Not Chance: Long form quotient verdict instruction from Jury Instruction Guide is not "a resort to the determination of chance" within meaning of statute, in absence of showing that jurors agreed in advance that quotient thus obtained should constitute amount of verdict and adhered to that agreement. Thomas v. Whiteside, 148 M 394, 421 P2d 449 (1966).

Misconception of Law by Court: Where District Court acted under a misconception of law and granted a motion for a new trial on all of the issues, although it had the power to grant the new trial upon part of the issues only, the Supreme Court under its supervisory powers may grant complete relief and set aside the order for the new trial as to the issue on which the District Court felt new trial should not be granted. State ex rel. Tripp v. District Court, 130 M 574, 305 P2d 1101 (1957).

Irreconcilable Instructions: Where two instructions are given on the same point and there is an irreconcilable conflict between them, it is not material whether either instruction is correct as applied to the record and objection to the second instruction should have been sustained. Bennett v. Dodgson, 129 M 228, 284 P2d 990 (1955).

Error in Law as Instructions: Subsection (7) of this section embraces error in instructions. Maki v. Murray Hosp., 91 M 251, 7 P2d 228 (1932); Kleinschmidt v. McDermott, 12 M 309, 30 P 393 (1892).

Misapplication of Law to Facts: Under this section, a new trial, a reexamination of the facts, lies where an error of law has been committed by reason of misapplication of law to the facts. In re Stinger Estate, 61 M 173, 201 P 693 (1921).

ACCIDENT OR SURPRISE

Photographs of Wrong Car Accident Provided to Plaintiff by Defendant's Insurer — Mistake Discovered During Trial — Motion for New Trial Improperly Denied: The plaintiff sued the defendant for injuries she sustained in a car accident involving the parties. In discovery, the defendant's insurer produced pictures of the defendant's vehicle, and at trial, the plaintiff testified that the pictures represented the damages from her car accident. Not until after the plaintiff testified did she learn that the pictures were of damage sustained by the defendant's vehicle in a different accident. After the jury rendered the plaintiff a small financial verdict, the plaintiff filed a motion for a new trial based on the surprise of the pictures' contents, which the District Court denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed and directed the District Court to order a new trial, finding that the defense counsel had undermined the fairness of the trial by impugning the plaintiff's credibility regarding the content of the pictures. O'Connor v. George, 2015 MT 274, 381 Mont. 127, 357 P.3d 323.

New Trial Warranted on Grounds of Surprise: In a pretrial order, the District Court issued an order in limine precluding all evidence, testimony, or reference to plaintiff's preexisting injuries. However, on the first day of trial, the court sought to clarify the order by stating that the order was limited to evidence attributing plaintiff's postaccident condition to preexisting conditions, but that other expert evidence related to alternative causation would be allowed. Plaintiff moved for a new trial on grounds of surprise, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court applied the criteria in Willing v. Quebedeaux, 2009 MT 102, 350 M 119, 204 P3d 1248 (2009), and held that because the limited scope of the pretrial order was not clearly understood and because the mutual misunderstanding of the order was not corrected until the morning of trial, plaintiff was unfairly surprised and substantially disadvantaged in trying a case that plaintiff had not prepared for. The District Court thus abused its discretion in denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, so the Supreme Court reversed and remanded for further proceedings. Clark v. Bell, 2009 MT 390, 353 M 331, 220 P3d 650 (2009).

Failure to File Final Pretrial Order — New Trial Not Warranted on Grounds of Irregularity, Accident, or Surprise: In a minute entry from a pretrial conference, the District Court ordered the parties to present the final pretrial order by February 25, 2002, or the trial date would be vacated. The parties failed to present a final pretrial order by that date, but the case proceeded to trial as scheduled, despite denial of defendant's motion for a continuance. Defendant failed to appear at trial, and the District Court granted summary judgment to plaintiff. Defendant moved for a new trial because of an irregularity in the proceedings or because of accident or surprise. The motion was denied, and defendant appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Defendant knew that it was obligated to file a formal motion seeking a continuance if the trial date was to be vacated. When defendant filed the continuance motion, it was denied, so it was not plausible that defendant believed that the trial date had been vacated by the parties' failure to file a final pretrial order. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion for a new trial because defendant was not deprived of its substantive rights by either an irregularity in the proceedings or an accident or surprise. Westmark Int'l Corp. v. Gold Hill Placers, Inc., 2003 MT 119, 315 M 492, 70 P3d 731 (2003).

Improper Admission of Testimony of Expert — Reference to Unintroduced Exhibit — No Surprise: During his testimony, defendants' expert referred to a document that was not listed during discovery as one of the documents upon which he based his opinion and that was not a document to which he had access prior to deposition. Plaintiffs alleged surprise as grounds for a new trial, asserting defendants should have supplemented the expert's responses to his deposition, consistent with former Rule 26(e), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), to reveal that the expert had gained access to the report subsequent to deposition. However, the expert also testified that he had formed his opinion prior to receipt of the report and that the report did not affect his analysis or conclusion. Because plaintiffs were unable to show that the surprise had a material bearing on the case or that the result of a new trial would probably be different, they were not entitled to a new trial because of improper admission of the expert's testimony. Boyd v. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc., 246 M 247, 805 P2d 1282, 47 St. Rep. 1923 (1990), followed in Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994).

Use of Juror Affidavits in Attempt to Prove Irregularity or Accident Improper: In moving for a new trial, plaintiffs submitted juror affidavits as evidence that the jury was misled in its duties, asserting that constituted an irregularity or accident preventing plaintiffs from receiving a fair trial. However, this tactic was an attempt to use juror affidavits to impeach the jury's own verdict. If a motion for a new trial is to be granted, an irregularity or accident in jury proceedings must exist independent of juror affidavits. Use of juror affidavits to prove irregularity or accident is clearly improper. The alleged misunderstanding of the jurors in this case did not fit any of the exceptions enumerated in Rule 606(b), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10). Motion for a new trial was properly denied. Boyd v. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc., 246 M 247, 805 P2d 1282, 47 St. Rep. 1923 (1990).

Accident or Surprise — Change of Key Witness' Testimony: The ultimate issue in motor vehicle accident case was what caused tractor-trailer combination to overturn and slide into the other lane. Plaintiff introduced an accident scene diagram drawn by a state engineer from figures obtained by the investigating highway patrolmen. It placed the tractor-trailer's skid marks in the early part of the curve in which the overturn occurred, where the curve's radius was less than it was later in the curve, thus buttressing plaintiff's theory of the case. At trial, defendants recalled a highway patrolman, who testified that the patrolmen had incorrectly placed the skid marks on the diagram and that they should be placed farther into the curve, where the radius of the curve was sharper. The placement of the skid marks and the sharpness of the curve at the point of the skid were essential to resolution of the ultimate issue. Plaintiff was properly granted a new trial on the ground of accident or surprise which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against because: (1) it was clearly shown that he was actually surprised; (2) the facts causing the surprise had a material bearing on the case; (3) the verdict or decision resulted mainly from those facts; (4) the surprise did not result from plaintiff's inattention or negligence; (5) plaintiff acted promptly and claimed relief at the earliest opportunity; (6) plaintiff used every means reasonably available at the time of the surprise to remedy it; and (7) the result of a new trial without the surprise would probably be different. Ewing v. Esterholt, 210 M 367, 684 P2d 1053, 41 St. Rep. 1095 (1984), followed in In re Adoption of S.E., 232 M 31, 755 P2d 27, 45 St. Rep. 843 (1988), Donovan v. Graff, 231 M 456, 753 P2d 878, 45 St. Rep. 758 (1988), and in Boyd v. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc., 246 M 247, 805 P2d 1282, 47 St. Rep. 1923 (1990). See also Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994).

Surprise When Damages Based on Fixed Contract Price Rather Than Estimated Price of Repair: Where the estimated cost of repairing damage sustained by a home under an implied warranty of habitability was $65,000, but the contractor later indicated that, because of the unknown contingencies which might be encountered, he would not bid the job for less than $97,500, the District Court allowed damages of $97,500. The Supreme Court determined there was no surprise sufficient to grant a new trial since there were references in the record sufficient to alert defendant to the fact that a fixed-price contract would be different from the estimate and would be relied on by the plaintiff. Chandler v. Madsen, 197 M 234, 642 P2d 1028, 39 St. Rep. 508 (1982).

Accident or Surprise — Prior Notice: Introduction in midtrial in negligence action against county for death of exhibitor's horses in barn fire of evidence tending to show that care, custody, and control of horses was in county was not surprise creating ground for new trial because of county's representation by insurers' counsel where county had been warned by insurer almost 2½ years before trial that policy might not cover loss because of policy exclusion of property in care, custody, and control of the insured; refusal to admit into evidence county's premium book containing rules and regulations applicable to exhibitors as well as exculpatory disclaimers of liability for loss of exhibitor's livestock did not create surprise. Haynes v. Missoula County, 163 M 270, 517 P2d 370 (1973).

Surprise — Reversal of Ruling by Trial Court: Where a trial court found certain counterclaims to have been sufficiently pleaded and defaulted the plaintiff as to the same, on failure to reply, relying on which default defendant introduced no evidence, on reference of the case, to prove the counterclaims, and the court adopted the findings of the referee but declared that only part of the counterclaims were sufficiently pleaded, a new trial was properly granted to defendant, as such action of the court was surprise and accident which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against. Porter v. Indus. Printing Co., 26 M 170, 66 P 839, 67 P 67 (1901).

NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE

Clark Factors for New Trial Satisfied — Remand: Plaintiff contended that a new trial was warranted based on newly discovered evidence that a gym teacher who previously testified that he was present when plaintiff was injured in gym class was in fact not present and supervising the class, which ran counter to defendant's position regarding adequate supervision. The District Court denied the new trial motion, but on appeal the Supreme Court reversed. Applying the factors in St. v. Clark, 2005 MT 330, 330 M 8, 125 P3d 1099 (2005), the court found that each of the factors was met and that the new evidence regarding the teacher's presence warranted a new trial. Larchick v. Diocese of Gt. Falls-Billings, 2009 MT 175, 350 M 538, 208 P3d 836 (2009).

New Trial to Lift Injunction on Water Use Properly Denied: As a result of defendant's negligent operation of an irrigation ditch and the risk associated with high volume flow in the ditch, the District Court enjoined defendant from a flow of more than 400 miner's inches through the ditch until defendant could prove that the ditch could safely transport more. Defendant sought a new trial to lift the injunction on grounds that new evidence stemming from the successful operation of the ditch since the trial could not have been presented earlier. The motion for a new trial was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although the evidence was new, the fact remained that varying flows when combined with other variables could still produce damaging results, so the evidence was insufficient to warrant a new trial. Graveley Simmental Ranch Co. v. Quigley, 2003 MT 34, 314 M 226, 65 P3d 225 (2003).

Valuation of Marital Estate — Evidence of Cash Value of Life Insurance Policy Discovered After Trial Insufficient to Warrant New Trial: The trial court awarded wife a $10,000 life insurance policy as a portion of the marital estate, but she was unable to cash the policy because the company was in rehabilitation, a fact she claimed she was not notified of until after trial. Wife asserted that this newly discovered evidence constituted grounds for a new trial. Although there was ambiguous testimony at trial as to whether she was actually notified of the rehabilitation before or after trial, her knowledge of the rehabilitation would not have changed the outcome of the court's distribution because the policy was not worthless; therefore, a retrial based on newly discovered evidence was not appropriate. In re Marriage of Neal, 267 M 455, 884 P2d 789, 51 St. Rep. 1109 (1994), followed in Groves v. Clark, 1999 MT 117, 294 M 417, 982 P2d 446, 56 St. Rep. 490 (1999).

No Statutory Authority for Setting Aside Workers' Compensation Court Judgment — Equitable Relief: Although under some circumstances the Workers' Compensation Court may have inherent equitable power to set aside its judgment, as in cases under former Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), requiring equitable relief because of extrinsic fraud, in a case in which findings established at most intrinsic fraud, it was error for the court to set aside its judgment based on a petition filed more than 60 days after it was entered. The Supreme Court further declined to apply the civil procedure in this section to an untimely motion to set aside a judgment based on newly discovered evidence in a workers' compensation case. St. Comp. Ins. Fund v. Chapman, 267 M 484, 885 P2d 407, 51 St. Rep. 1070 (1994).

Newly Discovered Evidence of Stock Ownership — Judgment Affirmed by Finding Evidence Would Not Change Result of Trial: Cowles brought an action against Sheeline to quiet title to a Montana mining claim. Evidence at trial consisted of confusing and incomplete evidence of stock transactions. Following a judgment for Cowles, Sheeline moved for relief from judgment on the basis of newly discovered evidence consisting of stock records found in an unlikely place upon moving from her home in Boston. The District Court found a lack of due diligence and that the new evidence would not have changed the result of trial and denied the motion after expiration of the 45-day limit provided in former Rule 59(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court determined that the District Court should have found due diligence but after a review of the new evidence, concurred with the District Court that although some of the evidence was not produced at trial, it was cumulative and duplicative with introduced evidence and would not have altered the outcome of the trial. Cowles v. Sheeline, 259 M 1, 855 P2d 93, 50 St. Rep. 653 (1993).

Statements Regarding Value of Partnership Assets No Barrier to Presentation of Evidence — New Trial Denied: Wife argued for a new trial based on conflicting information compiled after trial regarding the value of the marital estate. With the exercise of reasonable diligence, the evidence could have been discovered prior to trial. Husband's trial statements concerning partnership assets did not materially thwart wife's ability to present her case, indicating lack of fraud, so a new trial was unwarranted. In re Marriage of Barnes, 251 M 334, 825 P2d 201, 49 St. Rep. 67 (1992).

New Trial Denied — Lack of Diligence: The defendants sought a new trial on the basis of newly discovered evidence indicating that the valuation of real property reached by the trial court was $13,000 too high. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's denial of the motion, holding that the defendants had not demonstrated that the evidence could not have been discovered in time for the trial with exercise of due diligence on their part. Brunner v. LaCasse, 241 M 102, 785 P2d 210, 47 St. Rep. 117 (1990).

Medical Possibility Evidence: In claimant's appeal of a Workers' Compensation Court order dismissing his petition for a rehearing, he asserted that the standard for reopening a Workers' Compensation Act claim under 25-11-102 is that it was medically possible that an occupational injury aggravated a preexisting condition. The Supreme Court affirmed the order, stating that medical possibility evidence alone does not mandate a conclusion that the claimant has met his burden of proof under the Act; rather, medical possibility is to be weighed just as any other evidence. If supported by other independent evidence, it is acceptable for use by the court in making its determination. Wheeler v. Ins. Co. of N. Amer., 217 M 254, 704 P2d 49, 42 St. Rep. 1177 (1985). See also Miller v. Frasure, 264 M 354, 871 P2d 1302, 51 St. Rep. 233 (1994).

Workers' Compensation — Results Not Changed by Newly Discovered Evidence — New Trial Denied: Moen suffered a heart attack and died. His wife filed a claim for workers' compensation that was unsuccessful because she failed to prove her husband's death was the result of a "tangible happening of a traumatic nature from an unexpected cause or unusual strain". In a related case involving Moen's death, one of the witnesses changed his testimony and Moen's wife sought a new trial in the Workers' Compensation Court based on the newly discovered testimony. The court found substantial evidence to support the conclusion that the new evidence would not have changed the result and therefore declined to set aside the lower court's denial of a new trial. Moen v. Peter Kiewit & Sons' Co., 201 M 425, 655 P2d 482, 39 St. Rep. 2209 (1982).

Crucial Witness — Lack of Diligence: Plaintiff who knew witness was crucial and could have learned the location of the witness by questioning his other witnesses was not entitled to a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence consisting of the fact that plaintiff located the witness after the trial. Johnson v. YMCA, 201 M 36, 651 P2d 1245, 39 St. Rep. 1937 (1982).

Prior Knowledge:

Buyer looked at horse for sale, suggested it had a navicular disease, called seller later in the day to say he would take the horse, and the sale was concluded 2 days later. Upon discovering that the horse would not perform as advertised by seller, buyer returned the horse and sued for the purchase price. Defendant received a jury verdict, and buyer moved for a new trial on ground of newly discovered evidence consisting of a veterinarian's finding, after buyer retrieved the horse after the trial, that the horse had a navicular disease and should not be ridden. Denial of a new trial was proper. Buyer initially suspected the disease existed, yet did not have the horse inspected. Fordyce v. Hansen, 198 M 344, 646 P2d 519, 39 St. Rep. 1043 (1982).

The party moving for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence must show by his own affidavit that the new evidence was not known to him at the time of the trial, and the affidavits of other persons on that question are not sufficient. Roberts v. Oechsli, 54 M 589, 172 P 1037 (1918); Spencer v. Spencer, 31 M 631, 79 P 320 (1905); Smith v. Shook, 30 M 30, 75 P 513 (1904).

Newly Discovered Evidence — No Abuse of Discretion in Denial of Motion: Where, following a decree of divorce of the parties, appellant wife produced evidence that part of the marital property claimed to have been previously sold by the respondent had not been sold as claimed and moved for a new trial, it was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to deny the new trial, as while the evidence was conflicting, the denial is supported by credible evidence. Fredericksen v. Fredericksen, 186 M 548, 605 P2d 1135 (1980).

Substantial Evidence: Substantial credible evidence existed to support findings of fact and conclusions of law and were unaffected by alleged "newly discovered" evidence which, at best, was merely cumulative. Furthermore, because the "new evidence" was at all times in the exclusive possession of appellants, motion for new trial was denied. Kartes v. Kartes, 175 M 210, 573 P2d 191 (1977). See also Walter v. Evans Products Co., 207 M 26, 672 P2d 613, 40 St. Rep. 1844 (1983), and In re Marriage of Burner, 246 M 394, 803 P2d 1099, 48 St. Rep. 7 (1991).

Showing Required — Contents of Affidavit:

A party moving for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence must show (1) that such evidence came to applicant's knowledge since the trial; (2) that it was not through want of diligence that it was not discovered earlier; (3) that it is so material that it would probably produce a different result upon retrial; (4) that it is not cumulative merely; (5) application must be supported by the affidavit of the witness whose evidence is alleged to have been newly discovered, or its absence accounted for; and (6) it must be made apparent that the evidence is not such as will tend only to impeach the character or credit of a witness. Kerrigan v. Kerrigan, 115 M 136, 139 P2d 533 (1943), followed in Schilke v. Bean, 232 M 125, 755 P2d 565, 45 St. Rep. 930 (1988), and in Donovan v. Graff, 231 M 456, 753 P2d 878, 45 St. Rep. 758 (1988).

On the ground of newly discovered evidence, one must show that such evidence came to his knowledge since the trial; that it was not through want of diligence it was not discovered earlier; that its materiality will probably produce a different result on retrial; and that it is not merely cumulative or only tending to impeach. St. v. Estep, 103 M 78, 61 P2d 830 (1936). See also Walter v. Evans Products Co., 207 M 26, 672 P2d 613, 40 St. Rep. 1844 (1983), and Bushnell v. Cook, 221 M 296, 718 P2d 665, 43 St. Rep. 825 (1986).

One moving for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence must show by affidavit that the evidence is material to him, that it could not, with reasonable diligence, have been discovered and produced at the trial, and that it was not known to affiant at the time the trial was had. Sutton v. Masterson, 86 M 530, 284 P 264 (1930).

Cumulative Evidence — Foreclosure of Lien: In actions to foreclose materialmen's liens in which defendant contended that there was no privity of contract between himself and the plaintiff materialmen but judgment went for lienors, the trial court committed error in granting defendant a new trial on ground of newly discovered evidence because the affidavits filed in support of the motion presented only cumulative evidence. Apostel Constr. & Lumber Co. v. Radulovich, 115 M 43, 139 P2d 234 (1943).

Child Custody: Where plaintiff wife was granted a decree of divorce as well as custody of a 6-year-old child and the defendant asked for a new trial on the ground that he was in possession of evidence that plaintiff was not a proper person to have such custody but admitted that he had knowledge of such fact at the time of trial but did not offer proof thereof out of deference to his wife and child, the new trial was properly denied, the statute not providing for a new trial on such ground. The decree is always subject to modification upon a proper showing of unfitness because the child is a ward of the court. Wolz v. Wolz, 110 M 458, 102 P2d 22 (1940).

Abuse of Discretion: In an action for debt alleged by defendant to have resulted from gambling between the parties and in which defendant had judgment, the trial court abused its discretion in denying a new trial, asked for on the ground of newly discovered evidence tending to show that plaintiff was at his place of business at the time the game was said to have been played and could not have been at the place of its occurrence, it being evident that one or the other testified to a falsehood, each swearing to matters diametrically opposed to those testified to by the other, the new evidence thus being of the utmost importance to court and jury in determining the credibility of these witnesses and meting out justice. Gould v. Lynn, 88 M 501, 293 P 968 (1930).

Showing Required — Change in Ruling Probable: To warrant the granting of a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, it must appear to the court that there is reasonable probability that upon a retrial the evidence proposed will change the result. Gould v. Lynn, 88 M 501, 293 P 968 (1930).

Cumulative Evidence — No Diligence to Produce Witness: Alleged newly discovered evidence which is cumulative only does not warrant the granting of a new trial; nor may the court be put in error for refusing a retrial on that ground where movant made no attempt to show due diligence on his part to produce the newly discovered witness on the trial of his case. St. v. Gies, 77 M 62, 249 P 573 (1926).

Diligence — Insufficient Excuse: A new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence was properly denied where the only excuse offered by movant was that while he knew of the alleged new evidence prior to and at the time of the trial, he thought that the fact sought to be brought out on retrial had been sufficiently covered by the testimony given and considered it unnecessary to introduce it. Komposh v. Powers, 75 M 493, 244 P 298 (1926), affirmed 275 US 504 (1927).

Cumulative Evidence — Rescission of Contract: Where defendant himself had testified to a conversation had between himself and plaintiff with respect to the matter in controversy in an action for rescission of contract, evidence on the same subject which would be given by a witness who was absent at the trial, if a new trial were granted, was cumulative and therefore did not warrant the granting of the motion. Ebaugh v. Burns, 65 M 15, 210 P 892 (1922).

Diligence — Prior Knowledge — No Continuance Sought: Where respondent knew of the testimony an absent witness would give and should have known that his whereabouts was unknown but did not ask for a continuance, he was in no position to urge his evidence as newly discovered. Ebaugh v. Burns, 65 M 15, 210 P 892 (1922).

Cumulative Evidence No Basis for Motion: Newly discovered evidence that is a mere repetition of testimony of another witness is cumulative and furnishes no basis for a motion for new trial. Jenkins v. Kitsen, 62 M 515, 205 P 243 (1922).

Showing Required — Immaterial Evidence: For evidence to be produced by a new witness which, if offered, would be irrelevant and immaterial, a new trial may not be granted. Jenkins v. Kitsen, 62 M 515, 205 P 243 (1922).

Offer of Compromise as Newly Discovered Evidence — Admissibility: An offer of compromise not being admissible in evidence against the party making it, it cannot be regarded as material within the requirement of the statute authorizing the granting of a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Huffine v. Lincoln, 53 M 474, 164 P 888 (1917).

Diligence — Particular Facts to Be Shown: Every presumption will be indulged that the movant for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence could have secured the testimony for the former trial, and he must negative any negligence on his part. Affidavits filed in support of a motion for a new trial on this ground should state with particularity what was done toward obtaining the new evidence and how and when it was discovered, so as to give the adverse party an opportunity to traverse the statements made in the affidavits. In re Colbert's Estate, 31 M 461, 80 P 248 (1904). See also Bushnell v. Cook, 221 M 296, 718 P2d 665, 43 St. Rep. 825 (1986).

Diligence Not Shown: Affidavit in support of a motion for a new trial, on the ground of newly discovered evidence, was examined and held insufficient to show diligence required by this section. Nicholson v. Metcalf, 31 M 276, 78 P 483 (1904).

SUPPRESSION OF EVIDENCE

Admission of Public Law Board Report — Reversible Error: The railroad fired an employee for failing to report a workplace injury. The Public Law Board (PLB) upheld his termination. The employee filed a claim against the railroad under the Federal Employers' Liability Act for not providing a safe work environment and filed a motion in limine to exclude any reference to his termination in front of the jury. The District Court denied the motion; during the trial, the employee's termination was mentioned over a dozen times, and the PLB report was admitted into evidence. After the jury found in favor of the railroad, the employee appealed, alleging the report was inadmissible hearsay, and the Supreme Court agreed. The court reversed and remanded the case to the District Court, stating that under Rule 803(8), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), the PLB report was inadmissible because it included results of the railroad's special investigation and lacked he trustworthiness of proceedings conducted by a neutral arbiter. Boude v. Union Pac. RR Co., 2012 MT 98, 365 Mont. 32, 277 P.3d 1221.

Failure to Provide Trial Record Precluding Review of Trial Court Evidentiary Rulings: In an employment discrimination case, Rolison moved for a new trial in District Court on grounds that he was denied a fair trial when the employer did not disclose certain exhibits before trial and the trial court made an evidentiary ruling refusing any evidence of discrimination following Rolison's complaint to the Commission for Human Rights. The District Court denied the motion for a new trial, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Rolison did not mention the District Court's reasoning for denying the motion and did not provide a trial transcript or record for review on appeal. Absent an adequate record, the Supreme Court could not discern the substance of the anticipated testimony or whether any prejudice resulted from its exclusion. Absent a showing of a manifest abuse of discretion, denial of the new trial motion was affirmed. Rolison v. Bozeman Deaconess Health Serv., Inc., 2005 MT 95, 326 M 491, 111 P3d 202 (2005).

No Violation of Pretrial Order Precluding Evidence of Negligence by Plaintiff's Employer — New Trial Properly Denied: Plaintiff was employed by a vocational day-care program that took developmentally disabled persons on day outings. Plaintiff was assaulted by a developmentally disabled person from a group home managed by defendant corporation and sued the corporation for negligence for failing to control the assailant. Before trial, the District Court granted plaintiffs' motion to exclude any evidence of negligence by plaintiff's employer and ruled that defendant had a special relationship of custody and control over the disabled person and thus had a legal duty of care to those placed within the foreseeable zone of risk created by any breach of that duty. Nevertheless, the jury found for defendant, and plaintiffs' motion for a new trial was denied. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that when defense counsel repeatedly referred to the individual planning process for the assailant, in which plaintiff's employer was a partner, blame for the injury was thereby shifted to plaintiff's employer in violation of the pretrial order and prevented plaintiffs from receiving a fair trial. The Supreme Court disagreed, pointing out that plaintiffs opened the door by presenting evidence regarding the individual planning process in questioning plaintiffs' first witness and that both parties subsequently presented evidence about the process. Further, evidence regarding the individual planning process was relevant to a limit on defendant's ability to monitor the assailant and did not equate to evidence of negligence by plaintiff's employer, nor did defense counsel ever attempt to establish that any breach of legal duty by the employer led to plaintiff's injury. Thus, the District Court did not manifestly abuse its discretion in denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, and the verdict was affirmed. Papich v. Quality Life Concepts, Inc., 2004 MT 116, 321 M 156, 91 P3d 553 (2004), distinguishing Cech v. St., 183 M 75, 598 P2d 584 (1979), Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1998 MT 47, 288 M 1, 955 P2d 160 (1998), St. v. Ingraham, 1998 MT 156, 290 M 18, 966 P2d 103 (1998), Unmack v. Deaconess Medical Center, 1998 MT 262, 291 M 280, 967 P2d 783 (1998), and Lopez v. Josephson, 2001 MT 133, 305 M 446, 30 P3d 326 (2001).

Irrelevant and Prejudicial Evidence of Consumption of Alcohol by Plaintiff: Violette pulled out of a store's parking lot in front of Havens, and the two collided. Havens sued the state, claiming negligent failure to place a stoplight at the parking lot entrance. It was not error to deny Havens' motion to exclude evidence of his alcohol consumption before the accident when the state opposed the motion by stating that it would show that the consumption was a cause of the accident. However, this forced Havens to introduce evidence of, and to address, his alcohol consumption. In addition, the state offered no evidence that Havens' alcohol consumption helped cause the accident and the state's medical expert and a law enforcement officer both testified that Havens was not negligent. Evidence of the alcohol consumption prejudiced the whole trial. It was reversible error to deny a motion for a new trial. Havens v. St., 285 M 195, 945 P2d 941, 54 St. Rep. 1108 (1997), followed in St. v. Ingraham, 1998 MT 156, 290 M 18, 966 P2d 103, 55 St. Rep. 611 (1998), and distinguished in St. v. English, 2006 MT 177, 333 M 23, 140 P3d 454 (2006).

Withholding of Major Evidence Until Trial as Grounds for New Trial: Defense counsel denied the existence of a critical piece of evidence during discovery, then produced it during trial after the close of plaintiff's case. The defense thus prevented plaintiff from receiving a fair trial and created unfair surprise, warranting a grant of a new trial on grounds of irregularity of proceedings. Tigart v. Thompson, 237 M 468, 774 P2d 401, 46 St. Rep. 974 (1989).

Threatening Witness: When a party to a lawsuit threatens a witness, there has been an irregularity in the proceedings of the court that prevents a fair trial. Herren v. Hawks, 139 M 440, 365 P2d 641 (1961).

Threats to Witness — Fear of Disclosure: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial because of threats of defendant to plaintiff's witness just prior to the witness's testimony where the affidavit of the plaintiff alleged that misconduct of defendant could not be exposed at the trial because of a reasonably based fear for the safety of the witness. Herren v. Hawks, 139 M 440, 365 P2d 641 (1961).

Hiding of Witness: The action of a party in secreting and forcibly keeping in hiding a witness of his adversary until the trial was concluded, and thus suppressing material testimony, constituted misconduct or irregularity for which a new trial should be granted. Buntin v. Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry., 54 M 495, 172 P 330 (1918).

EXCESSIVE DAMAGES — PASSION AND PREJUDICE

New Trial Properly Denied: The District Court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a new trial based on insufficient evidence or excessive damages when the plaintiff presented sufficient evidence to establish the existence of a partnership and the defendant did not assert and could not establish that the jury awarded excessive damages under the influence of passion or prejudice. Barrett v. Larsen, 256 M 330, 846 P2d 1012, 50 St. Rep. 96 (1993).

Conscionable Damages — Basis for Overturning Award: Plaintiffs owned a family home and a restaurant located on the same lot in Livingston. Strong odors of gasoline were detected in the basement of the restaurant. Fire officials investigated and ordered the closure of the restaurant. Testing showed concentrations of gasoline fumes constituting a health hazard. The home was also contaminated, but plaintiffs' financial situation was such that they were unable to move. The gasoline contamination was caused by leakage of defendant's storage tanks. Plaintiffs brought suit based on nuisance, negligence, and trespass theories. The jury awarded plaintiffs damages for diminution of the value of the property, lost income, pain, and mental, physical, and emotional distress. Defendant contended the damages were excessive and awarded under the influence of passion and prejudice. The court cited the rule found in Ashley v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 100 M 312, 47 P2d 53 (1935), that a jury award of damages will not be overturned unless it shocks the conscience of the court. The court found no evidence of unconscionability. French v. Ralph E. Moore, Inc., 203 M 327, 661 P2d 844, 40 St. Rep. 481 (1983).

No Basis for Verdict: Where the record on appeal in a false imprisonment case showed little or nothing upon which to base a verdict of $6,000 in favor of plaintiff other than attacks made by counsel upon defendant Sheriff and other law officers in pleadings and argument to the jury, the verdict was given under the influence of passion and prejudice of the jury, entitling defendant to a new trial under this section. Cline v. Tait, 113 M 475, 129 P2d 89 (1942).

Slander Action — Slight Damages: In a slander case, where plaintiff's evidence as to actual damages sustained consisted of no more than the statement that she was made sick by the alleged slander and that she was ashamed to meet her friends but the only person present at the time was her mother, an award of $10,000 was so excessive as to show passion or prejudice, misconception, or mistake on the part of the jury and to warrant setting it aside and ordering a new trial. Keller v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 111 M 28, 108 P2d 605 (1940).

Verdict for More Than Requested: Where plaintiff sought to recover a balance of $570.80 due upon a building contract, defendant interposing a counterclaim for $429.21, and the jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant in the exact amount asked for by plaintiff and $141.60 more than defendant claimed was due him, the verdict could be accounted for only on the theory of passion and prejudice on the part of the jury, entitling plaintiff to a new trial as a matter of right. Blessing v. Angell, 66 M 482, 214 P 71 (1923), distinguished in Mosher v. Sanford-Evans Co., 68 M 64, 216 P 811 (1923), Hinton v. Peterson, 118 M 574, 169 P2d 333 (1946), and Miller v. Emerson, 120 M 380, 186 P2d 220 (1947).

Conflict in Evidence: Where in an action in claim and delivery the complaint had fixed the value of the property in question at $2,195 and the evidence of plaintiff established it at $1,983 but the jury fixed it at $2,686.20, an order granting a new trial asked for on the ground, among others, of excessive damages appearing to have been given under the influence of passion and prejudice will not be disturbed on appeal. Wilber v. Wilber, 63 M 587, 207 P 1002 (1922).

Excessiveness Alone Insufficient: A new trial will not be granted on the ground that damages awarded appear to be excessive unless it further appears that they were given under the influence of passion or prejudice. Kelley v. John R. Daily Co., 56 M 63, 181 P 326 (1919).

Grounds for New Trial: In an action for personal injuries, the court has power to grant a new trial where excessive damages have been awarded if they appear to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice. Chenoweth v. Great N. Ry., 50 M 481, 148 P 330 (1915). See also Conway v. Monidah Trust, 51 M 113, 149 P 711 (1915), and Werre v. David, 275 M 376, 913 P2d 625, 53 St. Rep. 187 (1996).

Passion or Prejudice Presumed: Since a new trial may be ordered when it appears that the jury has acted under the influence of passion and prejudice, it follows that when the award is so large that it cannot be accounted for on any other theory and is wholly out of proportion to the wrong done and the cause of it, the conclusion is irresistible that it was measured by the passion and prejudice of the jury, rather than by an estimate made in the exercise of their discretion, and it becomes the duty of the court to set it aside. De Celles v. Casey, 48 M 568, 139 P 586 (1914).

Miscalculation: Where an amount awarded by the jury for personal injuries, claimed by defendant to have been so excessive as to amount to an abuse of discretion lodged in it, may have been the result of a miscalculation or based upon a wrong standard, the award cannot be said to have been the result of passion or prejudice so as to entitle the defendant to a new trial under subsection (5) of this section. Lewis v. N. Pac. Ry., 36 M 207, 92 P 469 (1907).

EXCESSIVE DAMAGES — PERSONAL INJURIES

Case by Case Determination: There is no measuring stick by which to determine the amount of damages to be awarded in personal injury actions, other than the intelligence of a fair and impartial jury governed by a sense of justice, and each case depends on its own peculiar facts. Thompson v. Yellowstone Livestock Comm'n, 133 M 403, 324 P2d 412 (1958).

Eye Injury by Power Drill: In an action by an underground miner, 58 years of age, for damages for a personal injury caused, while he was operating a power drill, by a small particle of steel striking and imbedding itself in his right eye, practically destroying the sight thereof, a verdict for $26,000 as prayed for in the complaint was so excessive as to indicate passion and prejudice on part of the jury and to warrant reversal of the judgment with direction to grant defendant a new trial. Vesel v. Jardine Min. Co., 116 M 56, 147 P2d 906 (1944).

Loss of Earnings — Pain and Suffering: Verdict for $9,500 in favor of plaintiff in a personal injury action arising out of an automobile collision, attacked as excessive and based on alleged passion and prejudice of the jury, was supported by evidence in loss of usual occupation, loss of earnings prior to trial, pain and suffering were great, general health required continued treatment, doctor bills, and damage to automobile. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying motion for new trial. Pfau v. Stokke, 110 M 471, 103 P2d 673 (1940).

Sprained Ankle: Verdict for $3,500 for sprained ankle suffered by widow, mother of three children, who testified she was rendered incapable of doing her housework or engaging in custom sewing by which she had supported herself and family, was not so excessive as to require reversal on ground of passion or prejudice. McCartan v. Park Butte Theater Co., 103 M 342, 62 P2d 338 (1936).

Eye Injury: Verdict for $5,000 for injuries sustained by a boy 16 years of age in an automobile collision resulting in a permanent injury to an eye, scarring the iris and thus preventing normal contraction of the pupil, which in the course of years may weaken the other, a cut on the cheek requiring eight stitches which injured the lacrimal duct, leaving a stricture causing tears to flow in excessive light or on excessive use of the eye, and laceration of the lower lid, causing it to gap open, was properly reduced by the trial court to $3,800, with $200 for doctor and hospital expenses, and as so reduced was affirmed on appeal, the Supreme Court assuming that the trial court, with superior knowledge of the injuries sustained, made the proper reduction to meet the ends of justice. Simpson v. Miller, 97 M 328, 34 P2d 528 (1934).

Verdict That Shocks the Conscience: In personal injury actions, where the amount of compensation cannot be arrived at by mere calculation, determination as to the amount of the verdict rests in the sound discretion of the jury and its verdict, attacked as excessive, is conclusive unless it is such as to shock the conscience and understanding, in which event the trial court, as well as the Supreme Court, may order a new trial unless the plaintiff shall consent to a scaling of the verdict to an amount considered just and reasonable. Simpson v. Miller, 97 M 328, 34 P2d 528 (1934).

EXCESSIVE DAMAGES — REMITTITUR

Options Unwarranted: While, under this section, the trial court may remit a portion of a verdict on condition that unless the remission be accepted by the successful party a new trial would be granted, such practice is unwarranted where the verdict was influenced by passion and prejudice; the same rule being applicable, under like circumstances, where the successful party makes voluntary remission of all damages awarded him. Blessing v. Angell, 66 M 482, 214 P 71 (1923), distinguished in Mosher v. Sanford-Evans Co., 68 M 64, 216 P 811 (1923), Hinton v. Peterson, 118 M 574, 169 P2d 333 (1946), and Miller v. Emerson, 120 M 380, 186 P2d 220 (1947).

Right of Remittitur: Where, in a personal injury case, excessive damages have been awarded, the defeated party has the right to insist that the amount of the verdict be reduced by the court. Chenoweth v. Great N. Ry., 50 M 481, 148 P 330 (1915). See also Conway v. Monidah Trust, 51 M 113, 149 P 711 (1915).

Options for Plaintiff: Where, in an action for conversion, the trial court regards the verdict as in excess of the value of the property, it is not error to give the plaintiff the option of remitting the excess, and, if he does so, to order the verdict to stand for the residue, instead of granting a new trial absolutely, under subsection (6) of this section. Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. O'Marr, 25 M 242, 64 P 506 (1901).

EXCESSIVE DAMAGES — APPELLATE REVIEW

Specification of Error Required: Where defendant unsuccessfully moved for a new trial on ground of excessive damages, the question could properly be presented on appeal only on a specification based on error in denying the new trial and not on specification reiterating the claim of excessive damages. Sullivan v. Butte, 117 M 215, 157 P2d 479 (1945).

Passion or Prejudice Required: In personal injury actions, each case must of necessity, so far as damages recoverable are concerned, depend upon its own peculiar facts; there is no measuring stick by which to determine the amount to be awarded other than the intelligence of a fair and impartial jury governed by a sense of justice, and a wide latitude is allowed for the exercise of its judgment. It is only when excessive damages appear to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice that a new trial may be awarded, and unless it appears that the amount is so grossly out of all proportion to the injury received as to shock the conscience, the Supreme Court on appeal will not substitute its judgment for that of the jury. McCartan v. Park Butte Theater Co., 103 M 342, 62 P2d 338 (1936); Sullivan v. Butte, 87 M 98, 285 P 184 (1930).

Motion as Prerequisite for Appellate Review: Where defendant in a personal injury action fails to incorporate in his motion for new trial the ground of excessive damages having been given under the influence of passion or prejudice and thus deprives the Trial Court of an opportunity to pass upon the question, the Supreme Court on appeal will not entertain an assignment of error based upon that ground. Lesage v. Largey Lumber Co., 99 M 372, 43 P2d 896 (1935). See also Flanigan v. Prudential Fed. S&L Ass'n, 221 M 419, 720 P2d 257, 43 St. Rep. 941 (1986), citing Mitchell v. Thomas, 91 M 370, 8 P2d 639 (1932).

INADEQUATE DAMAGES

Plaintiff's Acceptance of Damages Award — Waiver of Right to Appeal Additional Damages: The plaintiff sued the defendant after the two were involved in a car crash. After a trial on damages the plaintiff was awarded $268,435, which the defendant paid in full. The plaintiff accepted the funds but signed an acknowledgment of payment that reserved claims for a new trial. The plaintiff subsequently moved for a new trial on the issue of emotional damages and future medical expenses, which the District Court denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff's acceptance of the judgment damages award waived her right to appeal the award of additional damages. Tempel v. Benson, 2015 MT 84, 378 Mont. 401, 346 P.3d 342.

Substantial Evidence That Damage Award Included Some Amount for Pain and Suffering — Verdict Affirmed: Plaintiff contended that a new trial was warranted because a jury award of only $7,358.56 in damages for plaintiff's injuries sustained in a car accident was not supported by the evidence, given uncontroverted evidence that plaintiff also experienced pain and suffering. The amount awarded was the exact amount claimed by plaintiff for past medical expenses. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court declined to second-guess the jury or speculate on whether damages for pain and suffering were left out of the award. Substantial credible evidence supported the verdict, which could have included some amount for pain and suffering, and the award was affirmed. Neal v. Nelson, 2008 MT 426, 347 M 431, 198 P3d 819 (2008).

Negligence for Injury — New Trial Warranted When Evidence of Pain and Mental Distress Uncontroverted: Hoffman was rear-ended by a logging truck while attempting a turn off of a two-lane highway. The jury resolved conflicting evidence and concluded that the truck driver was 50% negligent in causing the accident, but limited Hoffman's damage award to past medical expenses even though Hoffman presented uncontroverted evidence of other damages, including pain and suffering, mental distress, and depression. The Supreme Court reversed. Once the jury concluded that the driver caused Hoffman's injuries, the jury was not free to disregard Hoffman's uncontroverted evidence, and the case was remanded for a new trial as to Hoffman's damages for pain and mental distress. Hoffman v. Austin, 2006 MT 289, 334 M 357, 147 P3d 177 (2006), following Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48 (1997), and Renville v. Taylor, 2000 MT 217, 301 M 99, 7 P3d 400 (2000), and distinguishing Ele v. Ehnes, 2003 MT 131, 316 M 69, 68 P3d 835 (2003).

Conflicting Evidence of Plaintiff's Damages From Battery — Motion for New Trial Properly Denied Absent Evidence of Damages: The trial court instructed the jury that Beye committed battery on Moore, but the jury concluded that Moore was not injured and was not entitled to damages. Moore moved to vacate the verdict and for a new trial, arguing that the evidence indicated that some injury occurred, so a zero damage award was inadequate. However, the motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although evidence regarding injuries was conflicting, Beye presented sufficient credible evidence to uphold the verdict, and the evidence was not trifling or frivolous when viewed in the light most favorable to Beye, so the Supreme Court declined to disturb the verdict. Moore v. Beye, 2005 MT 266, 329 M 109, 122 P3d 1212 (2005), followed in Hoffman v. Austin, 2006 MT 289, 334 M 357, 147 P3d 177 (2006).

Evidence Supporting Jury's Verdict of Zero Damages for Lost Earning Capacity Resulting From Automobile Accident: Magart was injured in a collision with Schank, who admitted negligently causing the accident. The case proceeded to jury trial on the issue of damages, and the jury awarded damages for everything except Magart's claim for lost earning capacity. Magart appealed, arguing that that portion of the verdict was not supported by substantial evidence and that the jury was required to find a loss of earning capacity because uncontroverted expert testimony at trial established that Magart suffered continuing shoulder problems because of his job duties that rendered him unable to continue his employment as a result of the injury. As a general rule, a jury may not disregard uncontradicted, credible nonopinion evidence, but this rule applies only to nonopinion lay witness testimony, and a jury may disregard expert testimony if it finds the testimony unpersuasive. In this case, the jury could reasonably have determined that future deterioration of Magart's shoulder, together with a concomitant inability to perform his job, was not reasonably certain to occur. Further, lay testimony from Magart's former employers implied that the shoulder injury did not impair the ability to perform the job and that Magart left employment not because of the injury but rather to accept different employment. This evidence, coupled with Schank's 23-minute videotape of Magart performing his current job without apparent difficulties, was sufficient to support the jury's verdict of zero damages for loss of earning capacity with regard to past and present employment. Magart v. Schank, 2000 MT 279, 302 M 151, 13 P3d 390, 57 St. Rep. 1167 (2000), distinguishing Tappan v. Higgins, 240 M 158, 783 P2d 396 (1989).

Insufficient Evidence to Support Jury Verdict Limiting Damages to Past Medical Expenses but Not Pain and Suffering: Renville was injured as a passenger in an automobile accident in 1995, and liability was not contested. Evidence was uncontroverted that Renville had subsequently experienced pain and suffering as a result of the accident. The jury was instructed to award damages for past and future medical expenses, loss of earnings and earning capacity, pain and suffering, and loss of the ability to pursue an occupation and an established course of life. However, the jury limited its verdict to only past medical expenses, so Renville sought a new trial on grounds of insufficient evidence to support the award and irregularities in the proceedings. On review, the Supreme Court noted that a jury may not disregard uncontradicted, credible, nonopinion evidence. The court applied Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48 (1997), in holding that if a jury fails to award damages when the only evidence of record supports an award, that verdict is not supported by substantial evidence and may be set aside. Renville was entitled to some award for damages for proved pain and suffering, and the Supreme Court remanded for new trial limited to the issue of damages. Renville v. Taylor, 2000 MT 217, 301 M 99, 7 P3d 400, 57 St. Rep. 864 (2000). On remand, the District Court concluded that factual issues still existed as to the amount of Renville's past medical expanses and that the issues must be determined by a jury on retrial. The court found that the effect of the decision in Renville I, id., was to remand the entire issue of damages for a new trial. The Supreme Court disagreed. The decision in Renville I clearly stated that the award was limited to Renville's past medical expenses, which had been proved and awarded. Therefore, the law of the case precluded the District Court from revisiting the issue of Renville's past medical expenses on remand. It was an abuse of discretion for the District Court to deny Renville's motion for summary judgment and request for declaratory judgment on the issue of past medical expenses. Renville v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2003 MT 103, 315 M 295, 69 P3d 217 (2003). See also St. v. Gilder, 2001 MT 121, 305 M 362, 28 P3d 488 (2001), Murray v. Whitcraft, 2012 MT 298, 367 Mont. 364, 291 P.3d 587, and Carestia v. Robey, 2013 MT 335, 372 Mont. 438, 313 P.3d 169.

Damages Substantially Lower Than Defendant's Experts' Figures Not Supported by Evidence: In a personal injury case, the jury returned a verdict that provided for damages for past wage loss, past medical expenses, pain and suffering, and future wage loss in amounts substantially lower than even the figures given by the defendant's experts. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's grant of a new trial on the basis that the verdict was not supported by the evidence. Tappan v. Higgins, 240 M 158, 783 P2d 396, 46 St. Rep. 2020 (1989), followed in Newville v. St., 267 M 237, 883 P2d 793, 51 St. Rep. 758 (1994), and distinguished in Delaware v. K-Decorators, Inc., 1999 MT 13, 293 M 97, 973 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 52 (1999), in which conflicting evidence as to the amount of unpaid wages, when substantial enough to justify the jury verdict, did not justify a new trial.

Substantial Evidence Supporting Personal Injury Award: Plaintiff, who turned down a $20,000 settlement offer and recovered only $7,800 from the jury, moved for a new trial on the basis that the verdict was contrary to the evidence presented at trial. The lower court's finding that substantial evidence existed to support the award (thereby exhausting its discretion to grant a new trial) was affirmed on appeal. Feller v. Fox, 237 M 150, 772 P2d 842, 46 St. Rep. 694 (1989).

Motion for New Trial Erroneously Granted: A statement by defense counsel to jury in closing argument suggesting that "a fair verdict would be $30,000" was not a statement against interest setting lower limits of a verdict at $30,000. The District Court erred in granting a new trial on grounds that the $25,000 jury award to the plaintiff constituted inadequate damages when there was substantial credible evidence to support the verdict of the jury. Brown v. Markve, 216 M 145, 700 P2d 602, 42 St. Rep. 708 (1985). See also White v. Ford, Bacon & Davis Tex., Inc., 256 M 9, 843 P2d 787, 49 St. Rep. 1117 (1992).

Substantial Evidence Supporting Award — Error to Grant New Trial: District Court committed error when it granted a new trial based on inadequacy of damages when jury awarded plaintiff $2,000 of which no more than $700 was for pain and suffering caused by injuries received in automobile accident. In reversing the grant of new trial and ordering entry of judgment on the jury's verdict, the Supreme Court stated that the jury is not compelled to believe plaintiff's testimony and that to allow the District Court to simply substitute its judgment for that of the jury when there is substantial evidence to support the jury award would "create a bench supremacy and sap the vitality of jury verdicts". Maykuth v. Eaton, 212 M 370, 687 P2d 726, 41 St. Rep. 1800 (1984), distinguished in Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48, 54 St. Rep. 957 (1997).

No Evidence as to Earnings: Granting of new trial on ground that award of $4,000 was inadequate, damages for death of high school sophomore whose funeral expenses were $1,605 was an abuse of discretion under the circumstances, including fact that plaintiff father received no earnings from son and gave no indication of need. Davis v. Smith, 152 M 170, 448 P2d 133 (1968).

Conflict in Evidence: Court abused its discretion in granting new trial upon grounds of insufficiency of evidence to justify verdict in that "verdict awarded by the jury to the plaintiff is wholly inadequate" where there was conflict in evidence and where it was question for jury whether injuries suffered by passenger were caused by grossly negligent operation of car or whether passenger assumed risk of going into car driven by man who had several drinks. Heen v. Tiddy, 151 M 265, 442 P2d 434 (1968).

Condemnation Proceedings: In condemnation proceeding, where State appraised land at $18,000, condemnee appraised it at $95,000 and jury awarded condemnee $21,000, granting of new trial because award was inadequate was not such an abuse of trial judge's discretion as to warrant reversal in spite of fact that there was no rebuttal of State's only expert witness. St. Highway Comm'n v. Greenfield, 145 M 164, 399 P2d 989 (1965).

Insufficiency of Evidence: One who has recovered a verdict in his favor in a sum less than he considers himself entitled to under the evidence may, under subsection (6) of this section, ask for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict. Flaherty v. Butte Elec. Ry., 42 M 89, 111 P 348 (1911).

INSUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE

Jury Verdict Ignored Uncontroverted Evidence — New Trial Granted — Motor Vehicle Accident: The plaintiff sued the defendant following a motor vehicle accident in which the defendant admitted liability but denied the extent of the damages. During the trial, the defendant did not offer credible evidence to rebut that the plaintiff's injuries were caused by the accident. However, in answering whether the defendant's negligence caused the plaintiff's injuries, the jury answered "no" and did not answer additional questions. The plaintiff appealed the verdict, arguing that the verdict was not supported by the evidence and was based on irregularities and misconduct of the jury. The District Court granted the motion for a new trial. On appeal, the Supreme Court upheld the District Court because the uncontroverted evidence supported the plaintiff's position. Reis v. Luckett, 2015 MT 337, 381 Mont. 490, 362 P.3d 632.

De Novo Standard of Review of Ruling on Motion for New Trial Based on Insufficiency of Evidence, Not Abuse of Discretion: Reconciling incompatible standards previously applied to review of a motion for a new trial based on the insufficiency of evidence, the Supreme Court held that there either is or is not sufficient evidence to support the verdict and that this determination by a District Court is not a matter of discretion. Thus, the Supreme Court's standard of review will henceforth be de novo, and any previous cases that stated the standard of review as abuse of discretion were overruled to that extent. The Supreme Court, like the District Court, will determine whether there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict. Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007), overruling Brothers v. Virginia City, 171 M 352, 558 P2d 464 (1976), Walter v. Evans Prod. Co., 207 M 26, 672 P2d 613 (1983), Tope v. Longhorn, 2002 MT 135, 310 M 172, 49 P3d 48 (2002), Chambers v. Helena, 2002 MT 142, 310 M 241, 49 P3d 587 (2002), Satterfield v. Medlin, 2002 MT 260, 312 M 234, 59 P3d 33 (2002), Moore v. Beye, 2005 MT 266, 329 M 109, 122 P3d 1212 (2005), Hoffman v. Austin, 2006 MT 289, 334 M 357, 147 P3d 177 (2006), Williams Feed, Inc. v. Dept. of Transportation, 2007 MT 79, 336 M 493, 155 P3d 1228 (2007), and Seeley v. Kreitzberg Rentals, LLC, 2007 MT 97, 337 M 91, 157 P3d 676 (2007).

Lack of Predictability in Jury's Verdict Not Grounds for Reversal — Alteration of Judgment and New Trial Denied: After falling on ice outside her office and breaking her ankle, Seeley sued the owner of the building for negligence for defective design and failing to remove ice and snow from the walkway. The jury found that the owner was negligent, but determined that the negligence did not cause Seeley's fall and injuries. Seeley moved to alter the judgment and for a new trial on damages, but the motion was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that the weight and credibility of the evidence lies with the jury and that although a verdict may be difficult to explain, the lack of predictability in the jury's judgment does not warrant reversal of the verdict. Here, the jury weighed conflicting evidence that defective design caused Seeley's fall against evidence that Seeley's haste and carelessness caused her fall and attributed Seeley's haste and carelessness as the cause. The Supreme Court declined to disturb the verdict absent evidence that the findings were inherently impossible to believe. Denial of Seeley's motion to alter the judgment and for a new trial was affirmed. Seeley v. Kreitzberg Rentals, LLC, 2007 MT 97, 337 M 91, 157 P3d 676 (2007).

Negligence Per Se — New Trial Granted When Evidence Insufficient to Justify Jury Verdict: Chambers was injured after falling into a pit at the Helena garbage transfer station. The District Court found the city to be negligent per se and submitted the issues of causation and damages to the jury. The jury found that the city's negligence was not the cause of the accident. The District Court held that the verdict was based on insufficient evidence because the city was negligent per se and that Chambers fell over an edge that was required to have a fall protection device, so Chambers was granted a new trial on causation. The city appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Chambers met the burden of showing that the city's negligence was a substantial factor in the accident, and there was insufficient evidence for the jury to find otherwise, so a new trial on causation was proper. Chambers v. Helena, 2002 MT 142, 310 M 241, 49 P3d 587 (2002). See also Brockie v. Omo Constr., Inc., 255 M 495, 844 P2d 61 (1992).

Award of Punitive Damages Not Automatic on Finding of Fraud — New Trial Not Required — Standard of Review: In a case in which the jury found that the defendants had engaged in fraudulent conduct and did not award punitive damages, the trial court did not err in denying a new trial when the evidence that would have supported an award of punitive damages was contradicted and the jury's decision to not award punitive damages was supported by substantial evidence. All elements of a claim for punitive damages must be proved by clear and convincing evidence. An appellate court will review a jury's verdict to award or not to award punitive damages under the substantial evidence rule. It is in the province of a jury to find that there is sufficient evidence of proof of fraud, yet not the quantum of evidence necessary to support an award of punitive damages. Sandman v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 1998 MT 286, 291 M 456, 969 P2d 277, 55 St. Rep. 1165 (1998).

Evidence of Existence of Pain and Suffering Uncontroverted by Evidence of Causation and Evidence of Extent of Damages: Thompson's automobile was rear-ended by a Bozeman police car, and Thompson filed suit against the city. The city admitted negligence and causation, and the action went to trial on the issues of whether Thompson suffered damages and the amount of those damages. The jury returned a verdict of $2,800 in damages for medical expenses and lost wages but awarded no damages for pain and suffering, loss of ability to pursue an occupation, loss of future wages, loss of ability to pursue an established course of life, and future medical expenses. Thompson moved for a new trial, arguing that there was insufficient evidence for the jury to award no damages, and the District Court granted the motion. The Supreme Court noted that it had addressed the issue of zero damage awards in light of uncontroverted evidence in Gehnert v. Cullinan, 211 M 435, 685 P2d 352 (1984), and Brockie v. Omo Constr., 268 M 519, 887 P2d 167 (1994). In those cases, the Supreme Court explained that it had held that the jury did not have any choice but to award some damages when the evidence was uncontroverted that the plaintiff had suffered some damages. It is only when the evidence of the existence of damages is controverted, the Supreme Court said, should a court defer to the judgment of the jury in refusing to award any damages at all. The Supreme Court then reviewed the testimony offered by the city and held that the evidence presented addressed the issue of the extent of damages and not whether any damages at all were caused. The Supreme Court analyzed the case of Maykuth v. Eaton, 212 M 370, 687 P2d 726 (1984), relied on by the city, and noted that the case stood for the proposition that when a jury awards at least some damages based upon its assessment of conflicting evidence, a court may not substitute its judgment for the jury's judgment based upon the court's view of what evidence is most believable. In the case before it, the Supreme Court noted that the city did not controvert Thompson's evidence that at least some pain and suffering occurred and it was therefore correct for the District Court to grant a new trial when the jury awarded no damages other than medical expenses and lost wages. Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48, 54 St. Rep. 957 (1997), followed in Hoffman v. Austin, 2006 MT 289 334 M 357, 147 P3d 177 (2006).

Trial Court Error in Not Granting New Trial: In reviewing an appeal of a wrongful death action, the Supreme Court found that the jury's failure to grant survivorship damages was totally inconsistent and contrary to the mandates of the law. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had erred in not granting a new trial since there was insufficient evidence to justify the jury's verdict regarding survivorship damages. Brockie v. Omo Constr., Inc., 268 M 519, 887 P2d 167, 51 St. Rep. 1322 (1994), distinguished in Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700, 53 St. Rep. 17 (1996). Brockie and Barnes were followed in Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48, 54 St. Rep. 957 (1997).

Jury Finding of Lack of Negligence Not Overturned on Grounds of Passion or Prejudice: Joshua Lloyd suffered a seizure and died after being held by the Flathead County Sheriff for emergency detention. Buhr, Joshua's personal representative, sued the county, the Sheriff, and others, alleging negligence. The jury found that there was no negligence. Buhr argued that despite the jury's interpretation of the evidence, the verdict was the result of passion or prejudice. The Supreme Court noted that it must view the evidence in the light most favorable to the prevailing party. The Supreme Court held that its role was not to retry a case based upon one party's view of the evidence and that it was within the jury's province to adopt testimony presented by one party to the exclusion of testimony presented by another. Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381, 51 St. Rep. 1258 (1994).

Claim That Damage Award Not Supported by Evidence — New Trial Not Granted: Appellants claimed that a new trial was warranted because evidence offered at trial did not substantiate the amount of damages awarded by the jury. However, the damage estimates were based on assumptions about the future, and it was within the province of the properly instructed jury to determine the weight to be given to the estimates and arrive at the amount of damage award to be granted. Refusal to grant a new trial was not an abuse of discretion. Estate of Spicher v. Miller, 260 M 504, 861 P2d 183, 50 St. Rep. 1180 (1993).

New Trial Properly Denied: The District Court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a new trial based on insufficient evidence or excessive damages when the plaintiff presented sufficient evidence to establish the existence of a partnership and the defendant did not assert and could not establish that the jury awarded excessive damages under the influence of passion or prejudice. Barrett v. Larsen, 256 M 330, 846 P2d 1012, 50 St. Rep. 96 (1993).

General Standard of Review of Holdings on Admissibility of Evidence: Rulings on the admissibility of evidence are within the sound discretion of the District Court and will not be overturned on appeal absent an abuse of discretion by the trial court. St. v. Mayes, 251 M 358, 825 P2d 1196, 49 St. Rep. 75 (1992).

Substantial Evidence Concerning Credibility: Buskirk appealed the jury's verdict denying him any damages for an injury sustained while installing a garage door for the defendant. The Supreme Court held that there was sufficient evidence to support the jury's conclusion that Buskirk's testimony lacked credibility. Buskirk v. Nelson, 250 M 92, 818 P2d 375, 48 St. Rep. 864 (1991).

Finding of Negligence Not Necessary in Every Accident: Plaintiff was a passenger in a truck involved in a collision in which each driver claimed the other was negligent, but the jury attributed negligence to neither. Plaintiff cited Aemisegger v. Herman, 215 M 347, 697 P2d 925 (1985), in claiming he was entitled to a new trial because that kind of accident cannot happen absent negligence and because a violation of basic traffic rules constitutes negligence per se. The Supreme Court distinguished Aemisegger because in that case, there was clear evidence of fault. The Supreme Court noted that simply because there is an accident does not mean someone must be negligent. The trial court did not err in refusing plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the basis that defendants were negligent as a matter of law. Brookings v. Thompson, 248 M 249, 811 P2d 64, 48 St. Rep. 418 (1991).

Intentional Trespass Due to Flooding: Although conflicting testimony was submitted, there was substantial evidence to support the jury's finding that defendants were not liable for flood damage to plaintiffs' property. The Supreme Court ruled that when there is substantial evidence supporting the court or the jury verdict, such findings or verdict is conclusive on appeal. Guenther v. Finley, 236 M 422, 769 P2d 717, 46 St. Rep. 477 (1989).

Forged Check — Plaintiffs' Contribution to Damages — Bank Not Liable: When there was substantial credible evidence that plaintiffs' actions contributed to their damages, the jury verdict in favor of defendant bank would not be overturned. When the complaint alleged negligence and bad faith on the part of the bank but not breach of a fiduciary duty, the Supreme Court refused to consider whether it was error to submit the issue of comparative negligence to the jury. Ahmann v. Am. Fed. S&L Ass'n, 235 M 184, 766 P2d 853, 45 St. Rep. 2305 (1988).
